Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, on January 8, 1987, Judge Marilyn Patel in the course of trying the case of NARS versus Turnage, levied a fine of approximately $120,000 against the VA for its "reckless disregard" of its discovery obligations. In addition, documents produced and witness testimony in the case raised serious questions about alleged fundamental flaws in the VA's claims adjudication system.

The House and Senate Veterans' Affairs Committees held a joint hearing on March 17, 1987, to examine these issues, as well as the issue of alleged harassment and intimidation of certain VA employees in connection with their giving evidence in the NARS case. The testimony received at that hearing indicated that the VA had taken some steps to correct problems with its system for responding to discovery requests. However, serious questions remained unanswered. Therefore, in February 1987 Representative DON EDWARDS, the ranking Democratic member on the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and I asked GAO to investigate certain allegations arising out of the case of NARS versus Turnage—namely allegations; first, of denials of due process in the adjudication of veterans' claims for Veterans' Administration benefits; second, of the VA's failure to comply with its discovery obligations in the NARS case; and third, of harassment and intimidation of VA employees in connection with that case.

The GAO has completed its investigation into items two and three, the discovery and employee harassment allegations. On September 15, 1988, Representative EDWARDS and I received a letter responding to our request for the investigation into these allegations and a written summary of their findings thus far. The investigation into item one, the denial of due process allegations, is still ongoing. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of that letter and the GAO report be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, September 20, 1988.

Hon. THOMAS K. TURNAGE,
Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, Washington, DC.

DEAR TOM: In February 1987, we asked the General Accounting Office (GAO) to investigate certain allegations out of the case of NARS v. Turnage. These allegations are: (1) alleged denials of due process in the adjudication of veterans' claims for Veterans' Administration benefits; (2) the VA's alleged failure to comply with its discovery obligations in the NARS case; and (3) alleged harassment and intimidation of VA employees in connection with that case.

The GAO has completed its investigation into items (2) and (3) above, the discovery and employee harassment allegations. (The GAO's investigation into item (1), the denial of due process allegations, is still ongoing.) We wanted to share with you a copy (enclosed) of the GAO's report on these issues.

With warm regards,

Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

DON EDWARDS,
Ranking Democratic Member, House Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
Washington, DC, September 15, 1988.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, U.S. Senate.

Hon. DON EDWARDS,
Ranking Democractic Member, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, House of Representatives.

The enclosed report responds to your April 1987 request that we investigate certain allegations relating to the National As- sociation of Radiation Survivors (NARS) v. Turnage litigation. On September 2, 1987, we provided you with an oral briefing of our investigative findings. On March 2, 1988, you requested that we furnish you with a written summary of these findings.

We are making no distribution of this report at this time.

Should you have any questions regarding the report's contents, please contact me at (202) 272-5500.

DAVID C. WILLIAMS,
Director.

INTRODUCTION

In April 1987, Senator Alan Cranston, Chairman, Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and Congressman Don Edwards, Ranking Democratic Member, House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, requested that we investigate certain allegations relating to the National Association of Radiation Survivors (NARS) v. Turnage litigation. On September 2, 1987, we orally provided Senator Cranston and Congressman Edwards with the results of our investigation. On March 2, 1988, they requested that we furnish a written summary of these findings.

Specifically, we were requested to investigate allegations that (1) the purging and destruction of records within the Veterans Administration (VA) Compensation and Pension Service were related to requests for documents submitted by the plaintiffs in the NARS case and (2) VA employees involved in the NARS litigation were subjected to threats, harassment, and intimidation. We were also asked to determine (1) the adequacy of the VA Inspector General's investigation into the allegations and (2) the status and scope of the investigation conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI). Finally, we were asked to ascertain if any new procedures have been implemented within the VA concerning the handling of requests for documents.

Methodology

Our investigation included a review of the following documents: affidavits obtained by the VA Office of the General Counsel, Congressional hearing transcripts, deposition transcripts, motions filed in the litigation, VA personnel files, VA Inspector General's report (61Q-017), time and attendance reports, and VA internal documents.

In addition to reviewing these documents, we conducted over 20 interviews of employees and others involved with the NARS litigation.

We also met with representatives of the U.S. Department of Justice, Public Integrity Section, and the FBI who have been involved in concurrent investigations of many of the same allegations.

Background

Allegations arose that employees of the VA Compensation and Pension Service who were responsible for processing discovery requests in the NARS v. Turnage litigation may have intentionally purged, destroyed, or withheld records that had been requested by the plaintiffs in the litigation. Additionally, a few VA employees alleged that they had been harassed, threatened, and intimidated by certain VA supervisors as a result of their involvement with the litigation.

INVESTIGATIVE FINDINGS

Our general investigative findings include the following:

We were unable to establish that official VA records relating to the NARS litigation were intentionally purged, destroyed, or withheld in order to deprive the plaintiff of the records' contents. However, some VA records that were potentially responsive to the plaintiff's discovery requests for documents may have inadvertently been destroyed by VA staff.

We were unable to establish that VA employees were harassed, threatened, or intimidated by supervisory personnel as a result of their involvement with NARS litigation. However, some incidents occurred that could have been perceived as such by certain VA employees. During our interviews, a few VA employees expressed concern that they might be subjected to such actions in the future. We advised these employees of the procedures for reporting such incidents should they occur.

We determined that the VA Office of Inspector General's investigation into the alleged destruction of records was adequate considering the scope of the VA's request and the relatively short time frame the OIG had to complete it. The information developed by the Inspector General's investigation did not contradict information that we developed during our investigation.

VA officials advised us that they had not issued any written procedures or directives concerning the handling of document requests resulting from NARS litigation. However, the VA advised us that the following informal practices have been implemented to improve the handling of requests for documents:

All VA division directors must now attest to the Office of General Counsel, via memoranda, that they have researched their files and provided all requested documents.

All of the documents provided in response to requests are now photocopied to ensure that permanent records exist of material furnished to plaintiffs.

Complete copies of document requests are now distributed to all concerned staff members. In the past, only portions of a document request were distributed, which sometimes contributed to what appeared to be inadvertent omissions by personnel, who were unaware that material in their possession had been requested.

Communication with the various field stations and other departments has been improved to ensure that all possible material and information requested is compiled and provided to plaintiffs. Consequently, the VA Office of the General Counsel is receiving more requests for clarification of document request issues.

The automated litigation support system that was utilized during the latter phases of the NARS litigation may be used again if similar litigation involving an extremely large volume of records is encountered.

Officials of the VA Compensation and Pension Service and the VA Office of the General Counsel advised us that their personnel now have an increased awareness of the necessity of strict adherence to the requirements of a document request. We believe that if these procedures had been in place prior to the NARS litigation, they would have helped prevent some of the problems that occurred, such as the failure to distribute an entire copy of a request for documents to all concerned personnel, the poor communication between the VA Office of the General Counsel and the U.S. Attorney's Office, and the failure of the VA to account adequately for documents that were provided to the plaintiffs.

On March 9, 1988, the FBI advised us that its field work on its investigation was complete. Its investigative findings are now under review by the Department of Justice, Public Integrity Section.

The FBI's investigation primarily focused on allegations of harassment, intimidation, and threats concerning three VA employees. The investigation was concurrent with, but independent of, our investigation.

Both the FBI and the Public Integrity Section were briefed on our findings. While at the time they were not at liberty to discuss the details of their investigation, they did indicate that they were not in possession of any information that would contradict our findings.

DR. LENOX BAKER: WHEN CRIPPLED CHILDREN NEEDED A FRIEND, HE WAS THERE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, all of us—if we are lucky—are privileged to have some truly remarkable and inspiring friends, rare and unique people who stand out above the crowd in achievement, compassion, courage, and high principles. More often than not, they seek no personal acclaim and, in fact, are embarrassed when others call attention to their achievements.

I have a very special friend like that. His name is Lenox Dial Baker. He was born in Texas. He is 86 now, but the twinkle in his eyes is still there. He is tall and erect, as always. And his interest in, and his love for, his country have not diminished in the slightest.

Mr. President, I first met Lenox Baker more than a quarter of a century ago. It was his love of children, particularly crippled children, that led to the beginning of our friendship. From the very beginning I recognized that this was a very special man, a man who cared, a man determined to make this world better than he found it.

On January 27, the afternoon newspaper in Durham, NC, the Durham Sun, published a profile of Lenox Baker's life. Ann Green wrote the story. As I read it, I sensed that Ann Green realized that she was writing about a remarkable human being.

I felt the same way a quarter of a century ago when I made the rounds with Dr. Baker at a hospital for crippled children adjacent to Duke University Medical Center in Durham. The children then at the hospital were mostly cerebral palsied. And that tall, erect director of the hospital genuinely loved every one of them—and they loved him back twofold.

Mr. President, I have seen many a tear roll down Dr. Baker's cheeks as he lovingly examined the children, as he comforted them, as he gave them hope. He had performed surgery on most of them. He had straightened their twisted little arms and legs that had been deformed since birth. He and his associates at the hospital taught them how to walk. He gave them love, and they gave it back in double measure.

Mr. President, the story of Lenox Baker's life is so remarkable that it is difficult to believe that it is not a fictional account. Lenox Baker could have been a leader in any one of many other fields. Indeed, at various times early in his adult life he was a banker, a lawyer—and, because he was such a handsome man, he even modeled. Now retired he is still an impressive man in every way.

I believe Senators will enjoy reading Ann Green's story about Lenox Baker as it appeared in late January in the Durham paper. The headline across the top of the page read, "Dr. Lenox Baker Still Loves Sports, Medicine." And he still loves children.

There is so much more that I could say about this man, but I think I will stop now and urge Senators and others who have access to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to read the account of Lenox Baker's life. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Ann Green's article, to which I have alluded, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Durham Sun, Jan. 27, 1989]

DR. LENOX BAKER STILL LOVES SPORTS, MEDICINE

(By Ann Green)

When Dr. Lenox Baker enrolled in the first medical class at Duke University School of Medicine in 1930, he and his classmates were like "one big family."

"The faculty knew all the students," said Dr. Baker, who was the first medical student accepted at the Duke School of Medicine. "We had the run of the hospital. A large number of students lived in the hospital on unopened wards because there were not enough patients to fill the ward."

But Dr. Baker, who worked his way through medical school as an athletic trainer for Duke, lived in the tower of Carr gym.

"It was the center of athletics before Cameron Stadium was built," he said. "I called myself the wet nurse for 17 football players who lived there."

During this time, Durham had a reputation as a mill and cotton town.

"I came to Durham in 1929 and was privileged to know its founders," said Dr. Baker. "It had a population of 48,000."

At Duke's West Campus, buildings were being constructed.

"The campus was swarming with Italian stone masons," said Dr. Baker. "They were real artisans. I would walk through the campus and see them cutting out coats of arms and figurines."

After medical school, Dr. Baker did an internship at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore where he worked with the famed orthopedic surgeon Dr. George E. Bennett. He assisted Dr. Bennett with operations on several great baseball players including Frank Crosetti of the New York Yankees.

With this training, Dr. Baker returned to Duke where he became acclaimed for his work in orthopedic surgery and vocational rehabilitation. He established the Lenox Baker Cerebral Palsy and Crippled Children's Hospital in Durham in 1938 through the cooperation of and gift of land by Duke University. He served as its first medical director.

This many-faceted physician later became professor of orthopedics at Duke Medical School where he trained doctors.

"My biggest accomplishment was training and turning out doctors for the orthopedic program at Duke," said Dr. Baker. "They became like my sons. They considered me a tough daddy. But I always told them: 'Melt iron ore in the furnace, pour it out and you have pig iron. But beat it a lot and you have steel.'"

Later, Dr. Baker set up crippled children's clinics across the state. He was presented the Physician's Award by President Dwight Eisenhower as the physician who made the greatest contribution to the physically handicapped.

In 1971, he served as the first secretary of the North Carolina Human Resources Department.

"I took 34 independent agencies and combined them under one umbrella in a billion dollar budget," said Dr. Baker.

Now retired and spry at the age of 86, Dr. Baker, a tall, erect man, has put his work behind him.

He spends time with his second wife, Margaret Copeland, in their brick townhouse that is elegantly furnished with antiques and Oriental rugs. The walls are lined with plagues and photos of famous athletes like heavyweight boxing champion Jack Dempsey and New York Giants catcher Chief Meyers.

Baker, who was inducted into the North Carolina Sports Hall of Fame, still is an avid sports fan. He goes to Duke basketball and football games.

He is also a champion of conservativeness. He counts Sen. Jesse Helms as a "personal friend." An American flag flies outside his home. When he goes out, he dresses like a Southern gentleman—suit and homburg hat.

"I am an ultraconservative and unreconstructed Southerner who believes in God and that man's success depends, not entirely, but largely on genes," he said.

This well-known physician spends a lot of time studying genealogy. He is writing a book about the Flowers' family. His first wife, who is now dead, was Virginia Flowers, who was the daughter of the late Robert Flowers, president of Duke University.

"I married well," he said. "She opened many doors, locally and nationwide in orthopedics."

Dr. Baker was reared in Texarkana, Texas where he was introduced to athletics. His father played in pickup baseball games and the younger Baker would serve as batboy.

When the Class D Texas-Oklahoma League was formed, Dr. Baker's father, by then the sheriff of Bowie County and a wholesale grocer, threw his financial support to the Texarkana team. Baker served as its batboy.

During one summer, this sports lover went to Marlin, Texas where the New York Giants were involved in spring training.

Baker's father developed a friendship with Chief Meyers and other New York Giants players. One night Meyers came to stay with the Bakers and ended up in the young batboy's room.

"He stayed in my room the rest of the training period," said Dr. Baker.

When Dr. Baker went to college, he headed for the University of Tennessee where he worked as an athletic trainer.

After leaving Tennessee, he headed for New York where he worked at the Chase Manhattan Bank.

He said, "I was originally trained in business and banking. Sitting at a desk in a black alpaca coat didn't appeal to me."

In 1929, he left this world just before the Big Crash.

His first job in Durham was as an athletic trainer for the Duke football team.

It was a glorious time for athletics at Duke.

James DeHart, football coach, brought in Jack Coombs as baseball coach, Eddie Cameron as assistant football coach and others who helped to build a great athletic program.

When Dr. Baker finished his medical training, he became team physician for the Duke Blue Devils.

As his reputation grew, he treated N.C. State players, Davidson players and athletes in other states.

He also was asked to be an expert witness in a suit that Jack Dempsey filed against the Saturday Evening Post for reporting that he used plaster of Paris in his boxing gloves during a heavyweight fight. Dr. Baker never testified because the magazine settled with Dempsey out of court.

"It was a ridiculous, crazy story," he said. "If you wrapped hands in plaster of Paris, it would be weight on the hands and tire them out."

As team physician, Dr. Baker worked with the great coach Wallace Wade, who took Duke to the Rose Bowl in 1938. That same year, the Blue Devils went the entire season without being scored upon.

He learned a lot about being a "disciplinarian" from Wade.

"He said the world was full of poor Charleys and not interested in how hard you tried," said Dr. Baker. "The world just wants to know if you did the job or didn't."

During his years with the Blue Devils, Dr. Baker got to know a lot of great football players including Freddie Crawford and Sonny Jurgensen. He still gets letters from many of the players.

"I could feel the faith they had in me whether I deserved it or not," he said. "It was a real high light to have worked with them. I was devoted to them, and they knew it."

As Dr. Baker became involved in other medical activities, he gradually turned over the job of team physician to Dr. Frank Bassett.

"That is the way I wanted it," said Baker. "I wanted the coaches and players to get to know him. I guess I never stopped being the team physician. Like Douglas MacArthur said 'I just faded away.'"

STATE OF THE UNION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 15

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table:

To the Congress of the United States:

Less than 3 weeks ago, I joined you on the West Front of this very building and—looking over the monuments to our proud past—offered you my hand in filling the next page of American history with a story of extended prosperity and continued peace. Tonight, I am back to offer you my plans as well. The hand remains extended, the sleeves are rolled up, America is waiting, and now we must produce.

Together, we can build a better America.

It is comforting to return to this historic chamber. Here, 22 years ago, I first raised my hand to be sworn into public life. So tonight I feel as if I am returning home to friends. And I intend, in the months and years to come, to give you what friends deserve: frankness, respect, and my best judgment about ways to improve America's future.

In return, I ask for an honest commitment to our common mission of progress. If we seize the opportunities on the road before us, there will be praise enough for all.

The people did not send us here to bicker. It is time to govern.

Many Presidents have come to this chamber in times of great crisis. War. Depression. Loss of national spirit.

Eight years ago, I sat in the President of the Senate's chair as President Reagan spoke of punishing inflation and devastatingly high interest rates, people out of work, American confidence on the wane.

Our challenge is different.

We are fortunate—a much changed landscape lies before us tonight.

So I do not propose to reverse direction. We are headed the right way.

But we cannot rest. We are a people whose energy and drive have fueled our rise to greatness. We are a forward-looking nation—generous, yes, but ambitious as well—not for ourselves, but for the world.

Complacency is not in our character—not before, not now, not ever.

So tonight, we must take a strong America—and make it even better.

We must address some very real problems. We must establish some very clear priorities. And we must make a very substantial cut in the Federal budget deficit.

Some people find that agenda impossible.

But I am presenting to you tonight a realistic plan for tackling it. My plan has four broad features: attention to urgent priorities, investment in the future, an attack on the deficit, and no new taxes.

This budget represents my best judgment of how we can address our priorities, consistent with the people's view. There are many areas in which we would all like to spend more than I propose, but we cannot until we get our fiscal house in order.

Next year alone, thanks to economic growth, without any change in the law the Federal Government will take in over $80 billion more than it does this year. That is right—over $80 billion in new revenues, with no increase in taxes. Our job is to allocate those new resources wisely.

We can afford to increase spending—by a modest amount, but enough to invest in key priorities and still cut the deficit by almost 40 percent in 1 year.

That will allow us to meet the targets set forth in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law.

But to do that, we must recognize that growth above inflation in Federal programs is not preordained, that not all spending initiatives were designed to be immortal.

I make this pledge tonight: My team and I are ready to work with the Congress, to form a special leadership group, to negotiate in good faith, to work day and night—if that is what it takes—to meet the budget targets and to produce a budget on time.

We cannot settle for business as usual.

Government by continuing resolution—or government by crisis—will not do.

I ask the Congress tonight to approve several measures that will make budgeting more sensible. We could save time and improve efficiency by enacting 2-year budgets.

Forty-three Governors have the line-item veto. Presidents should have it, too.

At the very least, when a President proposes to rescind Federal spending, the Congress should be required to vote on that proposal—instead of killing it by inaction.

And I ask the Congress to honor the public's wishes by passing a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget. Such an amendment, once phased in, will discipline both the Congress and the executive branch.

Several principles describe the kind of America I hope to build with your help in the years ahead.

We will not have the luxury of taking the easy, spendthrift approach to solving problems—because higher spending and higher taxes put economic growth at risk.

Economic growth provides jobs and hope. Economic growth enables us to pay for social programs. Economic growth enhances the security of the Nation. And low tax rates create economic growth.

I believe in giving Americans greater freedom and greater choice—and I will work for choice for American families, whether in the housing in which they live, the schools to which they send their children, or the child care they select for their young.

I believe that we have an obligation to those in need, but that Government should not be the provider of first resort for things that the private sector can produce better.

I believe in a society that is free from discrimination and bigotry of any kind. I will work to knock down the barriers left by past discrimination, and to build a more tolerant society that will stop such barriers from ever being built again.

I believe that family and faith represent the moral compass of the Nation—and I will work to make them strong, for as Benjamin Franklin said: "If a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, [can] a great [nation] rise without His aid?"

And I believe in giving people the power to make their own lives better through growth and opportunity. Together, let us put power in the hands of people.

Three weeks ago we celebrated the Bicentennial Inaugural, the 200th anniversary of the first Presidency.

And if you look back, one thing is so striking about the way the Founding Fathers looked at America. They did not talk about themselves. They talked about posterity. They talked about the future.

We, too, must think in terms bigger than ourselves.

We must take actions today that will ensure a better tomorrow. We must extend American leadership in technology, increase long-term investment, improve our educational system, and boost productivity. These are the keys to building a better future.

Here are some of my recommendations:

—I propose almost $2.2 billion for the National Science Foundation to promote basic research;

—I propose to make permanent the tax credit for research and development;

—I have asked Vice President QUAYLE to chair a new Task Force on Competitiveness;

—I request funding for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and a strong space program—an increase of almost $2.4 billion over the current fiscal year. We must have a manned space station; a vigorous, safe space shuttle program; and more commercial development in space. The space program should always go "full throttle up"—that is not just our ambition, it is our destiny.

—I propose that we cut the maximum tax rate on capital gains to increase long-term investment. History is clear: This will increase revenues, help savings, and create new jobs.

We will not be competitive if we leave whole sectors of America behind. This is the year we should finally enact urban enterprise zones and bring hope to our inner cities.

But the most important competitiveness program of all is one that improves education in America.

When some of our students actually have trouble locating America on a map of the world, it is time for us to map a new approach to education.

We must reward excellence and cut through bureaucracy. We must help those schools that need help most. We must give choice to parents, students, teachers, and principals. And we must hold all concerned accountable. In education, we cannot tolerate mediocrity.

I want to cut the dropout rate and make America a more literate Nation. Because what it really comes down to is this: The longer our graduation lines are today, the shorter our unemployment lines will be tomorrow.

So tonight I am proposing the following initiatives:

—the beginning of a $500 million program to reward America's best schools—"merit schools";

—the creation of special presidential awards for the best teachers in every State—because excellence should be rewarded;

—the establishment of a new program of National Science Scholars, one each year for every member of the House and Senate, to give this generation of students a special incentive to excel in science and mathematics;

—the expanded use of magnet schools, which give families and students greater choice; —and a new program to encourage "alternative certification," which will let talented people from all fields teach in the classroom.

I have said I would like to be "the Education President." Tonight, I ask you to join me by becoming "the Education Congress."

Just last week, as I settled into this new office, I received a letter from a mother in Pennsylvania who had been struck by my message in the Inaugural Address. "Not 12 hours before," she wrote, "my husband and I received word that our son was addicted to cocaine. He had the world at his feet. Bright, gifted, personable, he could have done anything with his life. Now he has chosen cocaine."

"Please," she wrote, "find a way to curb the supply of cocaine. Get tough with the pushers. Our son needs your help."

My friends, that voice crying out for help could be the voice of your own neighbor. Your own friend. Your own son. Over 23 million Americans used illegal drugs last year—at a staggering cost to our Nation's well-being.

Let this be recorded as the time when America rose up and said "no" to drugs. The scourge of drugs must be stopped.

I am asking tonight for an increase of almost a billion dollars in budget outlays to escalate the war against drugs. The war will be waged on all fronts.

Our new "drug czar," Bill Bennett, and I will be shoulder-to-shoulder, leading the charge.

Some money will be used to expand treatment to the poor and to young mothers. This will offer the helping hand to the many innocent victims of drugs—like the thousands of babies born addicted, or with AIDS, because of the mother's addiction.

Some will be used to cut the waiting time for treatment.

Some money will be devoted to those urban schools where the emergency is now the worst. And much of it will be used to protect our borders, with help from the Coast Guard, the Customs Service, the Departments of State and Justice, and, yes, the U.S. military.

I mean to get tough on the drug criminals. Let me be clear: This President will back up those who put their lives on the line every day—our local police officers.

My budget asks for beefed-up prosecution, for a new attack on organized crime, and for enforcement of tough sentences—and for the worst kingpins, that means the death penalty.

I also want to make sure that when a drug dealer is convicted, there is a cell waiting for him. He should not go free because prisons are too full.

Let the word go out: If you are caught and convicted, you will do time.

But for all we do in law enforcement, in interdiction and treatment, we will never win this war on drugs unless we stop demand for drugs.

So some of this increase will be used to educate the young about the dangers of drugs. We must involve parents. We must involve teachers. We must involve communities. And my friends, we must involve ourselves.

One problem related to drug use demands our urgent attention and our continuing compassion. That is the terrible tragedy of AIDS.

I am asking for $1.6 billion for education to prevent the disease—and for research to find a cure.

If we are to protect our future, we need a new attitude about the environment.

We must protect the air we breathe.

I will send to you shortly legislation for a new, more effective Clean Air Act. It will include a plan to reduce, by date certain, the emissions that cause acid rain—because the time for study alone has passed, and the time for action is now.

We must make use of clean coal. My budget contains full funding, on schedule, for the clean coal technology agreement we have made with Canada. We intend to honor that agreement.

We must not neglect our parks. So I am asking to fund new acquisitions under the land and water conservation fund.

We must protect our oceans. I support new penalties against those who would dump medical waste and other trash in the oceans. The age of the needle on the beach must end.

In some cases, the gulfs and oceans off our shores hold the promise of oil and gas reserves that can make our Nation more secure and less dependent on foreign oil. When those with the most promise can be tapped safely, as with much of the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge, we should proceed. But we must use caution, and we must respect the environment.

So tonight I am calling for the indefinite postponement of three lease sales that have raised troubling questions—two off the coast of California and one that could threaten the Everglades in Florida.

Action on these three lease sales will await the conclusions of a special task force set up to measure the potential for environmental damage.

I am directing the Attorney General and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to use every tool at their disposal to speed and toughen the enforcement of our laws against toxic-waste dumpers. I want faster cleanups and tougher enforcement of penalties against polluters.

In addition to caring for our future, we must care for those around us. A decent society shows compassion for the young, the elderly, the vulnerable, and the poor.

Our first obligation is to the most vulnerable—infants, poor mothers, children living in poverty—and my proposed budget recognizes this. I ask for full funding of Medicaid—an increase of over $3 billion—and an expansion of the program to include coverage of pregnant women who are near the poverty line.

I believe we should help working families cope with the burden of child care.

Our help should be aimed at those who need it most—low-income families with young children. I support a new child care tax credit that will aim our efforts at exactly those families—without discriminating against mothers who choose to stay at home.

Now, I know there are competing proposals. But remember this: The overwhelming majority of all preschool child care is now provided by relatives and neighbors, churches and community groups. Families who choose these options should remain eligible for help. Parents should have choice.

And for those children who are unwanted or abused, or whose parents are deceased, we should encourage adoption. I propose to reenact the tax deduction for adoption expenses and to double it to $3,000. Let us make it easier for those kids to have parents who love them.

We have a moral contract with our senior citizens. In this budget, Social Security is fully funded, including a full cost-of-living adjustment. We must honor our contract.

We must care about those in "the shadows of life," and I, like many Americans, am deeply troubled by the plight of the homeless. The causes of homelessness are many, the history is long, but the moral imperative to act is clear.

Thanks to the deep well of generosity in this great land, many organizations already contribute. But we in government cannot stand on the sidelines. Im my budget, I ask for greater support for emergency food and shelter, for health services and measures to prevent substance abuse, and for clinics for the mentally ill—and I propose a new initiative involving the full range of Government agencies. We must confront this national shame.

There is another issue I decided to mention here tonight. I have long believed that the people of Puerto Rico should have the right to determine their own political future. Personally, I favor statehood. But I ask the Congress to take the necessary steps to let the people decide in a referendum.

Certain problems, the result of decades of unwise practices, threaten the health and security of our people. Left unattended, they will only get worse—but we can act now to put them behind us.

Earlier this week, I announced my support for a plan to restore the financial and moral integrity of our savings system. I ask the Congress to enact our reform proposals within 45 days. We must not let this situation fester.

Certainly, the savings of Americans must remain secure—insured depositors will continue to be fully protected. But any plan to refinance the system must be accompanied by major reform. Our proposals will prevent such a crisis from recurring. The best answer is to make sure that a mess like this will never happen again.

The majority of thrifts in communities across this Nation have been honest; they have played a major role in helping families achieve the American dream of home ownership. But make no mistake: Those who are corrupt, those who break the law, must be kicked out of the business; and they should go to jail.

We face a massive task in cleaning up the waste left from decades of environmental neglect at America's nuclear weapons plants.

Clearly, we must modernize these plants and operate them safely. That is not at issue—our national security depends on it.

But beyond that, we must clean up the old mess that has been left behind—and I propose in this budget to more than double our current effort to do so. This will allow us to identify the exact nature of the various problems so we can clean them up—and clean them up we will.

We have been fortunate during these past 8 years. America is a stronger nation today than it was in 1980.

Morale in our armed forces is restored. Our resolve has been shown. Our readiness has been improved. And we are at peace.

There can no longer be any doubt that peace has been made more secure through strength. When America is stronger, the world is safer.

Most people do not realize that, after the successful restoration of our strength, the Pentagon budget has actually been reduced in real terms for each of the last 4 years. We cannot tolerate further reductions.

In light of the compelling need to reduce the deficit, however, I support a 1-year freeze in the military budget—something I proposed last fall in my flexible freeze plan.

This freeze will apply for only 1 year—after that increases above inflation will be required. I will not sacrifice American preparedness; and I will not compromise American strength.

I should be clear on the conditions attached to my recommendation for the coming year:

—the savings must be allocated to those priorities for investing in our future that I have spoken about tonight;

—this defense freeze must be part of a comprehensive budget agreement that meets the targets spelled out in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law without raising taxes and that incorporates reforms in the budget process.

I have directed the National Security Council to review our national security and defense policies and report back to me within 90 days to ensure that our capabilities and resources meet our commitments and strategies.

I am also charging the Department of Defense with the task of developing a plan to improve the defense procurement process and management of the Pentagon—one that will implement fully the Packard Commission report. Many of the changes can only be made with the participation of the Congress—so I ask for your help.

We need fewer regulations. We need less bureaucracy. We need multi-year procurement and 2-year budgeting. And frankly, we need less congressional micromanagement of our Nation's military policy.

Securing a more peaceful world is perhaps the most important priority I would like to address tonight.

We meet at a time of extraordinary hope. Never before in this century have our values of freedom, democracy, and economic opportunity been such a powerful political and intellectual force around the globe.

Never before has our leadership been so crucial, because while America has its eyes on the future, the world has its eyes on America.

It is a time of great change in the world—and especially in the Soviet Union. Prudence and common sense dictate that we try to understand the full meaning of the change going on there, review our policies carefully, and proceed with caution. But I have personally assured General Secretary Gorbachev that at the conclusion of such a review we will be ready to move forward. We will not miss any opportunity to work for peace.

The fundamental fact remains that the Soviets retain a very powerful military machine in the service of objectives that are still too often in conflict with ours. So let us take the new openness seriously. Let us step forward to negotiate. But let us also be realistic. And let us always be strong.

There are some pressing issues we must address:

I will pursue vigorously the Strategic Defense Initiative.

The spread and even use of sophisticated weaponry threatens global stability as never before.

Chemical weapons must be banned from the face of the earth, never to be used again. This will not be easy. Verification will be difficult. But civilization and human decency demand that we try.

And the spread of nuclear weapons must be stopped. I will work to strengthen the hand of the International Atomic Energy Agency. Our diplomacy must work every day against the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

And, around the globe, we must continue to be freedom's best friends.

We must stand firm for self-determination and democracy in Central America—including in Nicaragua.

For when people are given the chance, they inevitably will choose a free press; freedom of worship; and certifiably free and fair elections.

We must strengthen the alliance of industrial democracies—as solid a force for peace as the world has every known. This is an alliance forged by the power of our ideals, not the pettiness of our differences. So let us lift our sights—to rise above fighting about beef hormones to building a better future, to move from protectionism to progress.

I have asked the Secretary of State to visit Europe next week and to consult with our allies on the wide range of challenges and opportunities we face together—including East-West relations. And I look forward to meeting with our NATO partners in the near future.

I, too, shall begin a trip shortly—to the far reaches of the Pacific Basin, where the winds of democracy are creating new hope, and the power of free markets is unleashing a new force.

When I served as our representative in China just 14 years ago, few would have predicted the scope of the changes we have witnessed since then.

But in preparing for this trip, I was struck by something I came across from a Chinese writer, Lin Yutang. He was speaking of his country, decades ago—but his words speak to each of us in America tonight.

"Today," he said, "we are afraid of the simple words like goodness and mercy and kindness."

My friends, if we are to succeed as a nation, we must rediscover those words.

In just 3 days, we mark the birthday of Abraham Lincoln—the man who saved our Union and gave new meaning to the word opportunity. Lincoln once said:

"I hold that while man exists, it is his duty to improve not only his own condition, but to assist in ameliorating [that of] mankind."

It is this broader mission to which I call all Americans. Because the definition of a successful life must include serving others.

To the young people of America, who sometimes feel left out—I ask you tonight to give us the benefit of your talent and energy through a new program called YES, for Youth Entering Service to America.

To those men and women in business—remember the ultimate end of your work: to make a better product, to create better lives. I ask you to plan for the longer term and avoid the temptation of quick and easy paper profits.

To the brave men and women who wear the uniform of the United States of America—thank you. Your calling is a high one—to be the defenders of freedom and the guarantors of liberty. And I want you to know that a Nation is grateful for your service.

To the farmers of America, we appreciate the bounty you provide. We will work with you to open foreign markets to American agricultural products.

To the parents of America, I ask you to get involved in your children's schooling. Check on their homework. Go to the school, meet the teachers, care about what is happening there. It is not only your children's future on the line, it is America's.

To kids in our cities—do not give up hope. Say no to drugs. Stay in school. And, yes, "keep hope alive."

To those 37 million Americans with some form of disability—you belong in the economic mainstream. We need your talents in America's work force. Disabled Americans must become full partners in America's opportunity society.

To the families of America, watching tonight in your living rooms, hold fast to your dreams, because ultimately America's future rests in your hands.

And to my friends in this chamber, I ask for your cooperation in keeping America growing while cutting the deficit. That is only fair to those who now have no voice—the generations to come.

Let them look back and say that we had the foresight to understand that a time of peace and prosperity is not a time to rest, but a time to push forward. A time to invest in the future.

And let all Americans remember that no problem of human making is too great to be overcome by human ingenuity, human energy, and the untiring hope of the human spirit. I believe this. I would not have asked to be your President if I did not.

Tomorrow, the debate on the plan I have put forward begins. I ask the Congress to come forward with its proposals. Let us not question each other's motives. Let us debate. Let us negotiate. But let us solve the problems.

Recalling anniversaries may not be my specialty in speeches, but tonight is one of some note. On February 9, 1941, just 48 years ago tonight, Sir Winston Churchill took to the airways during Britain's hour of peril.

He had received from President Roosevelt a hand-carried letter quoting Longfellow's famous poem: "Sail on, oh ship of state. Sail on, oh union, strong and great! Humanity with all its fears, with all the hopes of future years; Is hanging breathless on thy fate!"

Churchill responded on this night by radio broadcast to a nation at war, but he directed his words to Roosevelt. "We shall not fail or falter," he said. "We shall not weaken or tire. Give us the tools, and we will finish the job."

Tonight, almost a half century later, our peril may be less immediate, but the need for perseverance and clear-sighted fortitude is just as great.

Now, as then, there are those who say it cannot be done. There are voices who say that America's best days have passed. That we are bound by constraints, threatened by problems, surrounded by troubles that limit our ability to hope.

Well, tonight I remain full of hope. We Americans have only begun on our mission of goodness and greatness. And to those timid souls, I repeat the plea—give us the tools; and we will do the job.

Thank you, and God bless you.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. GARN (for himself and Mr. HATCH):

S. 393. A bill entitled the "Camp W.G. Williams Land Exchange Act of 1989"; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

CAMP W.G. WILLIAMS LAND EXCHANGE ACT

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I rise to introduce legislation entitled "The Camp W.G. Williams Land Exchange Act of 1989." I am pleased that my colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH, has joined me in this effort.

This bill is virtually identical to one introduced in the last Congress by Representative HOWARD C. NIELSEN of the Third District in Utah, who has worked hard on this issue for a long time.

Essentially the bill will accomplish two things. It will:

First, overturn the National Wildlife Federation [NWF] lawsuit which has blocked numerous exchanges on public land around Utah and the country; and Second, trade out four private inholdings within Camp Williams totaling 798 acres for public lands elsewhere of equal value.

I recognize that this legislation will only have efficacy if the recent Federal district court decision which threw out the National Wildlife Federation lawsuit is allowed to be appealed. Not knowing whether NWF's appeal will be accepted, but assuming it may be, I believe this legislation is necessary and will give the Bureau of Land Management and the Army the ability to proceed in an orderly way with the land exchange using their existing administrative authority.●

By Mr. HARKIN (for himself, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. MATSUNAGA, and Mr. SANFORD):

S. 395. A bill to prohibit any active duty, commissioned officer of the Armed Forces of the United States from serving as the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

SERVICE AS NATIONAL SECURITY ADVISER

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, civilian control of the military is a cornerstone of the American system of government. However, that cornerstone has been partially eroded away, as active duty military officers have gained influence inside the National Security Council. The Iran/Contra affair has clearly illustrated how military officers, without proper oversight, can go astray, subverting the democratic process, condoning illegal activities, and acting in defiance of established civilian foreign policy.

Banning military officers from the National Security Council would not necessarily have prevented the Iran/Contra escapades. Furthermore, we should not exclude highly qualified military personnel from serving on the NSC staff.

However, I strongly believe that the National Security Adviser to the President should be a civilian. This sensitive post, with daily direct access to the President, is too critical to be occupied by an active duty officer whose next promotion depends on the Department of Defense, one of the primary actors on the national security stage. As President Reagan's Special Review Board, chaired by John Tower, stated, the NSC adviser should be an "honest broker," providing "all reasonable options" to the President, "unalloyed by institutional responsibilities and biases."

How can we assure that the next NSC adviser could remain unbiased if he or she were employed by the Defense Department? Could we be sure that an active duty officer would present the case of the State Department with equal vigor to the Defense Department's position? And even if we found another Colin Powell, who most judged to be an excellent NSC adviser, could we avoid the appearance of conflict of interest?

Mr. President, I am introducing a bill that would prohibit active duty military officers from serving in this sensitive post. Many groups and prominent individuals have recommended that the NSC adviser be a civilian. The Iran/Contra Committee recommended that the NSC adviser "should not be an active duty military officer." Admiral Crowe, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, stated that "I don't think an active military man should lead the NSC." And even General Powell stated that he thought the adviser should be a civilian.

Brent Scowcroft, our current NSC adviser, felt compelled to resign his commission in the Air Force before accepting the NSC post under President Ford. At the time, he said that "it was sort of incompatible to remain on active duty as a serving officer in that kind of more impartial setting, so I felt it was necessary to resign."

This bill would not preclude obviously well-qualified individuals such as General Powell from serving our country in this important capacity. They would have to resign before serving. It would not ban active duty officers from serving on the NSC staff.

There is precedent for prohibiting military officers from serving in key executive posts. The Arms Control and Disarmament Agency law states that "No person serving on active duty as a commissioned officer of the Armed Forces of the United States may be appointed Director."

Mr. President, this is an excellent time to reaffirm our commitment to civilian control of the Military Establishment. The active players in the national security establishment, the Chairman of the JCS, the Secretary of Defense, and the incumbent NSC adviser all support the principle of a civilian in the National Security Adviser's post. Now is the time to solidify that commitment in law.●

By Mr. DECONCINI (for himself and Mr. GRASSLEY):

S. 396. A bill to amend title 11 of the United States Code, the bankruptcy code, regarding swap agreements; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SWAP AGREEMENTS

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, today I rise along with my colleague, Mr. GRASSLEY of Iowa, to reintroduce a bill to amend the Bankruptcy Code to provide protection for the operation of interest rate and currency swap agreements when one of the parties files for bankruptcy relief.

This bill would amend section 362 to exempt swap agreements from the automatic stay provisions and amend section 647 to provide that ordinary transfers made or setoffs effected under a swap agreement immediately before a bankruptcy case cannot be set aside by a bankruptcy trustee. It would also create a new section 560 providing that the contractual right of a nondefaulting swap participant will not be stayed by any order of the bankruptcy court or otherwise under the Bankruptcy Code.

Mr. President, this bill was passed by the full Senate last Congress, however, the House did not have time to act on it in the closing hours. I am hopeful that with this early reintroduction in the Senate and with the bill's upcoming introduction in the House by Congressmen CHARLES SHUMER, HAMILTON FISH, and MIKE SYNAR that the bill's enactment into law will occur this year. The legislation is supported by the Federal Reserve Board, Securities Industry Association, Public Securities Association, New York Clearinghouse Association, International Swap Dealers Association, and others. I am not aware of any opposition to the legislation and urge my colleagues to again join with Senator GRASSLEY and myself in supporting these necessary amendments to the bankruptcy law.

I. THE INTEREST RATE AND CURRENCY SWAP MARKETS

A. BACKGROUND

Interest rate and currency swap agreements are a rapidly growing and vital risk management tool in the world financial markets. Financial institutions and corporations use swaps to minimize exposure to adverse changes in interest and currency exchange rates. Swaps can also be used, in effect, to convert a particular financial asset from fixed to floating rate and from one currency to another. Currency swaps and forward foreign exchange transactions also play an important role in international trade as a means of hedging against currency fluctuations. Dealers and users of these instruments include commercial banks, investment banks, thrift institutions, insurance companies, domestic and multinational corporations, foreign governments, and U.S. and foreign government sponsored entities. The International Swap Dealers Association has compiled statistics showing that the dollar volume of outstanding U.S. dollar-denominated swap transactions alone exceeded $541.5 billion at the end of 1987, and that an additional $155.7 billion in new agreements were entered into the first 6 months of 1988.

A typical single-currency interest rate swap transaction involves an agreement where one party agrees to make periodic payments based on a fixed rate while the other agrees to make periodic payments based on a floating rate. Payments are calculated on the basis of a hypothetical principal—or "notional"—amount and payment amounts are typically netted—even in the absence of default—on common payment dates. The principal or notional amounts generally are not transferred. The term of swap transactions generally ranges from 1 to 12 years.

Swap transactions are widely used by institutions, including thrift institutions, to manage mismatches between their assets and liabilities. For example, an entity that has substantial short-term floating rate liabilities and long-term relatively fixed rate financial assets has substantial interest rate exposure. In a rising interest rate environment, the entity may suffer losses as the cost of its short-term floating rate liabilities rise, above the fixed returns on its assets. To hedge this risk and "lock-in" a positive spread between the rate it receives on its assets and the rate it is required to pay on its liabilities, that entity can enter into an interest rate swap in which it will make fixed-rate payments—which can be funded by its fixed-rate assets—and will receive floating rate payments—which will rise or fall along with its floating rate liabilities.

An entity with a relatively low-credit rating not only can reduce its market risk through a swap transaction but can also lower its borrowing costs by entering into swaps with an entity with a higher credit rating. Certain institutions, either because of better credit ratings or better market recognition, have a comparative advantage in borrowing in the fixed-rate markets. Other institutions may be unable to obtain long-term fixed rate financing at acceptable rates, but will be able to obtain short-term floating-rate funds. Through the use of swaps, however, that institution will often be able to obtain favorable long-term fixed rates. Because the credit exposure on a swap is relatively small compared to a traditional loan of principal, entities with higher credit ratings are often more willing to enter into long-term swaps than long-term loans with lower-rated entities.

A party to a swap transaction may enter into a swap directly with another principle end-user. More commonly, however, it enters into a swap with a commercial or investment bank that acts as a dealer in swaps. The dealer will often act as a principal, creating a portfolio of swaps. By standing ready to enter into swaps with any qualified party at any time, swap dealers provide important liquidity for the swaps market.

B. THE MASTER AGREEMENT

Now, Mr. President I will turn to the problems that this bill is designed to address.

The International Swap Dealer Association has developed a master swap agreement that is used by most swap participants. A fundamental provision of the master agreement is that, upon termination of the agreement for default, all transactions between the parties are terminated, a single net amount due is determined, and the amount due the nondefaulting party is paid by the defaulting party. The immediate termination for default and the netting provisions are critical aspects of swap transactions. The immediate termination of all outstanding transactions is necessary for the protection of all parties in light of the potential for rapid changes in the financial markets. The provisions allowing netting of the termination values of all transactions between the parties is a fundamental aspect of swap transactions, particularly for the financial intermediaries who may have numerous transactions with one counterparty under a single master agreement.

I have become concerned about the impact of the Bankruptcy Code on these critical provisions of swap agreements. In particular I am concerned that the automatic stay provision of the Bankruptcy Code could be interpreted to bar immediate termination of outstanding transactions, creating a risk of exposure to rapid change in the market. I am also concerned that, even where all transactions between two parties are conducted under a single master agreement, a bankruptcy trustee could try to "cherrypick" by assuming favorable transactions while rejecting unfavorable ones.

Although many believe that under existing statutory provisions and case law netting should be enforced under the Bankruptcy Code, the issue has never been expressly addressed by a court and, accordingly cannot be free from doubt. We cannot afford to leave this question in doubt. If netting is not allowed—and the debtor is permitted to cherrypick—the potential exposure for nondefaulting parties is drastically increased. In this day of volatile financial markets, we cannot permit one bankruptcy to undermine the basic function of a market as large and important as the swaps market.

II. PROPOSED CHANGES

The changes I proposed address three specific problems. These are (a) the impact of the automatic stay on the enforcement of the contractual rights to terminate a defaulted contract; (b) the right to net positive and negative exposures with one counterparty; and (c) the impact of the Bankruptcy Code on normal prebankruptcy activities, such as the setoff of mutual claims and debts and the potential exposure of ordinary prebankruptcy transfers to later preference recovery.

These changes closely parallel those enacted in 1982 and 1984 by Congress for securities contracts, forward contracts, commodity contracts, and repurchase agreements. The same reasons that led Congress to enact those amendments support the amendments I am introducing today.

The bills' definition of the term "swap agreement" is based on the interest rate contract and exchange rate contract definitions adopted by the Basle Committee on Banking Regulations and Supervisory Practices. The Basle Committee is comprised of representatives of the central banks and supervisory authorities of the United States and 10 other major countries. The Basle Committee definitions were adopted as part of a report establishing an international framework for implementation of uniform capital measurement and capital adequacy standards for banks. The standards utilize the interest rate contract and exchange rate contract definitions in measuring the off-balance sheet risk that arises from participation in swap market transactions. As such, these definitions represent an international regulatory consensus concerning the types of transactions that should be treated as swap agreements and, thus, an appropriate basis for the bill's definition of that term. Consistency between the bill's swap agreement definition and the Basle Committee definitions also should promote the realization of the overall objective of assuring the safety and soundness of the international financial system.

One consequence of this consistency, however, is that the swap agreement definition includes certain types of contracts that already are covered by other provisions of the code. For example, the definition includes forward foreign exchange agreements, which also are subject to the forward contract provisions of the code. A forward contract basically is any contract for the purchase, sale or transfer of a commodity with a maturity date more than 2 days after the contract is entered into. For purposes of the forward contract definition, the term "commodity" includes any good, article, service, right or interest that is the subject of a forward contract transaction. All foreign currencies satisfy one or more of these criteria. Accordingly, forward foreign exchange agreements are forward contracts for purposes of the code. The swap agreement definition in this bill is not intended to affect in any way the status of a forward foreign exchange agreement, or any other contract, as a forward contract under the code.

A. AUTOMATIC STAY PROVISIONS

The automatic stay of section 362 of the Bankruptcy Code bars a party from taking any action to interfere with the property of the bankrupt estate. It is possible that a bankruptcy court could interpret this provision to stay a nondefaulting party from taking action either to terminate a swap or forward foreign exchange agreement with a debtor or to net offsetting exposures, at least without first obtaining authority from the bankruptcy court.

Obtaining such authority necessarily takes some time, often many weeks or months. Any delay in obtaining authority to terminate outstanding transactions and to net offsetting exposures would create unreasonable risks for the nondefaulting party. The interest rate and currency exchange markets often move rapidly and, given the substantial volume of transactions, any type of delay following a bankruptcy filing would impose unreasonable risks of loss on the participants in the market. Following a default, and absent a stay, a prudent counterparty would immediately terminate all transactions with a debtor so as to fix its exposure and would simultaneously enter into separate transactions to hedge that exposure. The possibility that the automatic stay would prevent such termination—possibly for weeks or months—creates a threat of a substantial increase in the nondefaulting party's exposure to the debtor and generally complicates any effort to hedge that exposure.

The unfairness of this result can be shown by an example. First assume that two parties had entered into a single interest rate swap transaction under a master agreement. Assume also that the defaulting party receives fixed rate payments and makes floating rate payments based on a notional amount of $50 million. If that party files for relief under the Bankruptcy Code, absent the potential application of the automatic stay, the nondefaulting party could fix its exposure based on then-current interest rates and enter into a new transaction to hedge that exposure.

The situation is far more uncertain if the stay applies. If the nondefaulting party were certain that the debtor would default, it would hedge its exposure and lock in its position; if it were certain that the debtor would perform, it could do nothing. But the uncertainty as to whether the transaction will be assumed would likely force the nondefaulting party to hedge, thereby incurring the cost of a new transaction and depriving it of the benefits of its original bargain. Moreover, if the nondefaulting party has hedged the original transaction—as is often the case—it could be faced with an uncovered open position depending on the ultimate decision on assumption or rejection made by the debtor, a decision that the debtor may not make for a number of months.

The risks of cherry picking can be shown by a second example. Assume that two parties had entered into two transactions under a single master agreement. As is often the case, the parties are on opposite sides in the two transactions, so that the defaulting party receives fixed-rate payments under the first agreement and variable rate payments under the second. Assume further that each transaction has a current market value of $1 million. In such circumstances, the net position between the parties is zero and if both transactions were terminated simultaneously, no payment would be made to either party. Now assume that one of the parties becomes the subject of a case under the Bankruptcy Code. If the court failed to give effect to the termination and netting provisions of the master swap agreement, the debtor arguably could assume the favorable transaction, while rejecting the unfavorable transaction. The debtor's estate would then continue to receive payments from the nondebtor under the favorable transaction, while the nondebtor would be left with an unsecured claim for damages with respect to the rejected transaction, which is unlikely to be satisfied in full.

Congress has long recognized the need for certainty and speed in the volatile securities and financial markets. Section 60e of the former Bankruptcy Act (11 U.S.C. section 96e) provided special treatment for stockbroker bankruptcies, creating a separate fund for stockbroker customers with priority over general creditors. These provisions were carried forward into the stockholders and commodity broker provisions of chapter 7 when the Bankruptcy Code was enacted in 1978.

As new financial instruments have been developed, Congress has recognized the need to amend certain aspects of the Bankruptcy Code in order to continue to provide the necessary speed and certainty in complex financial transactions. In 1982 and again in 1984 Congress amended section 362 to exempt the termination and setoff of mutual debts and claims arising under securities contracts, forward contracts, commodity contracts and repurchase agreements. The 1982 amendments were "intended to minimize the displacement caused in the commodities and securities markets in the event of a bankruptcy affecting these industries," recognizing the "potential volatile nature of the markets." 128 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD H 261 (daily ed. Feb. 9, 1982). The same rationale supported the 1984 amendments.

These protections should be extended to the swap and forward foreign exchange agreements for the same reasons that they were provided for securities contracts, forward contracts, commodity contracts and repurchase agreements. Permitting the prompt termination and exercise of netting rights reduces the potential market impact of a bankruptcy filing by allowing immediate action as contemplated by the standard agreements. This exception does not interfere with the basic operation of the Bankruptcy Code, since section 553 of the code already preserves the right of setoff, although requiring a court hearing. The volatility of the interest rate and currency exchange markets makes the risk of delay pending such a court hearing unreasonable and detrimental both to the debtor, which could incur additional losses if open transactions turn unfavorable, as well as to the nondefaulting party.

B. RIGHT TO TERMINATE

Both the 1982 and the 1984 amendments provide that the contractual right of a nondefaulting party to terminate a securities contract, forward contract, commodity contract, or repurchase agreement will not be stayed by any order of the bankruptcy court or otherwise under the Bankruptcy Code. This provision essentially assures counterparties that they will not be exposed to an effort by a bankruptcy trustee to assume these agreements under section 365 of the Bankruptcy Code.

A similar assurance is needed for swap participants. In a volatile interest and currency exchange rate environment, a requirement that the counterparty keep open transactions awaiting such a decision risks imposing additional losses either on the nondefaulting party or on the debtor's estate at a time when the estate should be reducing its market exposure.

The right to terminate open transactions is particularly needed in light of the size of the swap market. As Congress recognized at the time of the 1982 and 1984 amendments, counterparties could be faced with substantial losses if forced to await a bankruptcy court decision on assumption or rejection of financial transaction agreements. Unlike ordinary leases or executory contracts, where the markets change only gradually, the financial markets can move significantly in a matter of minutes. The markets will not wait for a court decision on whether a debtor can cure, assume, or provide adequate assurance of future performance of such agreements. There is a clear need for Congress to assure counterparties that they will be able to terminate these agreements and exercise contractual liquidation and netting rights if a party to the agreement files for bankruptcy relief.

C. SETOFF AND PREFERENCE PROVISIONS

The 1982 and 1984 amendments provide that ordinary transfers made or setoffs effected under a securities or repurchase agreement immediately before a bankruptcy case cannot be set aside by a bankruptcy trustee. This is an exception to the preference provisions of section 547 and to the preference provisions of the setoff statute—section 553(b)(1)—which generally discourages setoffs before bankruptcy in ordinary commercial transactions.

The exception created by the 1982 and 1984 legislation recognizes that protections for payments made and setoffs effected under securities and other financial agreements are needed in order to preserve the functioning of the market. Similarly, in swap and foreign exchange transactions, it is important to eliminate any concern that Bankruptcy Code provisions could be read to preclude the exercise of contractual rights of the prebankruptcy netting or setoff. This is particularly important to swap participants since netting is the normal, intended course of dealing in swap transactions unlike ordinary commercial transactions, where setoff is an extraordinary remedy. While the setoff preference provision of section 553(b)(1) is designed to discourage bank account setoffs that may precipitate a bankruptcy filing, its operation in the swap market could materially interfere with customary operation of the market. For these reasons, swap agreements and forward foreign exchange transactions should be granted the same exception from ordinary preference rules and from the preferenced provisions of section 553(b)(1) as Congress has accorded securities contracts and other financial agreements.

I urge my colleagues to join with Senator GRASSLEY and myself in supporting these necessary amendments to the bankruptcy law. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 397. A bill to provide assistance to small communities with ground water radium contamination; to the Committee on the Environment and Public Works.

ASSISTANCE FOR COMMUNITIES WITH GROUND WATER CONTAMINATION.

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, in February of last year I introduced S. 2060, a bill to provide assistance to small communities with ground water radium contamination. I am pleased to say that my bill passed the Senate as part of the Senate ground water bill. Unfortunately, that bill was prevented from becoming law when both Houses failed to reach a conference agreement. In the meantime, the plight of nearly 1,000 small towns without the resources to remove radium from their drinking water supply goes on.

Radium is a naturally occurring carcinogen for which the Environmental Protection Agency has determined maximum contaminant levels. It can be very costly for communities to come into attainment with EPA's radium standard. Small municipal water supplies may need to shell out as much as $150,000 to $15 million worth of improvements to their systems in order to comply with the Federal standard. In my State of Illinois alone, there are 84 communities with populations under 20,000 whose municipal water exceeds the maximum contaminant level. It is estimated that it will cost these small towns in my State $100 million to make the necessary improvements.

There is no way that towns of this size can finance this kind of project. There are many folks in these areas, in my State, and I am sure in other areas where radium naturally occurs, that are willing to take their chances and continue to drink the water as it is. Some believe the EPA's standard is too strict. But these towns have no choice—they must make these costly expenditures to their systems or face substantial fines by the Federal Government.

For this reason, on behalf of the small communities all across America, I am pleased to reintroduce today, along with my good friend and colleague, PAUL SIMON, the radium removal demonstration program.

This bill will assist local communities in radium abatement at very little cost to the Federal Government. The $20 million this bill authorizes over 3 years would not be used for direct grants. Instead, recipients would be able to use the money to provide insurance and prepay interest for local obligations. State agencies would be the actual recipients of the money, and would use that money to buy down interest rates for qualifying communities undertaking radium abatement projects. By reducing the overall financial burden on municipalities, each Federal dollar used maximizes what a local government can afford to pay at a 10-to-1 ratio.

It is not often that Federal dollars can be stretched so effectively to provide for a legitimate public need. We are talking about helping communities who are making good faith efforts to come into compliance with Federal mandates. We are not talking about helping big cities that can afford expenditures of this size. To qualify, a town must not exceed a population of 20,000. We are not talking about providing money to private water companies. Only municipal systems will be eligible for assistance.

In these days when the Federal deficit looms large over our heads, it is appropriate that we think carefully about what is proper Government activity, and about which social needs are best left for the States and the marketplace to meet. This must be done before we make even relatively small obligations of Federal funds, such as the one I am proposing today. Mr. President, I am convinced that it is the role of the Federal Government to assure that every American has safe water to drink. It is not good enough, however, for the Federal Government to simply set standards and then turn a deaf ear to the problems local governments have in meeting those standards. It is also the Federal Government which must make sure small communities will have the ability to clean up their water.

I urge my colleagues to join me in helping small communities help themselves to obtain safe drinking water.●

By Mr. MURKOWSKI:

S. 398. A bill to apply the deposit insurance limitation to deposits by deposit brokers; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

BROKERED DEPOSITS ACT

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to limit the use of federally insured brokered deposits.

A brokered deposit is a federally insured certificate of deposit [CD] that is marketed nationwide by a financial institution to investors through the use of a broker. These deposits are presently federally insured up to $100,000 per depositor, per institution.

My bill would limit the total amount of insured deposits that could be placed by a broker to $100,000 per financial institution that does not meet the minimum capital requirements of the FDIC or FSLIC. Under my bill a single broker or firm could place no more than a total of $100,000 of federally insured brokered deposits in any one financially troubled institution. At present, there is no limit on the total amount of insured brokered deposits that can be placed in any institution.

USE OF BROKERED DEPOSITS

Advances in technology and recent legislative and regulatory advances have given rise to a CD brokerage industry. Ceilings on interest rates were removed; and issuance of CD's in negotiable form were permitted along with fees to pay brokers for obtaining the CD's.

Deposit brokers assist large institutional customers and smaller individual investors in placing their fund in CD's, none of which, in any financial institution, exceed the value of $100,000—the limit on Federal deposit insurance.

Investors like the CD's because of their safety and competitive yields; financial institutions find them a cost effective way to ease liquidity problems; and brokers enjoy the fees that CD's generate.

NEGATIVE EFFECTS ON INSURANCE FUNDS AND INDUSTRY

Although popular, brokered deposits have some extremely harmful side effects. They drain FSLIC and FDIC deposit insurance funds, inflate banking costs, take money away from local communities, encourage funds to flow to poorly managed and financially troubled institutions, and conflict with the intended purpose of Federal deposit insurance.

Federal deposit insurance was originally established in order to provide depositors with a safe place for their savings. It was seen as a way for the Federal Government to direct money into areas it deemed worthwhile—namely, affordable home loans. The depositor, in return for safety, would receive a lower rate of interest which in turn would lower the rate of interest charged by a bank or thrift on a home loan.

Instead, federally insured brokered funds have distorted the intended purpose and use of Federal deposit insurance. They give investors a no-risk higher than average rate of return, and force financial institutions into speculative ventures.

When financial institutions use brokered deposits they do so at a high price, quite often at the expense of the FSLIC and FDIC insurance funds. With the help of brokers, institutions enter national markets by offering insured CD's at rates that are normally higher than local market rates. Since the CD's are insured, investors look to the high rate of return, not the soundness of the institution, when purchasing the CD's. This causes substantial sums of insured deposits to flow into poorly managed institutions. While this may initially prolong their life span, it greatly increases the exposure of and ultimate loss to the FDIC or FSLIC funds, or the Federal Treasury.

Nearly $1.5 billion in insured brokered deposits were part of FDIC insurance payoffs or assistance payments over the past 4½ years. The potential for further losses is even greater. Roughly $2 billion of the $11 billion in FDIC brokered funds presently sit in FDIC problem banks. Not surprisingly, problem banks use brokered funds more extensively than well-rated institutions. FDIC numbers show that the percentage of brokered funds of total deposits in problem banks is 2½ times greater than that in healthy banks. The FSLIC has no current numbers, but in its June 1985 hearing before the Senate Banking Committee it stated that over 50 percent of its most troublesome thrifts had high levels of brokered funds.

The use of brokered deposits can unduly harm local competitor institutions. When a bank brokers its CD's nationwide it typically prices its regular local CD's at a higher than market rate, but below its nationwide brokered rate. Other local banks are then forced to raise their own rates or experience a deposit decline. This leads to lower profitability which in turn increases the number of troubled banks and added costs to the insurance funds.

Time to address problem—personal experience in industry Mr. President, today I join with other respected leaders, both in Government and in the financial community, in calling for a halt to the imprudent growth of deposits in undercapitalized institutions. Perhaps more than others, however, I am particularly attuned to the crisis that confronts the Federal Deposit Insurance funds and the banking and thrift industries. Before coming to the Senate, I had the privilege of spending over 20 years in the banking industry.

My bill seeks to restore the provisions of a similar 1984 FDIC and Federal Home Loan Bank Board regulation that was subsequently overruled in a Federal court case as an invalid exercise of authority.

My bill will help the insurance funds adjust to some of the unforeseen problems caused to it by advanced technology and recent deregulation. Federal insured deposit funds were never intended to be used to attract no-risk investment opportunities, especially in unsound institutions. Rather, they were created after the crash of 1929 and the Great Depression of the 1930's to insure depositor safety, primarily in financial institutions.

CONSTRUCTIVE FIRST STEP

My bill is a modest first step that will help preserve FSLIC and FDIC insurance funds and keep banking and thrift costs down. This bill will not cure this Nation's deposit insurance crisis by itself, but it will provide a constructive first step in returning stability to our banking and thrift industries.

The problem with the thrift industry, Mr. President, goes back to deregulation. It was the death knell for the S&L's.

The S&L's were chartered to provide long-term, cheap mortgage rates. Suddenly we deregulate and they had to go out and complete for their deposits. As a consequence, they could not change their long-term interest rates and, basically, the squeeze was on.

Mr. President, I ask that this body support my bill. It will enhance the security of our Federal deposit insurance system and bring us closer to the basic free market principles that encourage the flow of capital to institutions that inspire investor confidence.

S. 399. A bill to amend the Library Services and Construction Act to authorize the Secretary of Education to establish a program to make grants to local public libraries to establish demonstration projects using older adult volunteers to provide intergenerational library literacy programs to children during afterschool hours, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

INTERGENERATIONAL LIBRARY LITERACY ACT

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, today, along with my colleagues, Senator PRYOR and Senator RIEGLE, I rise to introduce S. 399, the Intergenerational Library Literacy Act. An identical bill is being introduced in the House of Representatives by Congresswomen OLYMPIA J. SNOWE. The purpose of our legislation is to assist libraries faced with growing numbers of latchkey children who are being left unattended by working parents who cannot afford or cannot find adequate day care.

We have heard a great deal about latchkey children—children who return to empty homes after school. More recently, we have learned of the growing number of library latchkey children—children who regularly spend their afterschool hours in public libraries. A 1988 study by the American Library Association indicates that one of the most rapidly developing public library issues is what to do about library latchkey children. Although libraries are committed to serving the needs of children, they are not prepared to deal with the great numbers of unsupervised children who, on a regular basis, are spending extended time in libraries as a means of afterschool day care.

The Intergenerational Library Literacy Act amends the Library Services and Construction Act by authorizing a demonstration project that allows libraries to apply for title VI literacy program grants to develop programs using older volunteers to provide afterschool literacy and reading skills programs for latchkey children. Further, it amends the Domestic Volunteer Service Act by establishing intergenerational library literacy programs as Programs of National Significance, thus permitting the Retired Senior Volunteer Program [RSVP] to target its efforts toward these programs and to establish a group of volunteers for use in libraries. Funding would come from the existing moneys set aside for title VI literacy programs. No new funds would be authorized by passage of this legislation.

Members of our growing elderly population have a great deal to contribute to our society, and I can think of no better way to put their talents to use than by helping our Nation's children. Using older volunteers, such as participants in the Retired Senior Volunteer Program [RSVP], to provide literacy and other programs for children benefits all of us. It provides a meaningful way for older Americans to share their talents, it greatly benefits the children who receive both assistance in developing reading skills and special attention from an older adult, it helps the staffs of public libraries who are taking time from their other duties to supervise latchkey children, and it is addressing our Nation's growing need for day care given the increasing number of women who are working.

I urge my colleagues to join me in working for congressional passage of the Intergenerational Library Literacy Act.

Mr. President, I request that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 399

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

By Mr. PRYOR (for himself, Mr. REID, and Mr. BOREN):

S. 400. A bill to require that all amounts saved as a result of Federal Government contracting pursuant to Office of Management and Budget Circular A-76 be returned to the Treasury, that manpower savings resulting from such contracting be made permanent, and that employees of an executive agency be consulted before contracting determinations by the head of that executive agency are made pursuant to that circular; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

COMMERCIAL ACTIVITIES CONTRACTING ACT

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Commercial Activities Contracting Act of 1989 on behalf of myself and Senators REID and BOREN.

Our bill would return all cost savings resulting from A-76 contracting out to the Treasury, to be applied to reduce the budget deficit. Circular A-76 was issued by the Office of Management and Budget [OMB] to increase the contracting out of Government activities.

Let me state, from the start, this legislation is not intended to reduce or eliminate contracting out. The bill makes no judgment as to whether the push to contract out should be limited or expanded. The Bush administration would be free to continue the contracting out efforts of the previous administration, or to come up with a new approach.

Our intent is to find ways to harness the savings generated from the process and put those savings to work reducing the Federal deficit. That, unfortunately, is not what we are seeing today.

According to the Congressional Budget Office and the President's Office of Management and Budget, millions and perhaps billions of dollars have been saved in recent years by contracting out over $36 billion of Government activities to the private sector.

Most Americans and, I dare say, most Senators, reasonably assume these savings go directly back to the Treasury. That makes sense. But because of a loophole—the size of a Swiss bank account—that is not the current practice.

A more likely scenario is this: An agency is told to cut costs by allowing the private sector to compete for one of its operations. A private bidder who says he can do the job for less wins the contract. The agency reports that it has saved the taxpayers x dollars. This good government story then sours because the reported savings disappear into the agency's coffers, as kind of a slush to be reallocated as the agency pleases.

Thus, a penny saved by contracting out is not a penny saved at all, it is a penny spent elsewhere on favorite projects; a project Congress may have considered and rejected.

One of the advantages I hope will result from our legislation is that the Government will keep better tabs on contractors. An agency forced to return contractor savings to the Treasury will make very sure the contractor delivers on its promise. We will be better able to ensure that we get the best deal for the taxpayer and that we are not just contracting out in order to meet some arbitrary goal set by OMB. Contracting out should have as its No. 1 goal saving money, not just the hiring of more consultants and contractors.

Finally, the bill will require the submission of actual figures on the amount of money saved by contracting out, rather than numbers that are cooked up to make the process look good.

Mr. President, the Subcommittee on Federal Services, Post Office and Civil Service, which I chair, held hearings on this legislation in the last Congress.

We heard from employee representatives who vividly outlined situations that did not, in our view, fully meet the cost and efficiency goals of the A-76 contracting out policy. The subcommittee heard from Members of Congress who reported on contracting out actions in their States which went bad.

We also heard from OMB, which is responsible for the implementation of the circular, and the Department of Defense, which performs a majority of the contracting out activity of the Federal Government.

Everyone is agreed that, given the urgency of the need to get the Federal budget deficit under control, it is crucial the A-76 program be run effectively. We agree that contracting out, when done properly, can save the Government money and increase efficiency. However, many of us are concerned by cases, such as the ones this subcommittee heard about in the last Congress, which indicate the government is actually wasting money by poorly administering the contracting out process.

Mr. President, I should also note that the Congress reformed one part of the A-76 process last year with an amendment to the Federal Employees' Retirement System Act of 1986. That amendment will require both contractors and Federal employees to include all retirement costs in contract bids to reflect actual costs. The change was suggested by OMB and seconded by the General Accounting Office [GAO]. I am hopeful this has helped to level the playing field and increase the likelihood that we will save, not waste, taxpayer dollars.

The bill we are introducing today makes a far more fundamental improvement in the contracting out system. We require savings generated by contracting out to be identified and returned to the Treasury for deficit reduction.

Mr. President, I will finish by noting that witnesses from the contractor industry testifying before the subcommittee in the 100th Congress suggested that this proposal might have a downside. While they generally supported the legislation, they suggested that allowing an agency to retain some of the contracting out savings would provide a necessary incentive to the agencies to explore contracting out opportunities. Eliminating the incentive, they theorize, might have the unintended effect of slowing down contracting out.

While it disturbs me to think that agencies need what some might call a payoff in order to save tax dollars, this is an issue that will receive further consideration in the subcommittee.

Mr. President, it is not the intent of this legislation to kill the A-76 program. The intention is to improve the process to ensure that expected savings become actual savings and that the quality of our Government is enhanced and not diminished.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bill and a section-by-section analysis of the bill be placed in the RECORD following my statement.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Commercial Activities Contracting Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. ACCOUNTING FOR SAVINGS RESULTING FROM FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CONTRACTING UNDER OMB CIRCULAR A-76.

(2) At the beginning of each fiscal year, the head of each executive agency shall determine the total amount saved by that executive agency as a result of converting during the preceding fiscal year to contractor performance any commercial activity which, during the preceding fiscal year—

(A) was previously performed by civilian employees of that executive agency; or

(B) was previously performed for or on behalf of that executive agency by members of the uniformed services.

(b) CIVILIAN EMPLOYEE SAVINGS.—(1) Whenever an executive agency converts to contractor performance any commercial activity, the total number of civilian employees authorized for that executive agency in the fiscal year in which the conversion takes place shall be reduced by the number of civilian employees of that executive agency required to perform that commercial activity on a full-time basis (including the full-time equivalent of the number of civilian employees of that executive agency required to perform such activity on less than a full-time basis).

(2) The Director of the Office of Management and Budget, after consulting with the head of the executive agency concerned, shall determine the amount of any reduction in the authorized number of civilian employees of that executive agency pursuant to paragraph (1).

(c) UNIFORMED SERVICES END STRENGTHS.—(1) Whenever an executive agency converts to contractor performance any commercial activity previously performed for or on behalf of that executive agency by members of a uniformed service, the end strength authorized for that uniformed service at the end of the fiscal year in which the conversion takes place shall be reduced by the number of members of that uniformed service required to perform that commercial activity on a full-time basis (including the full-time equivalent of the number of members of that uniformed service required to perform such activity on less than a full-time basis).

(2) The Secretary concerned shall determine the amount of any reduction in the authorized end strength of a uniformed service pursuant to paragraph (1).

SEC. 3. PARTICIPATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES IN DETERMINATIONS UNDER OMB A-76.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Each officer or employee of an executive agency responsible for determining under Office of Management and Budget Circular A-76 whether to convert to contractor performance any commercial activity of that executive agency—

(1) shall, at least monthly during the development and preparation of the performance work statement and the management efficiency study used in making that determination, consult with civilian employees of the executive agency who will be affected by that determination and consider the views of such employees on the development and preparation of that statement and that study; and

(2) may consult with such employees on other matters relating to that determination.

(b) CONSULTATION PROCEDURES.—(1) In the case of employees of an executive agency represented by a labor organization accorded exclusive recognition under section 7111 of title 5, United States Code, consultation with representatives of that labor organization shall satisfy the consultation requirement in subsection (a).

(c) REGULATIONS.—The Administrator of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy shall issue regulations to carry out this section. The regulations shall include provisions for the selection or designation of appropriate representatives of employees referred to in subsection (b)(2) for purposes of consultation required by subsection (a).

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) The term "executive agency" has the same meaning as is provided in section 4 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403).

(2) The term "Secretary concerned" has the same meaning as is provided in section 101 of title 37, United States Code.

(3) The term "uniformed service" means any of the uniformed services named in section 101 of title 37, United States Code.

COMMERCIAL ACTIVITIES CONTRACTING ACT OF 1989 (CACAL)—SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

Provides that the bill shall be referred to as "Commercial Activities Contracting Act of 1989" legislation.

The acronym to identify this bill will be "CACAL."

SECTION 2. ACCOUNTING FOR SAVINGS RESULTING FROM FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CONTRACTING UNDER OMB CIRCULAR A-76

Requires that all money savings as a result of OMB A/76 actions be returned to the Treasury. Also, any manpower positions saved will result in equivalent federal civilian and uniformed employee end strength reductions.

Some executive agencies do not turn back any money or manning positions saved after an A-76 action. Over the last five years, these contracting-out savings have amounted to over $500 million. Multiplying the yearly manpower savings (since a savings in manning is also a savings in the out years) the actual projected savings would be closer to $1.5 billion. The President's budget has never identified these additional dollars available for his agencies' use. This bill, by now requiring the monies and manning positions be returned, never technically affects the President's budget. Additionally, a loophole the executive branch has been using to avoid meeting Congressionally imposed caps on manning will be eliminated.

SECTION 3. PARTICIPATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES IN DETERMINATIONS UNDER OMB A-76

Employee participation in creating the government bid in any proposed contracting-out action is mandated. Employees are placed in a position to ensure the government's bid is the most cost-efficient and therefore, the most competitive that government can create.

OMB Circular A-76 allows minimal employee participation in the creation of the government's bid. However, as A-76 is currently applied, employees are realistically excluded from the process of creating the most efficient organization to compete with the contractors' bids. Government management often uses A-76 actions to fill their manning shortfalls rather than to try to create an efficient organization. They have no natural "advocacy", as industry does, to design a bid that will be the lowest and win. However, employees are "natural" advocates of a low and competitive bid. Their motivations are similar to contractors, since both are competing for their jobs. The bill, as written, includes employees in the process as far as possible without interfering with the strict rules of federal procurement.

SECTION 4. DEFINITIONS

"Executive agency", "secretary concerned" and "uniformed service" are defined in common legal terms.●

By Mr. HOLLINGS:

S. 401. A bill to exclude the Social Security trust funds from the deficit calculation and to extend the target date for Gramm-Rudman-Hollings until fiscal year 1997; to the Committees on the Budget and Governmental Affairs jointly, pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977.

SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUND SANCTITY ACT

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Social Security Preservation Act, a simple measure with an all important public purpose: To preserve the integrity of the Social Security trust fund by taking it off budget for purposes of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit calculations. In other words, this bill seeks to erect a Chinese wall to separate the Social Security surpluses from the day-to-day operating budget of the U.S. Government.

Mr. President, the Congressional Budget Office recently told us that the 1990 deficit will be $146 billion. Of course, CBO knows full well that the real deficit will be closer to $300 billion. The reality is that, in keeping with the monkeyshine budget practices of recent years, we will lop off some $135 billion of that nearly $300 billion total by ransacking the various Government trust funds to meet our current operating expenses.

The plundering of the Social Security trust fund is the most egregious example of this officially sanctioned ripoff. Good Americans are under the illusion that the hefty new Social Security payroll taxes they have paid since 1984 are being safely tucked away in a sacrosanct Social Security trust fund. The idea is that today's huge surpluses are to be set aside to pay for the baby boomers' retirement in the 21st century. Well, look again. Washington's dirty little secret is that the Social Security trust fund surpluses are being siphoned off today to mask the true scale of the Federal budget deficit. This year alone we will take $68 billion from the Social Security trust fund in order to meet current operating expenses of the Government.

All that remains in the ironically named "trust funds" are bookkeeping entries saying that the Treasury owes the fund x billion dollars. The sheriff who tries to collect on those debts in the year 2025 is truly going to have his work cut out for him.

In other words, Mr. President, we take the Social Security surplus each year, spend it on the deficit, and put an IOU in the Social Security trust fund. In later years when those IOU's are needed, the Government will have a simple choice: We will have to raise taxes drastically on working Americans—who will represent a shrinking percentage of our population in the next century—in order to repay the IOU's. Or we will have to drastically slash Social Security benefits for those future recipients.

Mr. President, either way, this is a gross breach of faith with the American people. The time has come to put Social Security truly in trust and totally off budget. We must stop playing budget games with the American people.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. ADAMS (for himself and Mr. GORTON):

S. 402. A bill to provide for the settlement of land claims of the Puyallup Tribe of Indians in the State of Washington, and for other purposes; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

PUYALLUP TRIBE OF INDIANS SETTLEMENT ACT

● Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am very pleased today to introduce legislation providing for the settlement of land claims of the Puyallup Tribe of Indians in the State of Washington.

This legislation authorizes performance of the Federal role outlined in an agreement developed last summer. This agreement, between the Puyallup Tribe of Indians, local governments in Pierce County, the State of Washington, the United States of America, and certain private property owners, is designed to settle outstanding land claims by the tribe. This settlement, which amounts to approximately $161 million, has been accepted by the tribe, the local governments in Pierce County, and the private property owners. It will become effective once it has been implemented at the State and Federal level.

The Federal role in this settlement involves several functions. One major function involves taking into trust for the tribe lands acquired through this settlement agreement. Another major function involves appropriating the $77.5 million that makes up the Federal share of this settlement. Let me explain to my colleagues why Federal implementation of this agreement is so important.

This settlement resolves longstanding tribal claims over lands in and around the city of Tacoma, the Port of Tacoma, and surrounding areas in Pierce County. The current state of affairs hurts both Indians and non-Indians. The Puyallup Tribe has been deprived for many years of much of their land base, and of full exercise of their treaty fishing rights. This is a longstanding injustice that must be made right.

At the same time, uncertainty over these land claims has created hardships for non-Indians. Private landowners have had clouds placed on the titles to their land. Corporations and municipalities have been uncertain about the impact of these claims on their plans for the future, thus curtailing economic growth.

This settlement marks the birth of an opportunity for Indians and non-Indians to work together for the common good of their region. That is why implementation of this settlement is so important. Without implementation, these claims will be resolved in court. Regardless of who wins and who loses on paper in that battle, both sides will pay enormous and unrecoverable costs during that struggle.

Instead, we can contribute through implementation of the settlement to the economic growth of the entire community. Just as the current situation has hurt both Indians and non-Indians, this settlement promises economic opportunity for everyone. The Port of Tacoma will be able to continue its amazingly successful development free of concerns caused by legal claims against its property. Municipalities like the city of Tacoma can plan for the economic well-being of all citizens in an atmosphere free of legal uncertainty and animosity.

As for the Puyallup Tribe, this settlement gives the tribe resources and economic incentives to help develop a strong and viable economic base for the future. This settlement will enable the tribe to enlarge its land base by placing new lands in trust status. It will increase opportunities for employment for tribal members. It will increase the tribe's abilities to provide health and social service to its members. Furthermore, it will enhance the tribe's ability to play a vital role as a strong partner in the overall economic development of the region as a whole.

Finally, this settlement benefits the community as a whole by developing mechanisms for cooperation between the tribe and its neighbors on a government-to-government basis. As the tribe and surrounding communities grow together, cooperation will be essential on issues such as land use matters, environmental concerns, navigation conflicts, fisheries management, and flood control. Through mechanisms established by this agreement, the cooperative spirit embodied in this settlement will become an enduring legacy for the future.

I want to make it clear that this is not just a local or State matter. Under the doctrine of the trust responsibility, the U.S. Government has an obligation to assist tribes in maintaining or reclaiming lands or rights secured by treaties or other agreements with United States. The United States bears some of the burden of responsibility for the unhappy history of this issue, and the divisions that have been caused in the community. It is only proper that the United States bear some of the burden of helping to make things whole.

Finally, Mr. President, I must commend two of my colleagues for the tremendous leadership they have shown on this issue. Both Senator INOUYE, the distinguished chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, and Congressman DICKS, my good friend from Washington State, have put their hearts and souls into helping this settlement become a reality. Without them, we would not be where we are today, and I thank both of them very much.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD as if read in full.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 402

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Puyallup Tribe of Indians Settlement Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that:

(1) It is the policy of the United States, in executing the Constitution and fulfilling its trust responsibility to Indian tribes, to promote tribal self-determination and economic self-sufficiency and to support the resolution of disputes over historical claims through settlements mutually agreed to by Indian and non-Indian parties.

(2) Disputes over certain land claims of the Puyallup Tribe and other matters, including—

(A) ownership of the Commencement Bay tidelands and areas of former Puyallup Riverbed, Treaty Reservation, or intended reservation boundaries,

(B) railroad and other rights-of-way,

(C) control of fisheries resource and habitat,

(D) jurisdiction over law enforcement, environment, navigation, and authority and control in the areas of land use,

(E) business regulation and zoning, have resulted in difficult community relations and negative economic impacts affecting both the Tribe and non-Indian parties.

(3) The United States Government through acts of omission and commission, and through inconsistent policies, contributed significantly to the historical events that have led to the disputed claims that have preceded the present settlement between the Puyallup Tribe of Indians, city of Tacoma, city of Fife, city of Puyallup, Pierce County, Port of Tacoma, State of Washington, and certain private interests and property owners.

(4) Some of the significant historical events that led to the present circumstances include—

(A) the negotiation of the Treaty of Medicine Creek in December 1854, by the Puyallup Indians and others, ceded most of their territories but reserved certain lands and rights, including fishing rights;

(B) the Executive Order of 1857 creating the Puyallup Indian Reservation;

(C) the Executive Order of 1873, clarifying and extending the Puyallup Reservation in the Washington Territory;

(D) the March 11, 1891 Report of the Puyallup Indian Commission on allotments and the 1896 report by a second Puyallup Indian Commission describing the problems with sales of allotted lands; and

(E) the 1909 District Court for Tacoma decision of United States of America against J.M. Ashton and the 1910 Supreme Court decision of United States of America against J.M. Ashton.

(5) In the recent history of these affairs, certain events have occurred of significance preceding the finalization of the present agreement, including—

(A) a July 1981 United States district court ruling, Puyallup Tribe against Port of Tacoma, affecting the former riverbed;

(B) an August 1983 decision by the Ninth United States Circuit Court of Appeals upholding the 1981 United States district ruling;

(C) the beginning of negotiations in August 1984 between the Puyallup Tribe and a newly formed non-Indian negotiating team, leading to a first settlement offer to the Tribe on March 1, 1985, and rejected by the Tribal Council;

(D) a new settlement offer reached in principle by all parties was defeated in a vote by the Tribal membership on February 8, 1986; and

(E) new negotiations began leading to the successful development of a settlement agreement, approved by the Puyallup Tribal membership on August 27, 1988.

(6) It is recognized that both Indian and non-Indian parties enter into this settlement to resolve certain problems and claims and to derive certain benefits:

(A) It is the view of the Puyallup Tribe that historical injustices have been imposed upon its members through actions by Federal, State, local, and private entities. The Tribe enters into the settlement not as a means to completely redress past injustices, but as a responsible action to ensure a positive future for its members. The Tribe further recognizes that the economic benefits that are provided in the settlement, including payments to its members, funds to address Tribal human needs, funds to start business enterprises and job assistance, and land conveyances will enhance the prospects of Tribal economic stability and self-sufficiency. It is further recognized by the Tribe that jurisdiction over existing and future trust lands, the ability to place additional lands into trust, and the retention of existing treaty rights will have positive impacts upon the future of its members.

(B) It is the view of the non-Indian parties that historical land claims and disputes carried to the present day have been injurious to the development and growth of the affected communities and has inhibited business interests and the creation of jobs in the area. The non-Indian parties further assert that land and jurisdictional disputes that are subject to lengthy litigation cannot serve the interests of the public or the future of the community and believe that it is best for all parties affected to take actions to remove such disputes as an impediment to future success. The non-Indian community believes that the provisions of the settlement, through agreement, cooperation, and clarification of issues, serve to enhance property values, stimulate economic investment, promote port development, permit local governments to engage in long-term community planning, and provide a pragmatic framework for the positive resolution of future conflicts.

(7) There is a recognition that any final resolution of pending disputes through a process of litigation would take many years and entail great expense to all parties; continue economically and socially damaging controversies; prolong uncertainty as to the access, ownership, and jurisdictional status of issues in question; and seriously impair long-term economic planning and development for all parties.

(8) To advance the goals of Federal Indian policy and to fulfill the trust responsibility of the United States to the community, and to advance the Federal policy of international trade and economic development, and in recognition of the Federal policy of settling these conflicts through comprehensive settlement agreements, it is appropriate that the United States participate in the implementation of the agreement and contribute funds for such purpose.

(b) PURPOSE.—Therefore, it is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to approve, ratify, and confirm the agreement entered into by the non-Indian settlement parties and the Puyallup Tribe of Indians,

(2) to authorize and direct the Secretary to execute and perform such agreement, and

(3) to authorize the actions and appropriations necessary for the United States to fulfill its legal and trust obligations to the community as provided in the settlement agreement and this Act.

SEC. 3. RESOLUTION OF PUYALLUP TRIBAL LAND CLAIMS.

(a) RELINQUISHMENT.—In accordance with the Settlement Agreement and in return for the land and other benefits derived from the Settlement Agreement and this Act, the Tribe, and the United States as trustee for the Tribe and its members, relinquish all claims to any land, present or former tidelands, submerged lands, mineral claims, and nonfisheries water rights connected with such relinquished land, known or unknown, within the State of Washington, subject to the exceptions referred to in subsection (b)

(b) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN LANDS.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to the following:

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to introduce, along with my colleague from Washington State, Senator BROCK ADAMS, the Puyallup Tribe of Indians Settlement Act of 1989.

The legislation which we have introduced today is a result of several years of negotiations between the Puyallup Indians in Washington State and representatives from the State, local, and Federal Governments. It will implement an agreement approved by the Puyallup Indian Nation on August 27, 1988. The agreement resolves longstanding disputes of tribal claims involving properties in and around Tacoma, the Port of Tacoma, and surrounding localities in Pierce County in Washington State.

Preceding this settlement, the Puyallup Tribe's relationship with the local community was largely determined by a series of court actions. While some issues, chiefly involving fishing rights, were settled by litigation, the potential for further claims and litigation remained. These claims, involving prime, downtown land within the heart of the city and port will be resolved by this settlement. Additional claims, against private property owners, will also be resolved.

The legislation which we are introducing today is the Federal component of the overall settlement agreement. It provides $77.5 million, less than half of the overall settlement amount. The funds will support various economic development initiatives, infrastructure improvements, employment opportunities, and social service programs for the Puyallup Tribe. It will also provide a trust fund that will be divided among the individual members of the tribe.

In light of the Federal Government's trust fund responsibility to the tribe and because of past Federal actions that unduly deprived the tribe of much of their land base, I ask from my colleagues support for this legislation. It is a carefully crafted, fair agreement that resulted from the hard work and literally years of perseverance of the affected parties. The task of resolving historical claims was an immense one. But what has emerged is not only a fine settlement package, but perhaps even more importantly, is the basis for a new partnership for the future among all members of our community. We will no longer stand divided, we are neighbors working together for the common good. I am proud to introduce this legislation, and I commend all of the parties for their outstanding work on the settlement.●

S. 403. A bill to authorize an amendment to a certain repayment contract for the Jensen Unit, Central Utah Project, with the Uintah Water Conservancy District, Utah, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

REPAYMENT CONTRACT FOR THE JENSEN UNIT, UTAH

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I rise with my colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH, to introduce legislation which will resolve an existing problem associated with the Jensen Unit of the Central Utah Project.

As every member of this body will recall, the atmosphere of the 1970's and early 1980's was one of near hysteria as the OPEC oil cartel used its clout to push oil prices up to levels never before achieved in history. A cost of $35 per barrel of oil was the rule of the day. It was in this environment that the Federal Government established Project Independence and through the Bureau of Reclamation, pushed local officials in the Uintah Basin in Utah to build a large capacity water project in order to accommodate energy development.

As you know, Mr. President, the States of Utah and Colorado contain oil shale deposits which, when converted to oil, exceed the known reserves in Saudi Arabia. Utah alone contains over 90 percent of the Nation's known reserves of tar sands. So, the water storage and delivery systems of the Jensen Unit of the Uintah Basin were constructed in response to Project Independence and the congressional enactment of the Energy Security Act of 1980 in anticipation of a synthetic fuels production boom.

After the facilities were constructed, the boom became a bust. Local residents left the area in droves. It became impossible for the local Uintah Water Conservancy District to repay the Federal Government for the full cost of municipal and industrial [M&I] water supply.

On September 19, 1988, the Uintah Water Conservancy District completed negotiations with the United States Bureau of Reclamation on an amendatory contract which recognizes reality and allows the district to contract for the water it can afford while reserving the remaining M&I water to the United States.

In the event the price of oil returns to its previous high levels and synthetic fuel development becomes viable, the Government can then easily utilize the provisions of the amendatory contract and the local water entity will likely be able to purchase the available unmarketed water.

I am aware of legislation which passed the 100th Congress on behalf of the town of Minot, ND, which resolved a similar problem and inequity force upon the town because of actions taken by the Federal Government.

I would hope the Congress will act quickly to approve this legislation recognizing that without it, the Federal Government will receive no return on its investment and the taxpayers would lose their investment as well.

I am including an explanation of the provisions of the amendatory contract in the RECORD as part of my statement, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and explanation were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 403

Be in enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to enter into Amendatory Contract No. 6-05-01-00143, as last revised on September 19, 1988, between the United States and the Uintah Water Conservancy District, which provides, among other things, for part of the municipal and industrial water obligation now the responsibility of the Uintah Water Conservancy District to be retained by the United States with a corresponding part of the water supply to be controlled and marketed by the United States. Such waters shall not be marketed outside the boundaries of the State of Utah and shall be used in conformance with Utah State law.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISIONS OF AMENDATORY CONTRACT NO. 6-05-01-00143, AS LAST REVISED ON SEPTEMBER 19, 1988

The primary terms and conditions set forth in the proposed amendatory contract are outlined below.

Article 2 describes the "Purposes and Objectives" of the amendatory contract. The Uintah Water Conservancy District (the District) contracted for 2,000 acre-feet of municipal and industrial water. The remaining 4,000 acre-feet of project water presently developed by constructed project facilities is reserved for marketing by the United States, but may be acquired by the District or sold by the United States to third parties outside the District's marketing area with the District having the right of first refusal.

Article 4 amends the "Terms of Repayment" article of the original repayment contract. Subarticle (c) defines the repayment amount for the first 2,000 acre-feet of municipal and industrial water. It is based on the per acre-foot cost allocated to municipal and industrial water (18,000 acre-feet) for all project costs expended through December 31, 1987, plus the estimated cost of Burns Pumping Plant indexed to January 1, 1988. The proportionate cost for 2,000 acre-feet was amortized over 49 years. The anticipated cost of Burns Pumping Plant was included in the pricing mechanism to establish a consistent price for present water repayment arrangements and future repayment amounts.

The price for any of the additional 4,000 acre-feet of water presently developed will be based on the same per acre-foot cost as the initial 2,000 acre-foot block, plus the per acre-foot cost allocated to municipal and industrial water expended on the project after December 31, 1987. The District will be allowed to acquire any portion of the remaining water or granted the right of first refusal on any bona fide offer acceptable to the United States made by a third party.

The annual payments for the project water taken from the United States portion of the 4,000 acre-feet will include the per acre-foot amount of the original 2,000 acre-feet, times the 49 years in the payout period, divided by the number of years remaining between the year of acquisition and 2037. This will recover the principal and interest as if the water were all acquired today. In addition, the costs expended after December 31, 1987, will be added to the per acre-foot value determined above.

In the event Burns Pumping Plant is constructed to develop the additional municipal and industrial water, the District may acquire portions of said water based on the annual per acre-foot cost to develop the water to be sold under the terms based on Reclamation law existing at the time of acquisition. If the United States has an opportunity to sell any of the 12,000 acre-feet of municipal and industrial water to third parties outside the District's marketing area, the district will be allowed the right of first refusal of any bona fide offer.

Article 6 changes the terms for disposal of project water by the United States to give flexibility to establish the price on a case-by-case determination and to allow use of water on a temporary basis for municipal and industrial use or irrigation at the discretion of the United States.

Article 7 specifies the adjusted amounts of irrigation and municipal and industrial water the District is required to deliver to their petitioners. The quantity of municipal and industrial water and potential increases as the demand develops in the District's marketing area or as sales are made to third parties is consistent with the repayment agreements.

Article 8 which deals with operations and maintenance of project works, utilizes language from our standard article with the exception of subarticle (a), which excludes the transfer of recreation and specific fish and wildlife facilities which will be transferred to State of Utah Agencies rather than the Contractor; and subarticle (e), which deletes the last portion of the paragraph stating "or the United States required under this contract regardless of who performs those duties. The article also includes subarticle (i), which was also in the original contract. It also adds subarticle (j), which addresses the payment of operation and maintenance expenses incurred by third party purchases; and subarticle (k), which covers a portion of expense that could be incurred with extraordinary operation and maintenance that results in a significant failure of major project works under periods of special stress. The United States will be responsible for two-thirds of the expense initially. The expense will be reduced proportionately as more project water is obtained by the District or third parties.

Article 9 addresses the emergency reserve fund. Subparagraph (b) was modified to remove the inclusion of interest as part of the build-up or the continue to be retained to increase the reserve fund after the basic amount is accumulated. Subarticle (f) was also modified to exclude the reference to accumulated interest as a component of the emergency reserve fund.●

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself and Mr. MURKOWSKI):

S. 404. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to extend certain Department of Veterans' Affairs home loan guaranty program provisions; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS HOME LOAN GUARANTY PROGRAM PROVISIONS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am pleased to introduce today with my good friend from Alaska, the ranking minority member of the committee, Senator MURKOWSKI, S. 404, which would provide 2-year extensions of two statutory provisions—the 1-percent fee on Veterans' Administration-guaranteed home loans and of the statutory formula—known as the no-bid formula—governing whether the VA acquires properties at liquidation sales. Both of these provisions have sunset dates of September 30, 1989.

Mr. President, section 1829 of title 38, United States Code, provides for the collection of a 1-percent fee on those receiving a housing loan guaranteed, insured, or made by the VA. The fee, previously one-half of 1 percent was increased to 1 percent by section 2512(a) of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 [DEFRA] (Public Law 98-369).

The administration strongly supports extending—and indeed increasing the amount to 3.8 percent—the VA loan fee.

Although I have reservations regarding the imposition of a fee on what I am committed to preserving as a benefit program, unfortunately, the significant financial problems now facing the VA home loan program, in combination with the towering Federal deficits which are a burden on all taxpayers and all Government programs, require that we continue at least for the next 2 years the 1-percent fee on VA-guaranteed loans. The fee generates approximately $1 million per day in revenues to the Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund.

Section 1816(c) of title 38, also enacted in the DEFRA, establishes the "no-bid formula" for determining whether the VA acquires, or does not acquire, at a liquidation sale the property securing a VA-guaranteed loan that is in default.

Mr. President, the formula governing VA acquisition of properties securing loans being foreclosed has been in effect for over 4 years and provides principles, generally well-known throughout the housing and banking industries, by which the VA must abide. I believe that these provisions—with revisions which were enacted on December 21, 1987, in Public Law 100-198, based on legislation which Senator MURKOWSKI and I authored, but which, unfortunately, have not yet been implemented by the VA—establish fair and cost-effective guidelines governing the VA's acquisition of foreclosed properties and should be extended.

For further background on these provisions, I refer my colleagues to our committee's report on S. 1801 (S. Rept. 100-204).

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill we are introducing be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF HOME LOAN GUARANTY FEE.

Section 1829(c) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking out "1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "1991".

SEC. 2. EXTENSION OF "NO-BID" FORMULA FOR DEFAULT PROCEDURES.

Section 1816(c)(11) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking out "1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "1991".

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. MATSUNAGA):

S. 405. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to require the Department of Veterans' Affairs to conduct a program providing community-based residential treatment for homeless chronically mentally ill veterans and to authorize the inclusion of certain other chronically mentally ill veterans in such program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

HOMELESS AND OTHER CHRONICALLY MENTALLY ILL VETERANS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am introducing today, along with Senators DECONCINI and MATSUNAGA, a bill to require, during fiscal years 1990 through 1992, the Department of Veterans' Affairs [VA] to conduct a program furnishing, in VA or contract facilities, residential community-based care to homeless chronically mentally ill veterans, and authorize the VA to include in the program the furnishing of such care to certain other chronically mentally ill veterans. This bill would, in effect, provide for a 3-year extension of the VA's highly successful Homeless Chronically Mentally Ill [HCMI] Program, codify the program in title 38 of the United States Code, and remove its designation as a pilot program. Our bill would likewise extend for 3 years the authority to include in the program veterans who have service-connected chronic mental illness disabilities and chronically mentally ill veterans who are receiving VA hospital or nursing home care. It would also expand this discretionary authority to include chronically mentally ill veterans with service-connected disabilities rated at 50 percent or more; who were included in the original program enacted in 1987.

The HCMI Program was first authorized in 1987 under section 2 of Public Law 100-6 as a contract authority. In 1988, under section 115 of Public Law 100-322, the Veterans' Benefits and Services Act of 1988, the contract authority was replaced by a requirement for the VA to conduct in fiscal years 1988 and 1989 a pilot program for homeless chronically mentally ill veterans and an authority for the agency to include in the program veterans with service-connected chronic mental illness disabilities and chronically mentally ill VA hospital and nursing home patients. Through the HCMI Program, in combination with the special homeless veteran domiciliary-bed program, which was fully authorized in Public Law 100-322, the VA has provided shelter and medical and psychiatric treatment for over 11,000 homeless veterans who are in desperate need of such help.

In section 801 of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments Act of 1988, $15 million was authorized to be appropriated (in addition to any funds appropriated pursuant to any other authorization) for each of fiscal years 1989 and 1990 for the furnishing of care and services to homeless veterans under the current program authority in section 115 of Public Law 100-322. Our bill would replace the reference in section 801 of the 1988 McKinney law with a reference to the proposed new section 620C of title 38. It is our expectation that any future extension of the McKinney authorities would include appropriate authorizations of appropriations for the furnishing of services to homeless veterans under this new section.

Finally, Mr. President, our bill would require the Secretary of Veterans' Affairs to submit, not later than February 1, 1992, to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs' of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the experience of the Department under this bill and the recommendation of the Secretary—together with the reasons for such recommendation—as to whether the program should be continued.

The Need: The plight of homeless persons is a national disgrace that has increasingly become a focus of attention. Recent estimates suggest that each night approximately 750,000 individuals are homeless, and that in the course of a year, between 1.3 and 2 million people will find themselves out on the street, without a home. The U.S. Conference of Mayors reported in 1987 that most cities estimate increases in the number of homeless persons of 15 to 50 percent each year. These numbers reflect a most urgent problem.

Of those who are homeless, approximately 33 percent have been described as being chronically mentally ill. The reasons for this high representation of mentally ill individuals among the homeless are generally perceived to be the failure of the public mental health and social welfare systems to provide care and support for these vulnerable people combined with the decline over the last 15 years in availability of low-cost housing and the concurrent decline in the availability of public support payments.

Veterans make up approximately 29 percent of the adult male population of the United States and it seems clear that no less a percentage of veterans exist in the homeless population. Various surveys put the percentage of veterans in the homeless population between 18 and 51 percent. Using these estimates, between 135,500 and 382,000 veterans, many of whom are chronically mentally ill, are currently homeless.

The HCMI Program: The community-based program for homeless chronically mentally ill veterans combines aggressive outreach with health services, intensive case management and time-limited care in non-VA residential treatment centers. The results from the program have been very encouraging. The second annual report detailing the progress of the HCMI Program was submitted to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs on January 17, 1989. It reveals that, in the first 11 months of the program, operations in 43 VA Medical Centers in 26 States—including 5 sites in California—and the District of Columbia were able to assess 10,524 veterans and place 2,125 of them in residential treatment facilities. Given the difficult nature of contacting these veterans—in soup kitchens and shelters, on the streets, and under bridges—and of building trust between the veteran and the outreach worker, which is so very necessary to make an assessment and provide for physical and mental examinations, the numbers involved demonstrate a tremendous success on the part of the outreach workers, and consequently on the part of the program itself.

Mr. President, I'd like to take a moment to thank all of those individuals who have been so very deeply involved in this program and who have given their all to it—especially those tireless, dedicated outreach workers, some of them former homeless veterans themselves, without whom this program could not have worked—for all of the sweat, tears, and heart they have put into this program. I know I speak for every American who is concerned about and saddened by the plight of homeless people when I say thank you to all of these enormously dedicated, compassionate individuals for caring.

Mr. President, to further honor these and the other individuals who are thanked in the acknowledgment contained in the HCMI report for their efforts, I ask unanimous consent that that acknowledgment be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I also wish to congratulate and thank the Director of the VA's Mental Health and Behavioral Sciences Service, Dr. Paul Errera, whose vision, inspirational leadership, and dedication have been crucial to the program.

Mr. President, the assessments given veterans under this program clearly show that the program is reaching those it was intended to reach—long-term homeless, extremely poor, chronically mentally ill veterans. Here are the figures from the VA's January 1989 report: Over 30 percent of those assessed had been homeless for 1 or more years; average total income for the 30 days prior to assessment was $228; and 38.1 percent reported having been hospitalized in the past for a general psychiatric problem, 51.6 percent manifested one or more severe psychiatric symptoms, and 97.3 percent of the 47 percent who were given psychiatric examinations from the HCMI program received at least one psychiatric or substance abuse diagnosis.

Preliminary data about the outcome of treatment in community-based residential treatment is available for 1,356 episodes of treatment and for 638 veterans involved in the follow-up evaluation. Of those discharged from residential treatment programs, 25.6 percent were judged to have successfully completed the program, 32.7 percent left against medical advice, and 20.5 percent were discharged for violation of program regulations—often for using drugs or drinking. In 10.6 percent of the cases, the veterans left to obtain more intensive medical or psychiatric treatment elsewhere.

Not surprisingly, given that the need for ongoing care is the rule rather than the exception in the care of chronically mentally ill persons, the clinicians determined that, at the time of discharge, about half of the veterans had shown improvement but were in need of additional treatment, while only 1 to 8 percent had improved to the point of needing no further treatment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the executive summary of "Reaching Out: The Second Progress Report on the VA HCMI Veterans Program" be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks prior to the Acknowlegment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is ordered.

CONCLUSION

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, this bill would accomplish several important objectives. By removing the pilot program designation, we would be recognizing the success of the program and the ongoing need of these veterans. Additionally, in practical terms, it would allow the VA to offer term or career positions, complete with employee fringe benefits, to those individuals working in the program. I understand that there is a high burnout rate of outreach workers and others working with homeless veterans and that it is difficult to find replacements, due in part to the lack of job security and lack of benefits. I believe that the combination of the recognition of a job well-done and the opportunity for employment with health-insurance and other benefits will have a very positive effect on the recruitment and retention of the professionals and other personnel involved in this program.

Mr. President, I urge all of my colleagues to give their support to this measure, which will be of such great benefit to veterans who answered our Nation's call in its hour of need and who now find themselves in such great need of this assistance.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be inserted in the RECORD at this point, before the other documents which I have asked to be inserted.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. COMMUNITY-BASED RESIDENTIAL CARE FOR HOMELESS AND CERTAIN OTHER CHRONICALLY MENTALLY ILL VETERANS.

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall conduct a program to furnish care and treatment and rehabilitative services (directly or by contract) in halfway houses, therapeutic communities, psychiatric residential treatment centers, and other community-based treatment facilities to homeless veterans suffering from chronic mental illness disabilities who are eligible for care under section 610(a)(1) of this title.

"(2) As part of the program, the Secretary may also provide such care and treatment and rehabilitative services—

"(A) to veterans with service-connected chronic mental illness disabilities;

"(c) The Secretary may provide in-kind assistance (through the services of Department of Veterans Affairs employees and the sharing of other Department resources) to a non-Department facility described in subsection (a)(1) of this section which is furnishing care and services to veterans under this section. Any such in-kind assistance shall be provided under a contract between the Department and such facility. The Secretary may provide such assistance only for use solely in the furnishing of appropriate care and services under this subsection and only if, under such contract, the Department receives reimbursement for the full cost of such assistance, including the cost of services and supplies and normal depreciation and amortization of equipment. Such reimbursement may be made by reduction in the charges to the United States or by payment to the United States. Any funds received through such reimbursement shall be credited to funds allotted to the Department facility that provided the assistance.

"(d) The Secretary may not furnish care and treatment and rehabilitative services under subsection (a) of this section after September 30, 1992.

"(e) Not later than February 1, 1992, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans Affairs' of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the experience of the Department under this section and the recommendation of the Secretary (together with the reasons for such recommendation) as to whether the program should be continued.

"(f) The authority of the Secretary to enter into contracts under this section shall be effective for any fiscal year only to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 620B the following new item:

"620C. Community-based residential care for homeless and other chronically mentally ill veterans."

SEC. 2. CONFORMING AMENDMENT.

Section 801(c) of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-628; 102 Stat. 3257) is amended by striking out "section 115 of the Veterans Benefits and Services Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-322; 102 Stat. 501)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 620C of title 38, United States Code,".

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

At the time when the Homeless Chronically Mentally Ill Veterans Program began, in May of 1987, its prospects for the future were slim indeed. It had only a few months of funding ahead of it and virtually no prospect of funding for the future. Undaunted by these odds, VA professionals across the country rolled up their sleeves and began to create this program, believing that if they could bring a national program for homeless veterans to life, the importance of the work they had undertaken would be recognized. So far, they appear to have been correct in both their personal conviction and in their prognostication. It has been an honor to work with so many committed people from so many different parts of the country on this project.

We would like to thank Laurent Lehmann MD, Gay Koerber MA and Robert Murphy of the Mental Health and Behavioral Sciences Services, VACO for their tireless work on behalf of the both the HCMI Program and its evaluation; and Virginia Emond, Lemuel Retamar, Lynn Gorchav, Sharon Medak, Linda Corwell, Pam Gott, Louis Massari, Vera Ratliff and Karen Arena of NEPEC for essential support in many ways. Boris Astrachan MD, of the Yale Department of Psychiatry has been an invaluable advisor and mentor throughout this evaluation, and Norman Browne, Medical Center Director at the West Haven VAMC, has been consistently helpful and supportive of our efforts. Philip Leaf PhD and Robert Milstein MD PhD have helped shape this evaluation from the beginning.

We would especially like to express our gratitude for the cooperation and efforts of the site coordinators, outreach clinicians and data managers at the 43 Sites and of the evaluation assistants at the 9 follow-up sites. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

1. INTRODUCTION AND GOALS OF THIS REPORT

During the past decade, the care of the homeless mentally ill has emerged as a major public health challenge. Survey studies have suggested that between 18% and 51% of the homeless are veterans and that a significant percentage of homeless veterans served during the Vietnam Era. In May 1987, the Veterans Administration established the Homeless Chronically Mentally Ill (HCMI) Veterans Program, a program of community outreach, health care service, residential treatment and case management. Operating at 43 VA medical centers located in 26 states and the District of Columbia, this program has served 10,524 homeless veterans and placed 2,124 of them in residential treatment facilities during the first 11 months of operation, from May 1987 to March 31, 1988.

2. THE SIX STAGES OF THE HCMI VETERANS PROGRAM

The HCMI Veterans Program provides a comprehensive range of services to homeless veterans across the country. It is composed of six clinical stages:

(1) outreach in the community;

(2) intake assessment of problems and determination of immediate clinical needs;

(3) psychiatric and medical examinations and comprehensive psychosocial assessment;

(4) initiation of treatment, both directly by HCMI clinicians and through referral or linkage with other providers;

(5) residential treatment through contracts with non-VA community providers; and

(6) ongoing case management services.

3. EVALUATION PROCEDURES

The evaluation of the HCMI Program, conducted by the VA Northeast Program Evaluation Center (NEPEC) is primarily based on clinical data forms completed by HCMI clinicians and consists of three evaluation components: (1) an implementation study; (2) a follow-up evaluation component; and (3) a program monitoring system. This evaluation report has been prepared pursuant to Public Law 100-322.

4. PROGRAM STRUCTURE

The HCMI Veterans Program was established by Public Law 100-6, on February 12, 1987, and funded with $5 million for the last 6 months of Fiscal Year (FY) 1987. It was extended through FY 1988 and FY 1989 by Public Law 100-71 and Public Law 100-322, and funded with $12.5 million for FY 1988.

The 43 sites are distributed across all 7 VA Regions, and are located in 41 cities, in 26 states and the District of Columbia. HCMI sites exist in cities whose Standardized Metropolitan Statistical Areas (SMSAs) range in population from under 100,000 to over 9,000,000.

The program was put into operation within four months of its authorization by Congress and recruited over 80 clinicians, most of whom are social workers and nurses, many of whom had previously worked in VA mental health programs. By June, 1988, the 43 sites had established residential treatment contracts with 184 residential treatment facilities.

5. DESCRIPTION OF VETERANS SEEN IN THE HCMI VETERANS PROGRAM

Socio-Demographic Characteristics. Veterans assessed at intake (N=10,524) were, on average, 43 years old; 98.6% male and 1.4% female. They were 58.3% white, 33.6% black and 6.7% hispanic. Altogether 12.5% were service connected: 4.6% for a psychiatric condition and 8.6% for a medical condition. Six percent received non-service connected pensions and 42.7% received some form of VA or non-VA public support. HCMI Program veterans were younger, more often black and more often service connected than veterans in the general population.

Among those who received detailed psychosocial assessments (N=3701), only 3.6% are married, with 62.8% separated, widowed or divorced and 33.6% who had never married. Just under 80% had completed 12 years of education and 44.6% had worked at skilled manual jobs or better, higher levels of personal accomplishment and past social adjustment than are found among most other homeless populations. While 64.3% had worked at least part-time during the previous three years, only 10.5% had worked for more than 10 days during the 30 days prior to assessment. Mean income during the prior 30 days was a meager $228 (median = $90).

Homelessness. At the time of intake assessment, 83.1% were either living in shelters for the homeless or had no identifiable residence at all, while 9.2% were living intermittently with family or friends and 7.7% had a room or apartment. One-quarter (24.9%) had been homeless for less than 1 month; 43.1% for 1 month to 11 months; 10.8% for 1-2 years and 21.2% for more than two years.

Military History. Among HCMI veterans, 10.6% had served during World War II; 13.4% during the Korean era; 51.7% during the Vietnam era and 25.2% in non-combat eras. In comparison to the general veteran population, smaller percentages of HCMI veterans served in the World War II and Korean eras and greater percentages served in the Vietnam era. These contrasts are thought to reflect the fact that homeless veterans are younger than other veterans (median age=40 years in the HCMI Program vs. 53.9 years for all veterans) and are not due to Vietnam Era service per se. Altogether 30.8% claimed to have received combat pay during military service; 30.2% claimed to have been fired upon in a combat zone and 1.5% claimed to have been prisioners of war.

Involvement with the Criminal Justice System. The social marginality of these veterans was also evident in the fact that almost half of those who received psychosocial assessments (48.1%) had been in prison, 17.5% for a year or more and 8.6% for three years or more.

Substance Abuse. Over half of HCMI veterans manifested problems with substance abuse. At the time of intake assessment, 49.2% of HCMI veterans either claimed themselves or were observed to have problems with alcohol and 16.7% had problems with drugs. Almost half (44.2%) had been hospitalized in the past for an alcohol problem and 15.4% for a drug problem. On psychiatric examination (N=4,984) 55.2% were diagnosed with alcohol dependence or abuse and 18.3% with drug dependence or abuse.

Non-Substance Abuse General Psychiatric Problems. Among those assessed at intake, 38.1% reported that they had been hospitalized in the past for a general psychiatric problem and 51.6% manifested one or more severe psychiatric symptoms. Almost half (47%) received psychiatric examinations from the HCMI Veterans Program. On these examinations 97.3% received at least one psychiatric or substance abuse diagnosis as follows:

	Percent
Alcohol dependence/abuse	55.2
Drug dependence/abuse	18.3
Schizophrenia	12.3
PTSD	9.3
Affective disorder	9.3
Adjustment disorder	8.1
Bipolar disorder	4.7
Substance induced: Organic mental disorders	3.2
Anxiety disorder	2.3
Organic brain syndrome	2.2
Other psychosis	2.0
Any axis II diagnosis	18.3
Axis I or axis II diagnosis	97.3

Overall, of the 10,524 veterans assessed at intake, 79.9% had either a general psychiatric or a substance abuse problem.

Medical Disorders. Although the HCMI Program is a mental health program, many veterans seen in this program have significant medical problems. Of those assessed at intake, 45.8% felt they had a serious medical problem. Twenty-nine per cent of these veterans had further medical examinations (N=3,115). Of those who had examinations, 87.7% had a diagnosed illness, 59.6% had an illness requiring outpatient treatment and 14.6% had an illness requiring inpatient treatment.

Combined Health Care Problems. Co-morbidity was common among these veterans. Among those assessed at intake who had evidence of a general psychiatric problem, 50.8% also had an alcohol problem, 19.4% also had a drug problem and 65.9% also had a medical problem. Veterans with alcohol problems were 2.49 times as likely to have drug problems, and almost 1.5 times as likely to have medical problems as those without alcohol problems.

Recent Health Care Service Use. Health care service use was determined for 3,701 HCMI veterans who had psychosocial assessments. Only twenty-two percent of these veterans more than three outpatient visits at VA mental health or medical outpatient clinics during the previous six months (8.1% at mental health or alcohol outpatient clinics) and one-fourth (26.4%) had been hospitalized for a psychiatric or substance abuse problem at a VA facility during those 6 months. These data indicate that while the HCMI Program is reaching out to many veterans who have not made use of the VA, it is also providing care to homeless veterans who have previously used VA outpatient and inpatient services in an effort to curtail their homelessness and health problems.

6. CLINICAL PROCESS: OUTREACH AND ASSESSMENT

Outreach, to shelters and soup kitchens, as well as in the streets, is central to building therapeutic rapport and facilitating access to services for homeless chronically mentally ill veterans. A total of 56.8% of all intake assessments were initiated through community outreach by HCMI clinicians. An additional 12.2% were referred to the HCMI Program by non-VA outreach workers and 24.5% either came to the VA on their own or were referred from other VA programs. Almost half (47.0%) of the intake interview assessments were conducted in community settings.

Overall 47.4% of the 10,524 veterans assessed at intake had subsequent psychiatric examinations and 29.6% had medical examinations. In view of the fact that the homeless are often difficult to engage, these percentages are quite impressive. The lack of equipment, examination space and trained personnel in community outreach settings are the main reasons for the smaller percentage of medical examinations. Experience in the HCMI Veterans Program has confirmed the impression that outreach and assertive advocacy are essential to obtaining health care services for many of the homeless mentally ill.

7. CLINICAL PROCESS: INITIATING TREATMENT AND ONGOING CASE MANAGEMENT

The process of treatment in the HCMI program is being closely studied in a follow-up evaluation at 9 of the 43 sites. Case management activities that involve making referrals to resources (84.9%), developing treatment plans (76.0%), establishing a basic relationship in the face of the veteran's distrust (58.1%) and actively monitoring the use of services (51.7%) were those most often used to describe treatment relationships in this program.

Information on the location of clinical contacts, during the first three months after starting in the program, show that most veterans had at least some clinical contracts in the community: 52.8% in shelters; 26.5% on the street and 12% in soup kitchens. However, 45.3% of these veterans had most of their clinical contacts at VA Medical Centers, suggesting that once relationships are established through community outreach, the location of treatment often shifted back to more conventional settings.

While 20.6% of homeless veterans assessed at intake had only one contact with the HCMI program, 61.4% had from 2-10 contacts and 18.1% had 11 or more contacts, over three months. These data suggest that the program is successfully engaging a significant percentage of homeless chronically mentally ill veterans in active evaluation and treatment.

Detailed information on services provided either directly by the HCMI Program or through referrals, indicate that 93.1% received some health care services, 77.4% rehabilitative service, 74.3% assistance with housing and 67.1% some basic resources such as food or clothing. Health care and rehabilitative services were more often provided directly by the program while assistance with housing or with basic resources were most often provided through referrals.

Three months after intake, 68% of these veterans had concluded their involvement in the program while 32% remained actively involved. Of those who terminated, 38.8% had been positively involved in treatment and either left for services available elsewhere or had accomplished at least limited goals; 34.3% appeared unmotivated or uninterested in treatment; and one fifth (20.2%) appeared to be unable to use treatment, mostly because of poor tolerance of the constraints required.

8. CLINICAL PROCESS: RESIDENTIAL TREATMENT

Residential treatment has proved to be a critical feature of treatment for these veterans. Between May, 1987 and March 31, 1988, 2,124 veterans were admitted to residential treatment from the 43 sites. Between 20% and 27% of veterans seen by the HCMI Program have been admitted to residential treatment.

The average length of stay in residential treatment facilities is 51.7 days with a median of 38 days. The average cost per episode of residential treatment is $1,746 (median = $1,150) and the average cost per day is $34. This per diem is somewhat higher than the $26 per day cost in the VA's substance abuse halfway house program because the level of care required by homeless chronically mentally ill veterans is generally higher than that needed by veterans with pure substance abuse problems.

Veterans admitted to residential treatment tend to have higher indices of psychiatric and medical problems and of homelessness than those not admitted, but the available data suggest that many of those not admitted also had need of residential treatment but could not obtain it because funds or beds were not available. Some of these HCMI veterans received residential treatment from VA domiciliaries or from non-contract residential treatment facilities.

9. PRELIMINARY DATA ON CLINICAL OUTCOME

Preliminary information about the outcome of treatment in the HCMI Program is available for 1,356 episodes of residential treatment; and for 638 veterans involved in the follow-up evaluation.

Veterans Discharged from Residential Treatment. In 25.6% of discharges from residential treatment the veteran was judged to have successfully completed the residential treatment program. In 32.7% the veteran left against medical advice while in 20.5% the veteran was discharged for violation of program regulations (often by drinking or using drugs) and in 10.6% the veteran left to obtain more intensive medical or psychiatric treatment elsewhere.

HCMI clinicians determined, at the time of discharge, whether there had been any improvement in alcohol problems, drug problems, psychiatric problems, medical problems and social-vocational problems. In each of these problem areas about half of the veterans showed some improvement but needed additional treatment, while only 1%-8% had improved to the point of needing no further treatment. In the care of the chronically mentally ill, the need for ongoing care is the rule rather than the exception.

The housing situation of these veterans had also improved. At the time of intake assessment, 87.4% were either living in a shelter or claimed no residence. At the time of discharge, only 10.4% had no residence or were living in a shelter, although an additional 28.8% had left residential treatment without providing any information about their residential plans and many of these may have remained homeless. Another 24.5% were living independently in apartments or rooms in the community; 17.7% were living in institutions; and 10.2% were living in transitional residences. It appears that even though 53.2% of the HCMI veterans left residential treatment under less than ideal circumstances, their clinicians felt that substantial percentages of them improved clinically and reported that they were living in better housing than when they entered the program.

Veterans in the Outcome Evaluation. Three months after their initial intake assessment, 32.2% of veterans in the outcome evaluation were still involved in the HCMI Program and 26.2% had terminated the program with some degree of success. Thus for over half (58.5%), the clinicians reported what can be interpreted as a positive engagement in treatment. The remaining veterans had less constructive involvement with the HCMI Program because they did not want help for various reasons (23.3%) or because their psychopathology or personal psychology made it difficult for them to use the help offered by the program (13.7%).

As with the residential treatment subgroup, HCMI clinicians determined, for each follow-up veteran whether there had been improvement in health care and social adjustment problem areas. The findings in the outcome sub-group were generally similar to those in the residential treatment sub-group, with more than half of the veterans showing improvement in psychiatric and medical health care problem areas and 40%-70% showing improvement in social, vocational or financial problem areas.

Improvement was also noted in the following-up veterans' residential circumstances. While 90.2% had been living in shelters or without any place to stay at intake, only 45.7% were living in shelters or had no residence at the time of last contact with a clinician. At that time, 16.4% were living in apartments or rooms in the community; 20.7% were in HCMI contract residential treatment facilities; 8.6% were in institutions and 3.1% were in non-VA funded residential treatment facilities.

10. SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION

Data presented in this report show that the HCMI Veterans Program has been implemented as planned and is providing outreach, health care, case management and residential treatment services to large numbers of homeless chronically mentally ill veterans across the country. Preliminary evidence suggests that the program is effective in improving health care and residential status for many of these veterans.

By Mr. JOHNSTON (for himself and Mr. McCLURE):

S. 406. A bill to authorize competitive oil and gas leasing and development on the Coastal Plain of the Arctic National Wildlife refuge in a manner consistent with protection of the environment, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

ARCTIC COASTAL PLAIN COMPETITIVE OIL AND GAS LEASING ACT

● Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Arctic Coastal Plain Competitive Oil and Gas Leasing Act, legislation that would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to establish and implement a competitive oil and gas leasing program for the Coastal Plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge [ANWR], Alaska. The bill provides for the phased competitive leasing of the Coastal Plain, imposes strict environmental standards, requires that exploration, development and production be undertaken in a manner consistent with the interests of the area's subsistence users, and provides that a significant portion of ANWR revenues be available for use in conservation programs including the Land and Water Conservation Fund, and wetlands protection, acquisition, and restoration.

In addition, I am submitting three amendments, all of which were included in the ANWR bill favorably reported by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources last Congress. The amendments set forth a congressional determination compatibility, the adequacy of the legislative environmental impact statement, and provide specific requirements relating to environmental protection of the Coastal Plain.

THE ARCTIC NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE

Mr. President, in 1980, Congress enacted the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act [ANILCA], establishing 16 National Wildlife Refuges in Alaska, including a 9 million acre addition to the existing 10 million acre Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. ANWR offers wildlife, scientific, recreational, and esthetic values unique to the Arctic coastal ecosystem. Found on the refuge is a full complement of arctic flora and fauna, including the calving grounds for the Porcupine caribou herd, the second largest in Alaska—approximately 180,000 caribou—and habitat for the threatened Arctic peregrine falcon, the lesser snow goose, other migratory bird species, and reintroduced muskoxen.

At the same time, the North Slope of Alaska, and the coastal plain area of ANWR in particular, have long been recognized as areas with excellent potential for large oil and gas reserves. Located 65 miles west of the ANWR, the Prudhoe Bay field has proven to be the largest in North America with original producible reserves of 9.6 billion barrels of oil and 26 trillion cubic feet of gas. Current production from Prudhoe Bay averages 1.8 million barrels per day—approximately 20 percent of the total U.S. domestic crude oil production. For years, the coastal plain area of ANWR has been rated by many geologists as the most outstanding target in the onshore United States with reserves which could match those found in Prudhoe Bay.

THE 1002 REPORT

Mr. President, during the consideration of ANILCA in 1980, Congress recognized that further information was necessary before a decision was made as to whether all of ANWR should be included in the National Wilderness Preservation System or whether at least some of this areas should be made available for oil and gas exploration and development. Section 1002 of ANILCA required the Secretary of the Interior to study comprehensively a 1.5-million-acre strip—100 miles long and 30 miles wide—along the coast of ANWR—the Coastal Plain—the area generally recognized as having the highest oil and gas recovery potential.

In April 1987, the Secretary of the Interior transmitted the report required by section 1002 of ANILCA—"1002 Report"—to the Congress. The Secretary recommended that the entire 1.5 million acre Coastal Plain be opened to oil and gas leasing.

The 1002 Report estimated that there is a 95-percent chance that the Coastal Plain contains more than 4.8 billion barrels of oil and 11.5 trillion cubic feet of gas in place. According to the report, there is a 5-percent chance that the Coastal Plain contains 29.4 billion barrels of oil and 64.5 trillion cubic feet of gas. The report stated that the economically recoverable reserves could range from a low of 600,000 barrels to up to 9.2 billion barrels.

While the 1002 Report concluded that exploration and development drilling would have only minor effects on wildlife resources in the 1002 area, full production would have potentially major effects on the 180,000 caribou in the Porcupine caribou herd and on muskoxen in the refuge. The report noted that oil development "would result in long term changes in the wilderness environment, wildlife habitats, and Native community activities currently existing."

However, the 1002 Report emphasized that the growing U.S. reliance on imported oil could have potentially serious implications for national security. The report pointed out that domestic production declined in 1986 by 10 percent and projected a further decline of 4 to 5 percent in 1987. A recent study by the American Petroleum Institute reported that oil production in 1988 hit a 12-year low. At the same time, U.S. consumption is on the rise. OPEC countries are expected to supply up to 60 percent of the world oil by 1995 when the United States will import over half of its supplies at an estimated cost of $80 billion. According to the 1002 Report, based on the mean recoverable oil estimate of 3.2 billion barrels, ANWR production by the year 2006 could provide 4 percent of total U.S. demand (about 660,000 barrels per day) and reduce imports by nearly 9 percent.

Mr. President, the billions of barrels of oil that may exist in the 1002 area could make an important contribution to the national need for domestic sources of oil. Alaska North Slope crude oil, especially that from Prudhoe Bay, now contributes approximately 20 percent of domestic production. However, production from Prudhoe Bay has peaked and a decline is expected no later than 1988. Oil from the 1002 area could help moderate these declines in supply and substantially reduce the need for increased imports.

THE LEGISLATION

Last Congress, the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources concluded 9 days of hearings on this matter, during which it carefully considered the findings of the 1002 Report as well as extensive testimony provided by witnesses representing a wide range of views. On February 25, 1988, after five business meetings, the committee voted that S. 2214 be favorably reported as an original measure.

Mr. President, the bill and amendments I introduce today are the same as the legislation reported by the committee last Congress, with, in addition to technical and clarifying modifications, two substantive changes. First, the bill alters the distribution of revenues from leasing activities so that 25 percent would go to the Land and Water Conservation Fund, 15 percent would be used for the acquisition, protection, creation, and restoration of wetlands, 10 percent would go to the U.S. Treasury, and 50 percent would continue to go to the State of Alaska.

Second, the bill deletes titles VII through X of the bill reported last Congress. Titles VII and VIII became public law through congressional action during the 100th Congress. Title IX, calling for an energy plan, and Title X, imposing export prohibitions, were added to the joint staff draft—the markup document—by the committee during its consideration of this matter. Such provisions may again be taken up by the committee when it considers this bill.

Mr. President, given its significant potential, I believe that exploration, development, and production on the Coastal Plain is a key component to our efforts increase domestic oil and gas resources. At a time when production from other major fields in the United States is declining, I believe that it is important that we proceed with exploration and development of the Coastal Plain.

However, we must ensure that development occurs in an environmentally sensitive, orderly, and sound manner. My legislation imposes a strict standard of environmental protection: That activities result in "no significant adverse effect on fish and wildlife, their habitat, and the environment" of the Coastal Plain and that the "best commercially available technology" be applied on all new operations and, whenever practicable, on existing operations.

The legislation allows the Secretary to exclude from leasing areas of the Coastal Plain deemed to be of particular environmental sensitivity. It imposes specific minimum environmental requirements, mandates reclamation to a "condition as closely approximating the original condition of such lands as is feasible using the best commercially available technology," authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to clean up pollution from discharges of oil or hazardous or toxic substances at the expense of the responsible party, and establishes a $50 million reclamation fund for use in reclaiming the Coastal Plain and other North Slope lands. Finally, the legislation modifies existing law to ensure that a significant portion of ANWR revenues are available for several important conservation programs and for wetlands protection, acquisition, and restoration.

Mr. President, I am aware that this is a difficult and controversial matter. However, I sincerely believe that this legislation is a responsible measure which balances the need for environmental protection with the need for energy development, production, and independence. I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill, together with the section-by-section analysis, be printed in the RECORD.

(The text of the amendments is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted".)

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Arctic Coastal Plain Competitive Oil and Gas Leasing Act".

TITLE I. STATEMENT OF PURPOSE AND DEFINITIONS

SEC. 101. PURPOSE AND POLICY.—The Congress hereby declares that it is the purpose and policy of this Act:

(a) to authorize competitive oil and gas leasing and development to proceed on the Coastal Plain in a manner consistent with protection of the environment, maintenance of fish and wildlife and their habitat, and the interests of the area's subsistence users; and

(b) to provide a new source of funding for the Land and Water Conservation Fund, Migratory Bird Conservation Fund and other fish and wildlife management programs, and for the acquisition, protection, creation, and restoration of wetlands, and for other purposes.

SEC. 102. DEFINITIONS.—When used in this Act—

(a) The term "Coastal Plain" means that area identified as such in the map entitled "Arctic National Wildlife Refuge", dated August 1980, as referenced in section 1002(b) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act of 1980 (16 U.S.C. Sec. 3142(b)(1)) comprising approximately one million five hundred forty-nine thousand acres; and

(b) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary's designee.

TITLE II. COASTAL PLAIN COMPETITIVE LEASING PROGRAM

SEC. 201. LEASING PROGRAM FOR LANDS WITHIN THE COASTAL PLAIN.—(a) The Congress hereby authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior and other appropriate Federal officers and agencies to take such actions as are necessary to establish and implement a competitive oil and gas leasing program that will result in an environmentally sound program for the exploration, development, and production of the oil and gas resources of the Coastal Plain. Activities pursuant to such program shall be undertaken:

(1) in accordance with the development requirements set out in Title III of this Act; and

(2) in a manner to ensure the receipt of fair market value by the public for the mineral resources to be leased.

(b) This Act shall be the sole authority for leasing on the Coastal Plain.

SEC. 202. RULES AND REGULATIONS.—(a) The Secretary shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes and provisions of this Act, including rules and regulations relating to protection of the environment of the Coastal Plain, as required by Title III of this Act. Such rules and regulations shall be promulgated within nine months after the date of enactment of this Act and shall, as of their effective date, apply to all operations conducted under a lease issued or maintained under the provisions of this Act.

(b) In the formulation and promulgation of rules and regulations under this Act, the Secretary shall request and give due consideration to the views of appropriate officials of the State of Alaska and the Government of Canada. The Secretary shall also consult with the Environmental Protection Agency and the Army Corps of Engineers in developing rules and regulations relating to the environment.

(c) The Secretary shall periodically review and, if appropriate, revise the rules and regulations issued under subsection (a) of this section to reflect any significant biological, environmental, or engineering data which come to the Secretary's attention.

SEC. 203. LEASE SALES.—(a) Lands may be leased pursuant to the provisions of this Act to any person qualified to obtain a lease for deposits of oil and gas under the Mineral Leasing Act, as amended (30 U.S.C. Sec. 181).

(b) The Secretary shall, by regulation, establish procedures for—

(1) receipt and consideration of sealed nominations for any area in the Coastal Plain for inclusion in, or exclusion from, a lease sale;

(2) public notice of and comment on designation of areas to be included in, or excluded from, a lease sale;

(3) review by the State of Alaska and local governments in Alaska which may be impacted by the proposed leasing; and Exchange

(4) periodic consultation with the State of Alaska and local governments in Alaska, oil and gas lessess, and representatives of other individuals or organizations engaged in activity in or on the Coastal Plain including those involved in subsistence uses and recreational activities.

(c) The Secretary shall, by regulation, provide for lease sales of lands on the Coastal Plain. When lease sales are to be held, they shall occur after the nomination process provided for in subsection (b) of this section. For the first lease sale, the Secretary shall, consistent with the requirements set forth in Title III of this Act, offer for lease those acres receiving the greatest number of nominations, but not to exceed a total of three hundred thousand acres. If the total acreage nominated is less than three hundred thousand acres, he shall include in such sale any other acreage which he believes has the highest resource potential, but in no event shall more than three hundred thousand acres of the Coastal Plain be offered in such sale. Thereafter, no more than three hundred thousand acres of the Coastal Plain may be leased in any one lease sale. The initial lease sale shall be held within eighteen months of the issuance of final regulations by the Secretary. The second lease sale shall be held thirty-six months after the initial sale, with additional sales conducted every twenty-four months thereafter so long as sufficient interest in development exists to warrant, in the Secretary's judgment, the conduct of such sales.

(d) Areas of the Coastal Plain deemed by the Secretary to be of particular environmental sensitivity may be excluded from leasing by the Secretary. The Secretary shall notify the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives ninety days in advance of excluding any such areas from leasing. If the Secretary later determines that exploration, development, or production will result in no significant adverse effect on fish and wildlife, their habitat, and the environment, the Secretary shall, consistent with the provisions of subsection (c) of this section, offer such lands for leasing.

SEC. 204. GRANT OF LEASES BY THE SECRETARY.—(a) The Secretary is authorized to grant to the highest responsible qualified bidder by sealed competitive bid any lands to be leased on the Coastal Plain upon payment by the lease of such bonus as may be accepted by the Secretary and of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall be not less than 12½ per centum in amount or value of the production removed or sold from the lease.

(b) The Secretary shall not accept a bid for lease if the Secretary finds, after notice and hearing, that the bidder is not meeting diligent development requirements on any other Federal mineral lease.

SEC. 205. LEASE TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—An oil and gas lease issued pursuant to this section shall—

(a) be for a tract consisting of a compact area not to exceed two thousand five hundred sixty acres;

(b) be for an initial period of ten years and as long thereafter as oil or gas is produced in paying quantities or drilling or well reworking operations as approved by the Secretary are operated thereon;

(c) require the payment of royalty as provided for in section 205 of this Act;

(d) require approval of an exploration plan, as provided for in section 207 of this Act;

(e) require approval of a development and production plan, as required in section 207 of this Act;

(f) require posting of bond required by section 208 of this Act;

(g) provide for the suspension of the lease during the initial lease term or thereafter pursuant to section 209 of this Act;

(h) provide for the cancellation of the lease during the initial lease term or thereafter pursuant to section 210 of this Act,

(i) contain the terms and conditions relating to protection of fish and wildlife, their habitat, and the environment, as required by title III of this Act; and

(j) contain such rental and other provisions as the Secretary may prescribe at the time of offering the area for lease.

SEC. 206. Exploration and Development and Production Plans.—(a) Exploration Plans.—All exploration activities pursuant to any lease issued or maintained under this Act shall be conducted in accordance with an approved exploration plan or an approved revision of such plan. Prior to commencing exploration pursuant to any oil and gas lease issued or maintained under this Act, the holder thereof shall submit an exploration plan to the Secretary for approval. Such plan may apply to more than one lease held by a lessee in any region of the Coastal Plain, or by a group of lessee acting under a unitization, pooling, or drilling agreement, shall be approved by the Secretary if he finds that such plan is consistent with the provisions of this Act and other applicable law.

(b) OIL AND GAS DEVELOPMENT AND PRODUCTION PLANS.—All development and production pursuant to a lease issued or maintained pursuant to this Act shall be conducted in accordance with an approved development and production plan. Prior to commencing development or production pursuant to any oil and gas lease issued or maintained under this Act, the holder thereof shall submit a development and production plan to the Secretary for approval. Such plan may apply to more than one lease held by a lessee in any region of the Coastal Plain, or by a group of lessees acting under a unitization, pooling, or drilling agreement, and shall be approved by the Secretary if he finds that such plan is consistent with the provisions of this Act and other applicable law.

(c) REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO EXPLORATION PLANS AND DEVELOPMENT AND PRODUCTION PLANS.—Exploration plans and development and production plans shall include where applicable—

(1) the names and legal addresses of the following persons: the operator, contractors, subcontractors and the owners or lessees other than the operator;

(2) a map or maps showing: (A) the location of a point of reference selected by the operator within the area covered by the plan of operations showing, in relation to that point, existing and proposed access routes or roads within the area, the boundaries of proposed surface disturbance and location of all survey lines; (B) the location of proposed drilling sites, wellsite layout, and all surface facilities; (C) sources of construction materials within the area including but not limited to gravel; and (D) the location of ancillary facilities including but not limited to camps, sanitary facilities, water supply, diposal facilities, pipelines, fuel storage facilities, storage facilities, base of operations, and airstrips. A point of reference selected by the operator within the area of operations shall be marked with a ground monument.

(3) a description of: (A) all surface and ancillary facilities, including but not limited to camps, sanitary facilities, water supply, disposal facilities, pipelines, fuel storage facilities, storage facilities, base of operations, and airstrips; and (B) the major equipment to be used in the operations, including but not limited to equipment and methods for the transport of all waters used in or produced by operations, and of the proposed method of transporting such equipment within the area covered by the plan of operations including to and from the site;

(4) an estimated schedule for any phase of operations of which review by the Secretary is sought and the anticipated date of operation completion;

(5) the nature and extent of proposed operations;

(6) plans for reclamation, including:

(A) the anticipated reclamation work to be performed;

(B) a proposed schedule of reclamation activities to be performed; and

(C) a detailed estimate of reclamation costs;

(7) methods for disposal of all wastes and hazardous and toxic substances;

(8) an affidavit stating that the operations planned will be in compliance with all applicable Federal, State, and local laws and regulations;

(9) contingency plans in case of spills, leaks, or other accidents; and

(10) such additional information as may be required by the Secretary to ensure that the proposed activities are consistent with this Act, as well as other applicable Federal and State environmental laws.

(d) PROCEDURES FOR PLAN APPROVAL.—(1) After an exploration or development and production plan is submitted for approval, the Secretary shall promptly publish notice of the submission and availability of the text of the proposed plan in the FEDERAL REGISTER and a newspaper of general circulation in the State of Alaska and provide an opportunity for written public comment.

(2) Within one hundred twenty days after receiving an exploration or development and production plan, the Secretary shall determine, after taking into account any comment received under paragraph (1) of this subsection, whether the activities proposed in the plan are consistent with this Act and other applicable provisions of Federal and State law. If that determination is in the affirmative, the Secretary shall return the plan along with a statement of any modifications necessary for its approval. The Secretary, as a condition of approving any plan under this section—

(A) may require modifications to the plan that he considers necessary or appropriate to make it consistent with this Act and other applicable law. The Secretary shall assess reasonable fees or charges for the reimbursement of all necessary and reasonable research, administrative, monitoring, enforcement, and reporting costs associated with reviewing the plan and monitoring its implementation; and

(B) shall require such periodic reports regarding the carrying out of the drilling and related activities as may be necessary or appropriate for purposes of determining the extent to which the plan is being complied with and the effectiveness of the plan in ensuring that the drilling and related activities are consistent with this Act and other applicable provisions of Federal and State law.

(e) MODIFICATION OF PLANS.—If at any time while activities are being carried out under a plan approved under this section, the Secretary, on the basis of available information, determines that the continuation of any particular activity under the plan is likely to result in a significant adverse effect on fish or wildlife, their habitat, or the environment, the Secretary, after consultation with the lessee shall—

(1) make modifications to part or all of the plan as necessary or appropriate to avoid the significant adverse effect;

(2) temporarily suspend part or all of the drilling or related activity under the plan for such time as the Secretary considers necessary or appropriate to avoid such significant adverse effect; or

(3) terminate and cancel the plan where actions under paragraph (1) or (2) will not avoid the significant adverse effect.

SEC. 207. BONDING REQUIREMENTS.—

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR PERFORMANCE BOND.—After approval of an exploration or development and production plan, the lessee shall be required to file with the Secretary a suitable performance bond. The bond shall be conditioned upon compliance with all the terms and conditions of the lease and all applicable laws. Such performance bond is in addition to and not in lieu of any bond or security deposit required by other regulatory authorities. The lessee may file either a surety bond, or a personal bond consisting of cash or negotiable Treasury bonds of the United States. When negotiable Treasury bonds serve as the personal bond, they shall be accompanied by a proper conveyance to the Secretary of full authority to sell such securities in case of a default in the performance of the terms and conditions of the lease.

(b) AMOUNT OF PERFORMANCE BOND.—The performance bond shall be in an amount:

(1) to be determined by the Secretary to provide for reclamation of the lease site in accordance with an approved or revised exploration or development and production plan; plus

(2) an amount set by the Secretary consistent with the type of operations proposed, to provide the means for rapid and effective cleanup, and to minimize damages resulting from an oil spill, the escape of gas, refuse, domestic wastewater, hazardous or toxic substances, or fire caused by oil and gas activities. This amount shall not exceed $500,000.00 for geophysical surveys, and shall not exceed a blanket bond of $1,000,000.00 for all exploration activities and an additional $1,500,000.00 for all development and production activities on the Coastal Plain.

(c) ADJUSTMENT OF BOND TO CONFORM TO REVISED PLAN.—In the event that an approved exploration or development and production plan is revised, the Secretary may adjust the amount of the bond to conform to such modified plan.

(d) DURATION OF BOND.—The responsibility and liability of the lessee and its surety under the bond or security deposit shall continue until such time as the Secretary determines that there has been compliance with the terms and conditions of the lease of all applicable law.

(e) TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.—Within sixty days after determining that there has been compliance with the terms and conditions of the lease and all applicable laws, the Secretary shall notify the lessee that the period of liability under the bond or security deposit has been terminated.

SEC. 208. LEASE SUSPENSION.—The Secretary may direct or assent to the suspension of operations and production under any lease granted under the terms of this Act: (1) in the interest of conservation of the resource; (2) where there is no available system to transport the resource; or (3) where there is a threat of significant adverse effect upon fish or wildlife, their habitat or the environment. If such a suspension is directed or assented to by the Secretary, any payment of rental prescribed by such lease shall be suspended during such period of suspension of operations and production, and the term of the lease shall be extended by adding any such suspension period thereto.

SEC. 209. LEASE CANCELLATION.—(a) CANCELLATION OF NONPRODUCING LEASE.—Whenever the owner of a nonproducing lease fails to comply with any of the provisions of this Act, or of any applicable provision of Federal or State environmental law, or of the lease, or of any regulation issued under this Act, such lease may be cancelled by the Secretary if such default continues for the period of thirty days after mailing of notice by registered letter to the lease owner at the lease owner's record post office address.

(b) CANCELLATION OF PRODUCING LEASE.—Whenever the owner of any producing lease fails to comply with any of the provisions of this Act, or of any applicable provision of Federal or State environmental law, or of the lease, or of any regulation issued under this Act, such lease may be forfeited and cancelled by any appropriate proceeding brought by the Secretary in any United States district court having jurisdiction under the provisions of this Act.

(c) ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS.—(1) In addition to the authority for lease cancellation provided for by subsections (a) and (b) of this section, any lease may be cancelled at any time, if the Secretary determines, after a hearing, that—

(A) continued activity pursuant to such lease is likely to result in a significant adverse effect to fish or wildlife, their habitat, or the environment, or is likely to result in serious harm or damage to human life, to property, or to the national security or defense; and

(B) the likelihood of a significant adverse effect will not disappear within a reasonable period of time or the threat of harm or damage will not disappear or decrease to any acceptable extent within a reasonable period of time.

(2) Such cancellation shall not occur unless and until operations under such lease or permit shall have been under suspension, or temporary prohibition, by the Secretary, with due extension of any lease term continuously for a period of five years, or for a lesser period upon request of the lessee.

(3) Cancellation under this subsection shall entitle the lessee to receive such compensation as the lessee demonstrates to the Secretary to be equal to the excess, if any, over the lessee's revenues from the lease (plus interest thereon from the date of receipt to the date of reimbursement) of all consideration paid for the lease and all direct expenditures made by the lessee after the date of issuance of such lease and in connection with exploration or development, or both, pursuant to the lease (plus interest on such consideration and such expenditures from date of payment to date of reimbursement).

SEC. 210. ASSIGNMENT OR SUBLETTING OF LEASES.—No lease issued under the authority of this Act shall be assigned or sublet, except with the consent of the Secretary.

SEC. 211. RELINQUISHMENT.—The lessee may, at the discretion of the Secretary, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under any lease issued pursuant to this Act. The Secretary shall accept the relinquishment by the lessee of any lease issued under this Act where there has not been surface disturbance on the lands covered by the lease.

SEC. 212. UNITIZATION.—For the purpose of conserving the natural resources of any oil or gas pool, field, or like area, or any part thereof and in order to avoid the unnecessary duplication of facilities, to protect the environment of the Coastal Plain, and to protect correlative rights, the Secretary shall require to the greatest extent practicable, that lessees unite with each other in collectively adopting and operating under a cooperative or unit plan of development for operation of such pool, field, or like area, or any part thereof.

SEC. 213. OIL AND GAS INFORMATION.—(a)(1) Any lessee or permittee conducting any exploration for, or development or production of, oil or gas pursuant to this Act shall provide the Secretary access to all data and information (including processed, analyzed, and interpreted information) obtained from such activity and shall provide copies of such data and information as the Secretary may request. Such data and information shall be provided in accordance with regulations which the Secretary shall prescribe.

(2) If interpreted information provided pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection is provided in good faith by the lessee or permittee, such lessee or permittee shall not be responsible for any consequence of the use or of reliance upon such interpreted information.

(3) Whenever any data or information is provided to the Secretary, pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection—

(A) by a lessee or permittee, in the form and manner of processing which is utilized by such lessee or permittee in the normal conduct of business, the Secretary shall pay the reasonable cost of reproducing such data and information;

(B) by a lessee or permittee, in such other form and manner of processing as the Secretary may request, the Secretary shall pay the reasonable cost of processing and reproducing such data and information.

(b) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations to: (1) assure that the confidentiality of privileged or proprietary information received by the Secretary under this section will be maintained; and (2) set forth the time periods and conditions which shall be applicable to the release of such information.

SEC. 214. REMEDIES AND PENALTIES. (a) GENERAL.—Except as provided in section 215 of this Act, the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of cases and controversies arising out of, or in connection with, any lease issued under this act. Proceedings may be instituted in the judicial district in which any defendant resides or may be found, or in the judicial district in which the Coastal Plain is located.

(b) ACTIONS FOR RELIEF.—At the request of the Secretary, the Attorney General or a United States Attorney shall institute a civil action in the district court of the United States for the district in which any defendant resides or may be found, or in the judicial district in which the Coastal Plain is located, for a temporary restraining order, injunction, or other appropriate remedy to enforce any provision of this Act, any regulation or order issued under this Act, or any term of a lease issued pursuant to this Act.

(c) CIVIL PENALTIES.—If any person fails to comply with any provision of this Act, or any term of a lease issued pursuant to this Act, or any regulation or order issued under this Act, after notice of such failure and expiration of any reasonable period allowed for corrective action, such person shall be liable for a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 for each day of the continuance of such failure. The Secretary may assess, collect and compromise any such penalty. No penalty shall be assessed until the person charged with a violation has been given an opportunity for a hearing.

(d) CRIMINAL PENALTIES.—Any person who knowingly and willfully: (1) violates any provision of this Act, any term of a lease issued pursuant to this Act, or any regulation or order issued under the authority of this Act designated to protect health, safety, or the environment or conserve natural resources; (2) makes any false statement, representation, or certification in any application, record, report or other document filed or required to be maintained under this Act; (3) falsifies, tampers with, or renders inaccurate any monitoring device or method of record required to be maintained under this Act; or (4) reveals any data or information required to be kept confidential by this Act, shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $100,000, or by imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both. Each day that a violation under clause (1) of this subsection continues, or each day that any monitoring device or data recorder remains inoperative or inaccurate because of any activity described in clause (3) of this subsection, shall constitute a separate violation.

(e) LIABILITY OF CORPORATE OFFICERS AND AGENTS FOR VIOLATIONS BY CORPORATION.—Whenever a corporation or other entity is subject to prosecution under subsection (d) of this section, any officer or agent of such corporation or entity who knowingly and willfuly authorized, ordered, or carried out the proscribed activity shall be subject to the same fines or imprisonment, or both, as provided for under subsection (d) of this section.

(f) CONCURRENT AND CUMULATIVE NATURE OF PENALTIES.—The remedies and penalties prescribed in this Act shall be concurrent and cumulative and the exercise of one shall not preclude the exercise of the others. Further, the remedies and penalties prescribed in this Act shall be in addition to any other remedies and penalties afforded by any other law or regulation.

(g) REMOVAL COSTS AND LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if any area of the Coastal Plain has been or is being polluted by discharges of oil or hazardous or toxic substances from exploration, development, or production of oil or gas or related activities, conducted by, or on behalf of, a responsible party, and if the pollution has damaged or is damaging fish or wildlife, their habitat, or the environment of the Coastal Plain, or if such pollution is causing a substantial threat of damaging those fish or wildlife, their habitat, or the environment of the Coastal Plain, the responsible party shall be jointly, severally and strictly liable for the removal costs and damages specified in this subsection that arise directly out of or directly result from pollution that has damaged or is damaging or is causing a substantial threat of damaging fish or wildlife, their habitat, or the environment of the Coastal Plain. The Secretary shall make a determination with respect to such liability after notice to the responsible party and an opportunity for hearing. Upon failure of the responsible party adequately to control and remove the pollutant or threat, the Secretary, in cooperation with other Federal, State or local agencies, or in cooperation with the responsible party, or both, shall have the right to accomplish the control and removal at this expense of the responsible party. Funds contained in the Coastal Plain Liability and Reclamation Fund, provided for by section 402 of this Act, may be used to accomplish such control and removal until such time as sufficient funds can be recovered from the responsible party. The removal costs and damages referred to in this subsection are the following—

(1) all necessary removal costs as determined by the Secretary;

(2) damages for injury to, destruction of, loss of, and reclamation of natural resources, including the reasonable costs of assessing such injury, destruction, loss or reclamation; and

(3) damages for economic loss resulting from injury to, or destruction of, real or personal property or natural resources, and loss of subsistence use of natural resources by local residents.

SEC. 215. EXPEDITED JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Any complaint filed seeking judicial review of an action of the Secretary in promulgating any regulation under this Act may be filed only in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and such complaint shall be filed within ninety days from the date of such promulgation, or after such date if such complaint is based solely on grounds arising after such ninetieth day, in which case the complaint must be filed within ninety days after the complainant knew or reasonably should have known of the grounds for the complaint. Any complaint seeking judicial review of any actions of the Secretary under this Act may be filed in any appropriate district court of the United States, and such complaint must be filed within ninety days from the date of the action being challenged, or after such date if such complaint is based solely on grounds arising after such ninetieth day, in which case the complaint must be filed within ninety days after the complainant knew or reasonably should have known of the grounds for the complaint.

SEC. 216. ANNUAL REPORT TO CONGRESS.—On March 1st of each year following the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior shall prepare and submit to the Congress an annual report on the leasing program authorized by this Act.

SEC. 217. PROPERTY INTERESTS OF THE INUPIAT ESKIMO PEOPLE.—The prohibitions and limitations contained in section 1003 of Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act of 1980 (16 U.S.C. Sec. 3143), insofar as they have application to the subsurface property interests owned by the Inupiat Eskimo people within and adjacent to the Coastal Plain, are repealed. No surface disturbance in support of oil or gas development or production involving such subsurface property interests shall be authorized prior to publication of final regulations issued pursuant to this Act which establish environmental stipulations, terms and conditions for oil and gas leasing on the Coastal Plain. The substantive provisions of such environmental stipulations, terms and conditions shall apply to the development of all subsurface property interests owned by the Inupiat Eskimo people within and adjacent to the Coastal Plain.

TITLE III—COASTAL PLAIN DEVELOPMENT REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 301. NO SIGNIFICANT ADVERSE EFFECT STANDARD TO GOVERN AUTHORIZED COASTAL PLAIN ACTIVITIES.—The Secretary shall administer the provisions of this Act through regulations, lease terms, conditions, restrictions, prohibitions, stipulations, and other provisions that ensure the oil and gas exploration, development, and production activities on the Coastal Plain will result in no significant adverse effect on fish and wildlife, their habitat, and the environment, and that shall require the application of the best commercially available technology for oil and gas exploration, development, and production, on all new exploration, development, and production operations, and whenever practicable, on existing operations.

SEC. 302. By Mr. DODD:

S. 407. A bill to require the Consumer Product Safety Commission to require the labeling of certain toys; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

TOY SAFETY AND CHILD PROTECTION ACT

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Toy Safety and Child Protection Act, which will significantly increase the safety of toys in America. The legislation sponsored by my friend and colleague, SAM GEJDENSON in the House, will require an explicit Consumer Product Safety Commission warning label on toys with small parts intended for children over age 3 years. The label will state the minimum age of children for which the toy is appropriate, a description of the toy's harmful properties, and the potential consequences if used by children below the minimum age. Absent this critical information, buying a toy often involves dangerous guesswork. Soon parents will be provided the basis from which to make wise consumer choices appropriate to their child's age, level of maturity, and safety awareness.

The need for this legislation is clear: in 1985 alone, small toys or toy parts were responsible for 18 suffocation deaths and over 12,000 related injuries. Next to riding toys, the second largest category of toy-related injuries involved the ingestion or aspiration of small toys or parts of toys.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission recognized the danger of toys with small parts when it prohibited toy manufacturers from making such toys designed for children under the age of 3. However, the CPSC standard only requires toys with small parts to be labeled "not recommended for children under 3 years of age," a clearly inadequate warning for parents. Without an additional statement that the toy contains small parts, parents may perceive such restrictions as relating to their child's cognitive and motor abilities, and certainly, their precocious 2-year-old can handle it.

I am introducing this legislation because parents have a right to know what hazardous potential a toy poses their child. Deaths due to toys with small parts are preventable and the first line of defense is knowing the risks. If the life of one child is saved by a proper warning label then it will be worth the effort.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be printed in full text in today's RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Ms. MIKULSKI (for herself, Mr. NUNN, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. SANFORD, and Mr. MATSUNAGA):

S. 408. A bill to establish a corporation to administer a national volunteer service program; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

NATIONAL COMMUNITY SERVICE ACT

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I am introducing today the National Community Service Act of 1989, a bill to institute a voluntary national service. Cosponsoring this bill are Senators NUNN, ADAMS, SANFORD, and MATSUNAGA.

National service is an idea whose time has come. It appeals to the best in us. It offers the opportunity for volunteers to make an investment, through their own sweat equity, in themselves and their communities. It is a social invention that can keep the door to the American dream—education and home ownership—open to all Americans.

My bill calls for part time, neighborhood-based voluntary community service, modeled after the National Guard. Volunteers would serve 2 weekends a month and 2 weeks a year, for 3 to 6 years, in return for a $3,000 voucher for every year served, to be used for education or first home ownership. Volunteers would work in their own communities, through existing programs, such as Meals on Wheels or volunteer firefighters, and the bulk of program administration would be done by the States.

My proposal will give volunteers the option of weekend community service, in their own neighborhoods. Why do we need national service? Because our young people are losing touch with values of community service. The habits of the heart that made our country great are being lost. At the same time, the skyrocketing cost of education and home ownership are pricing the American dream out of reach for many of our citizens. National service can help remedy both these problems.

One of the geniuses of America has been our inventions. And very often when we think of inventions, we think of high technology. We think of the space shuttle, or the microchip, or the pacemaker. But one of the other geniuses of America has been our social inventions. And the social inventions that we created to make sure that the people always had access to the American dream.

When immigrants came to this country, we came up with a new social invention called the night school—so that you didn't have to be rich, you didn't have to be prosperous, to get yourself through school. And the night school transformed this country.

At the end of World War II we came up with other social inventions. We came up with the GI bill of rights, saying that through the obligations you had through military services, and the time that you spent in defending America, the blessings of America should be yours. And we're going to give you the good guy bonuses for being a GI.

The other social invention was the community college. To give the people the opportunity to go to college in their own neighborhood, day or night, a modest invention. To get on with their job and their family, and then if they cared to, to finish their 4-year program through a night school opportunity.

Those were the social inventions that made sure this country and the people in it always had access to the American dream. Once again, now as we move to the 21st century, the question of access to the American dream lies before us. The ability to afford a college education, or postsecondary education of any nature, as well as home ownership is slipping away from many Americans.

I've held town hall meetings with kids in high school. The No. 1 question on their mind is: How are they going to fund postsecondary education? They know that whether it's a vocational-technical school or college, that the financial burden they will have will often be difficult to pay off. And that their first mortgage is really their tuition loans.

We need to make sure that college, vocational or technical training, or home ownership is available to all. Linking national service to an opportunity to get a public benefit. It makes sure that young people could make an investment through their own sweat equity in themselves and in their communities. It links a public benefit with public service.

National service is as old as our country. And I think that now we're going to renew it in a very special way. I like it too, because I'm a social worker. And I truly believe that I'm a better U.S. Senator because I worked in the streets and neighborhoods of Baltimore. I was a foster care worker. I was a residential care worker. I worked with the elderly. I worked with those in drug abuse. I got out and made home visits. I didn't only rely on think tanks or memos. And in fact I rely on them less now because I was a social worker.

I feel that what transformed me is not so much what I did for the poor, but what the poor taught me. That courage, character, competency, aspiration is not limited to a single class, or a single gender or a particular kind of neighborhood. It's throughout our country. And what people need are opportunities.

I hope that these new citizen activists, citizen soldiers, who when it's all said and done, waged war against drugs, illiteracy, or pollution will look back with fondness on this experience—and know that the pursuit of personal advancement need not be in conflict with the advancement of social progress. I think that these citizen volunteers will have their hearts touched as young people. And later on they'll touch American society in a very unique and special way because of National Service.

What do I like about this bill? Well, first of all it meets basic American needs. As we go into the 21st century we need to make sure we provide two things. One, access to the American dream, the ability to afford higher education, and the ability to afford a home. And at the same time as we go into the 21st century we know we are facing a work force shortage, demography is destiny. They'll be not only a shrinking pool of workers but a shrinking pool of volunteers to be to be scout leader, volunteer firefighters, men and women in the Coast Guard Auxiliary or the Civil Air Patrol.

We need to make sure that we have our volunteers. Also we go into the 21st century, I believe we need to kindle what DeToqueville called the habits of the heart. That which makes America great was not only its legislative framework or its constitution but it was the way neighbor was always committed to helping neighbor.

This legislation really combines three things in our society. One, it recognizes aspiration—that in our society everybody should have the opportunity to become all that they can be and that barriers to self-fulfillment and personal excellence should not be based of ones economic status. You should be able to be what you want to be or own a home not because of the social class you're born in and that that social class is really a freeze frame for the rest of your life.

It also says that you can't get something for nothing. It recognizes perspiration, that there has to be sweat equity, that if we are going to provide a public benefit there needs to be a corollary action and at the same time while you're aspiring and perspiring we hope that you are inspired, that you're inspired in order to help neighbor help neighbor.

It is our hope that when they are out there doing the volunteer service maybe for the first time in their life, young people will be asked to do something. It is an absolute shock to me that in this last decade nobody has been asked to do anything, including, pick-it-up-yourself and maybe what we need to do is see where people can develop this sense of obligation.

When my great-grandmother came to this country, she had no guarantees, the only thing that was guaranteed to her was opportunity and what we're talking about here through the idea of national community service, is an opportunty structure which through your own aspiration and perspiration you will be able to achieve the American dream.

Not everyone can go away nor everyone should go away for full-time service. We are familar with the fact that our hi-tech graduates particularly in science and engineering must move immediately into their field. We are also aware that there are many graduates, some who for example are single mothers, would be best if they did not go away but stayed there in their own community.

What national service offers them is the opportunity to perform a public service to get a public benefit. What we have here is a new social invention. Not necessarily a new social program. And I think that's a very important concept to keep in mind. We're not talking about a big blotted bureaucracy that uses more money to keep itself going than to keep the country humming.

It would mean that wonderful young man or woman who graduated from Johns Hopkins University in chemical engineering could go right into his or her field. But they could also work on weekends organizing a Saturday scholar program for kids or maybe being the volunteer that organizes the science fair for our children.

But we also need them as volunteer firefighters and we need them in a variety of other ways working through, I believe, nonprofit organizations. As a social worker I always knew that it was through the nonprofit organization—Family and Children Society, the United Fund—that we had our structure for volunteers. We don't need to invent bureaucracy, we don't need to invent structure. We need to make sure we provide access to the American dream and rekindle the habits of the heart in our young people. And that's what I think this idea is all about.

You can't force someone to have an attitude change. But how do we learn and how do we develop ourselves best? It's really by experience. It's hands on experience. Very few people's lives have been changed by a memo that they've read. Most people's lives have been changed by hands on experience. A personal relationship with another human being is usually the way to do this.

I can tell you why I was a volunteer. I worked with a Catholic priest to start a drug addiction program in a neighborhood that didn't have any. I went into a prison, to work with women under a city jail, to help them plan for release, because there were no social workers there. I will tell you, this Catholic young girl meeting in a city jail with prostitutes and shoplifters and so on, had not only her eyes open. But had her heart open and her mind open. I was changed because of what I did. And the volunteers who serve in the National Community Service Program will also have their lives changed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and an outline of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OUTLINE OF NATIONAL COMMUNITY SERVICE ACT OF 1989

The National Community Service Act of 1989 promotes community service and civic responsibility. It is a program modeled after the National Guard to provide people an opportunity to do part-time volunteer work in their own communities.

Anyone capable of providing volunteer service, that is fit to serve, is eligible for National Community Service. Volunteers would serve as part of a team. National Community Service teams would work with existing or new volunteer programs which provide services for youth, the elderly, public safety, conservation, and other self-help organizations.

Volunteers in National Community Service would serve for two weekends each month and 2 weeks during the year, or an average of 9 hours per week. For each year of service, volunteers would receive a $3,000 voucher good for educational costs or the down payment on a first home. Each volunteer commits 3 years to 6 years of service.

The National Community Service program would be administered on the state level so that the program could be flexible enough to meet the special needs of local communities. The Governor of each state would designate a State Administrator to supervise the state program. A new independent federal corporation would monitor the overall development of the program.

The National Community Service Act would start in FY 1991 with 50,000 participants at a cost of $250 million. By FY 1994, the program would involve 400,000 participants at a cost of $2 billion.

The National Community Service program is unique because it would provide people an opportunity to serve their own community while pursuing a career, caring for a family, or attending school. It also would create a civic-minded way for young people to finance their education or a first home. The entire country would benefit from the hours of community service provided.●

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ:

S. 409. A bill to expand the availability of quality affordable child care; to the Committee on Finance.

CHILD CARE ASSISTANCE AND RESOURCES EXPANSION ACT

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President I rise today to introduce the Child Care Assistance and Resources Expansion Act of 1989.

There's an old saying, "the child is the father of the man." It recognizes that our childhood shapes what kind of adults we become. In our rapidly changing society it's more important than ever that we give our youth the kind of support they need to prepare for adult life.

During the past 30 years scores of women, especially mothers of young children, have entered the labor force. Today, 57 percent of all women with children under 6 work outside the home; in 1950, that figure was only 12 percent. Even more critical, more than half of all new mothers now return to work before their child reaches age 1.

Mr. President, we can no longer ignore the changes in the American labor force and the fact that many children are in need of safe, high-quality child-care. My bill, the Child Care Assistance and Resources Expansion Act of 1989—child care—is drafted to improve both the quantity and quality of child care services, keep Federal regulations at an absolute minimum, and be fiscally responsible.

I believe that some of the child care legislation that has been introduced has too much Federal presence. We have to recognize that each State has to have flexibility to meet their particular needs. My bill establishes a National Commission to draw up model standards as guidelines—not regulations—for the States and requires that each State submit a plan to the Secretary of Health and Human Services [HHS] on how they will license and regulate family and group-home child care.

A child care bill should be comprehensive in its approach. It should include both block grants for States and tax incentives for parents and providers. My bill makes the dependent care tax credit refundable for low-income families, those below $20,000. I also provide an infant care tax credit to help a parent stay home with their newborn or newly adopted child for the first 30 months of its life.

My bill provides incentives for family providers to become licensed. It reimburses a family or group-home provider for an additional snack or meal if a child is in their care for more than eight hours. It provides tax credits for home improvements that providers need to become licensed, and that those who are already licensed need to expand or rehabilitate; we all know how tough children can be on a home. Additionally, my bill would expand the Library Services and Construction Act by providing grants for libraries to purchase and deliver children's books, videos, tapes, and toys to licensed family and group-home providers.

Mr. President, we hear a lot about the need for improved quality in child care, but more regulations from Washington won't give you quality. There are existing programs that are proven to increase the child care expertise of family providers and center workers—why invent the wheel again? My bill expands the funding for the National Credentialing Program and State equivalency programs, expands the scholarships for providers, and provides stipends for the advisers.

Finally, my bill urges Congress to appropriate the authorized $10 million for postsecondary institutions to assist economically disadvantaged students with their child care expenses and provides funds for elementary and secondary schools to provide before- and after-school child care programs.

Mr. President, child care is a need that will continue to grow as our Nation moves into the 21st century. It is an area in which the Federal Government needs to provide guidance and assistance. I urge my colleagues to examine my bill and join me in helping provide a safe and secure environment for our children. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill and a section-by-section analysis be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS ON THE CHILD CARE ASSISTANCE AND RESOURCES EXPANSION ACT OF 1989

TITLE I—CHILD CARE GRANT PROGRAM

Authorizes a $500 million block grant to the states. This would be an 80-20 matching grant.

Sets a state's allocation with 50 percent based on the number of working single parents and dual-earner families with children under age 13, and 50 percent on the number of children who are receiving free or reduced price school lunches under the National School Lunch Act.

Requires states to develop certification or licensing regulations for all non-relative family and group home child-care providers by 1994.

Establishes a National Commission to write model standards as a guide for state programs. The Administration, the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the National Governors Association would each select 4 members. The Commission would disband after establishing the model standards.

TITLE II—CHILD CARE FOOD PROGRAM

Provides for an additional snack or meal reimbursement for family and group home providers if a child is in their care for 8 hours or more.

TITLE III—CHILD CARE PROVIDER LIBRARY PROGRAM

Amends the Library Services and Construction Act to authorize funds for public libraries to purchase and deliver (expand the use of bookmobiles) children's books, videos, tapes, and toys to licensed child-care providers.

TITLE IV—CHILD DEVELOPMENT ASSOCIATE SCHOLARSHIP ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Increases funding for the National Credentialing Program and expands the program to include state equivalency programs. It provides for advisor stipends and raises the scholarship eligibility limit.

TITLE V—CHILD CARE EDUCATIONAL PROVISIONS

Provides funding for Local Education Associations to establish or expand before and after school child-care programs. It states that Congress should appropriate the authorized $10 million for postsecondary institutions to assist disadvantaged students to obtain child-care.

TITLE VI—CHILD CARE TAX INCENTIVES

Allows a certified or licensed family or group home provider to receive a tax credit to acquire, rehabilitate, or expand a qualified child-care home and makes the Dependent Care Tax Credit refundable. It modifies the Earned Income Tax credit system so that a parent who stays home with a newborn or newly adopted child until 30 months of age would be eligible for a refund.●

By Mr. WARNER:

S. 410. A bill to amend title 23, United States Code, to establish a program for expanding the capacity of the heavily traveled portions of the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways located in urbanized areas with a population of 50,000 or more for the purposes of reducing traffic congestion, improving safety, and increasing the efficiency of the System; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

EXPANSION OF CERTAIN SEGMENTS OF THE INTERSTATE HIGHWAY SYSTEM

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that will help urban and suburban areas of the country cope with increasing levels of traffic congestion on the Federal Interstate System. Our colleague, Congressman FRANK WOLF, introduced an identical bill today in the other body.

Urban and suburban segments of the Federal Highway System have become increasingly congested as traffic volume has increased beyond expectations. In many areas, the system is simply breaking down under huge loads of traffic.

The legislation we are introducing today would create a new category of Federal highway funding to expand the capacity of heavily traveled portions of the Federal Interstate Highway System located in suburban and urban areas of the country. Beginning in fiscal year 1993, $2 billion a year for 4 years would be made available nationwide for this new program.

Funds authorized under our legislation could also be used for construction of noise walls or other sound abatement devices, acquisition of rights-of-way for construction of mass transit facilities, and acquisition of land for park-and-ride-type facilities.

The type of funding program we have proposed is desperately needed throughout the Nation. The Transportation 2020 Program held a series of 65 forums across the country to discuss the future of the Federal Highway Program. Witness after witness in State after State testified about the critical transportation problems that urban and suburban areas are facing.

In metropolitan areas all over the country, interstate highways approach complete gridlock during peak travel periods. The result is that commuters cannot get to work and interstate commerce cannot flow. That translates into reduced productivity, lost income, and time and money ill-spent.

Funds provided under this legislation could be used to widen interstates where traffic overloads occur daily during rush hours. Bottlenecks could be widened or even double-decked.

Our legislation addresses these critical problems by directing Federal funds to the areas of the country where traffic congestion has virtually closed-down the Federal Interstate Highway System.

Funds would be allocated to the States based on a formula which gives preference to urban/suburban areas with high levels of traffic congestion on the Interstate System. Rural areas of the country, however, would not be adversely affected because the Federal Interstate Construction Program is nearly complete and our legislation does not affect other highway funding categories.

The Interstate System started in 1965 is nearly complete and the current highway program is scheduled to end in 1992. We must begin now to look at changes that need to be made to address our Nation's transportation needs. In the next 2 years northern Virginia, Tidewater Virginia, and other urban/suburban areas of the country face tremendous needs in the area of transportation improvements. Our legislation addresses these needs in a way that will bring relief not only to northern Virginia, but to other regions of the country as well without penalizing rural or less populated areas.

By introducing this legislation, we do not intend to overlook or underestimate the problems facing less urbanized sections of Virginia or the Nation. I intend to work diligently to see that those needs are addressed as well. This bill provides an important starting point for discussion of ways to address one particular aspect of our transportation problem as Federal, State, and local representatives and highway users begin reviewing the Federal-Aid Highway Program over the next 2 years.

It is my intention to work with my colleagues, the States, localities, highway user groups and other interested parties to address other vital transportation needs.

Over the next 2 years, as hearings begin on the Nation's transportation needs in the post-interstate period, these same parties will focus on what form any new highway program should take. If there is to be a new Federal-Aid Highway Program to replace the current program which will soon expire, it is vital that expanding urban interstate capacity be a key component of such legislation.

I urge Members to support this legislation.●

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ (for himself, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. GARN, and Mr. LUGAR):

S. 411. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to restore a capital gians tax differential, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

RESTORATION OF CAPITAL GAINS DIFFERENTIAL

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing legislation to reinstate a capital gains exclusion. I have been pushing capital gains reform since the Tax Reform Act of 1986 repealed the 60 percent exclusion. I am pleased that my effort is starting to pay off. As my colleagues know, President Bush is proposing changes in the tax rate for capital gains, and most of what he recommends is embodied in my bill.

I agree with the President that our Tax Code ought to support individuals willing to make long-term, high-risk investments. I am pleased that he has chosen a phased or tiered approach, tied to a holding period of at least 1 year, initially, and moving to a 3-year holding period for more favorable tax treatment.

My bill provides a two-tiered exclusion for long-term capital gains. Gains realized from the sale of a capital asset held for at least 1 year, would be subject to a 40-percent exclusion, providing the taxpayer with an effective maximum marginal rate of 19.8 percent. If the taxpayer holds the asset for at least 3 years, capital gains would be subject to a 60-percent exclusion for a maximum marginal rate of 13.2 percent.

Mr. President, clearly America is experiencing some pretty good times—low inflation, low unemployment, 19 million new jobs, exports are rising, and capital spending is on the rise. But, in spite of the good news, I don't believe America has been paying enough attention to her economic future. Frankly, although I supported the Tax Reform Act because it extends the tax burden to many corporate and individual taxpayers who should be paying taxes, I firmly believe repealing the capital gians exclusion has made it much more difficult to attract venture capital.

If the current approach, to capital investment and economic development continues, we will see a steady stream of our brightest young entrepreneurs looking outside the United States for their investment capital. Of course, with the outside investment goes the likelihood that technology and jobs will also be shifted to foreign entities who pay no taxes and who would have no obligation to erect job-creating plants in the United States.

We simply must recognize the distinction between ordinary income and capital gains income. The latter form of income is the result of making a commitment for the long term, whether it's by building a business, purchasing stock in a high-risk venture or running a family farm.

I strongly support the President's argument that reducing the tax rate for risky investments is the best way to stimulate long-term real economic growth. When I started my business in Minnesota, the top Federal tax rate was 91 percent. President Kennedy reduced rates to 70 percent—for unearned income—and 50 percent—on earned income. President Reagan dropped them both to 28 percent. Those high rates of earlier years were unfair to the poor and middle Americans. High income taxpayers had enormous motivation and the means to find or create the loopholes—and they succeeded.

Now we've made taxpayers out of those big earners. Government statistics consistently show that the rich pay more taxes at lower rates. All the fancy tax shelters no longer make sense.

A reduction in the capital gains rate will benefit not only the rich, but also low- and middle-income taxpayers, small business owners and family farmers across the country. I agree with President Bush that lower income taxpayers especially have an interest in capital gains reform. His recommendation that such taxpayers pay no tax on their gains is right on the mark.

Consider a typical Midwestern scenario: A hard-working, middle-income couple operates a small business or farm. They own property. Finally, after many years of work, they sell their business or farm that by any measure is modest. Inflation on their real estate and years of depreciation reduce their basis and result in a large gain. In that year they're among the rich and they love it. The next year they revert to their earlier middle-income status. This scenario is played out many time each year across the country.

I have been greatly encouraged by the President's strong support for capital gains reform. He has a vision, I am convinced, of where our economy needs to be heading if we are to compete in the 1990's and beyond. But he will need the support of all of us, Democrats and Republicans. It may be that some will disagree with specific parts of his proposal, but at least he has joined the debate. For that, I thank him.

For my part, I intend to continue pushing this subject in Congress through the Capital Gains Coalition, which I founded last year. I am pleased that our membership in the House and Senate has continued to grow, and I invite my colleagues to contact me if they have an interest in joining this group.

Mr. President, as my colleagues know, my two-tiered approach to capital gains reform is one of several that have been filed already in this Congress by other Members. Clearly, there is renewed interest in this issue and I look forward to vigorous debate here in the Senate in the weeks ahead.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have a copy of my bill printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of S. 411, Senator BOSCHWITZ's capital gains legislation. I have worked with my good friend from Minnesota on this issue for many years and I look foward to working with him again this Congress.

This is a very straightforward bill: It reestablishes a capital gains differential for long-term gains. It would provide a 40-percent exclusion for assets held over 1 year and a 60-percent exclusion for assets held over 3 years. This differs from prior law in that it requires a longer holding period. I favor this broad based approach to the capital gains issue and the 3-year holding period is essential to encourage long-term investment.

While I supported the Tax Reform Act of 1986, I did not support the elimination of a capital gains differential. In fact, Senator BOSCHWITZ and I pushed for retaining a meaningful differential. I strongly disagree with those who claim reinstating a differential would unravel the Tax Act.

Mr. President, the issue of capital gains taxation is probably one of the most controversial tax issues around today. At the heart of the controversy over capital gains is the question of whether it raises revenue or loses revenue. I believe more revenue will be generated by a lowering of the rate—as was the case in previous instances—but clearly this is a contentious issue and there is no definitive answer. Therefore, the debate should focus on what is good for the long-term health of our economy. What will give investors an incentive to avoid short-term speculation and take long-term risks? In my opinion, a lower tax on capital gains is one of the principle answers.

President Bush has made a lowering of the capital gains tax a major goal of his administration, and I look forward to seeing the details of his specific proposal. But the capital gains issue is not a Republican versus Democratic issue, it is not a rich versus poor issue. Last year, I was pleased to join with several of my colleagues in both Houses to form the bipartisan capital gains coalition. Each of us may support a different specific proposal, but we all support a lower capital gains rate to spur capital formation and job creation. I have not, at this point, cosponsored any other capital gains bills, but I commend my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who have introduced bills. This is a very important issue and a healthy debate on all the options will lead to a more thorough analysis and a better resolution of the issue.

By Mr. PACKWOOD (for himself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, and Mr. RIEGLE):

S. 412. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to increase the amount of the credit for expenses with respect to child care for dependent children, to make such credit refundable, to amend the Social Security Act to increase the funds available for child care, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

EXPANDED CHILD CARE OPPORTUNITIES ACT

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, the 101st Congress will face a number of challenges, but none more fundamentally important than the well-being of our Nation's children. Child care was a dominant issue in the last Congress, and will be again in this Congress. President Bush has also made child care a top priority.

The debate in recent months on child care has made the country and the Congress focus on the difficulty working parents have in locating safe, affordable care for their children. I doubt that there is a Member of this body who had not heard from a number of his or her constituents urging him or her to do something about the child care dilemma. The argument on child care is no longer whether the Federal Government should play a role in the solution to the problem but what type of role.

Currently, there are a number of child care bills that have been introduced already in this Congress and a number of other bills still being developed by our colleagues. In my opinion, there are two basic approaches involving the Federal Government in this solution. The first approach would create a Federal bureaucracy based in Washington to exercise control over day care in the 50 States. The second approach would provide parents with the flexibility to exercise their own judgment in the care they select for their children.

Last year, I held a series of child care hearings in Oregon to find out what difficulties Oregonians faced in finding and paying for safe, reliable child care. The lack of affordable child care may, in fact, deter individuals from pursuing an education or obtaining additional training because they are unable to locate care for their children. For example, at a field hearing I held in the community of Pendleton, OR, I heard from students at Blue Mountain Community College. Some of these students told me that they bring their children with them to class because they cannot afford to pay for child care. Parents should not be forced to choose between improving their family's future and caring for their children. Yet this is a choice that many parents are faced with at the present time.

Each family situation is different and the type of child care each family prefers may be different as well. To help families meet the cost of child care, the legislation my colleagues and I introduce today provides financial assistance to working families through the dependent care tax credit. Ideally, parents should be able to choose from a number of child care options and obtain the one that best suits themselves and their children. Our approach maximizes the range of child care options parents can choose for their kids and still receive Government assistance.

Our bill achieves two goals. First, it helps parents pay for their choice of a variety of child care programs. Second, it addresses the need for improved and expanded child care options. Our bill accomplishes the latter by providing States with additional money through the current title XX Social Services block grant to enhance or expand their own child care programs and services.

Our bill also acknowledges the importance of accountability for the receipt of Federal funds. To be eligible for the child care tax credit, the child care provider selected by a parent claiming a tax credit must be in compliance with any applicable local or State regulations.

I am confident that the Congress, working with concerned citizens and the President, will arrive at a solution that provides the best possible child care for our children.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF PACKWOOD-MOYNIHAN EXPANDED CHILD CARE OPPORTUNITIES ACT OF 1989

PURPOSE

To provide low and moderate income parents with a greater variety of child care options and to assist States in improving their child care programs. The Expanded Child Care Opportunities Act of 1989 achieves these goals by increasing the amount of money low and moderate income families have to spend on child care and by increasing the funds available to States for child care services.

MAJOR FEATURES OF THE BILL

The bill has two major features:

The present law child care tax credit is increased and made fully refundable for low and moderate income families.

The present law Social Services Block Grant under Title XX of the Social Security Act is increased by $400 million so that States may improve their child care services.

Each of these features is described below.

INCREASE TO THE CHILD CARE TAX CREDIT

The bill significantly increases the present law child care tax credit for families with income under $25,000. (The present law child care tax credit remains the same for families with income over $25,000.) The bill also makes the credit fully are refundable so that lower income families who pay little or no Federal income tax can take advantage of the credit.

Child Care Tax Credit percentages are increased for low- and moderate-income families:

Over/not more than	Child care tax credit rate (in percent)
	Present law	Packwood-Moynihan bill
Family adjusted gross income (AGI):
$0 to 12,500	28–30	40
$12,500 to 15,000	27–28	37
$15,000 to 17,500	26–27	34
$17,500 to 20,000	25–26	31
$20,000 to 22,500	23–24	28
$22,500 to 25,000	22–23	25
$25,000 to 27,500	21–22	22
$27,500 and over	20	20

Maximum Credit Is Increased:

Under present law, the maximum amount of child care expenses eligible for the credit is $2,400 for one child and $4,800 for two or more children. Thus, the maximum credit at the 30 percent rate is $720 for one child and $1,440 for two or more children.

Under the bill, the maximum credit at the new 40 percent rate would be $960 for one child and $1,920 for two or more children. This represents a one-third increase in the maximum credit. Compare, for example:

Family income (AGI)	Present law	Packwood-Moynihan bill
$10,000 and under	[1] $1,400	$1,920
$15,000	[1] 1,296	1,776
$20,000	1,152	1,448
$30,000 and up	960	960

[1] In fact, these families derive little or no benefit from the present law credit because it is not refundable.

Credit Is Refundable:

In a significant departure from present law, the credit would be made "refundable" for lower income families who pay little or no Federal income tax. A refundable credit is one that is paid even though you have no tax liability. Currently, lower income families do not benefit from the child care tax credit. Under the bill, the child care tax credit reduces your tax liability to zero and then any remaining credit is refunded.

Credit Can Be Received In Parent's Paycheck:

The benefit of the credit is received by the parent throughout the year by reducing wage withholding and/or estimated tax payments.

For lower income families eligible for a refundable credit, the benefit is added to the parent's paycheck as "negative income tax withholding." For example, if the parent's normal take-home pay is $500 and the child care tax credit for that pay period is $50, the parent's paycheck would equal $550.

Compliance with Government Regulation Is Required:

As under present law, the day care provider must operate in compliance with any applicable state or local regulations in order for the parent to claim a tax credit.

Examples Of How The Bill Would Work:

Jack and Jane Miller are a two-worker family living in Medford, Oregon. In 1989, their annual income is $25,000 and federal income tax is $1,800. They pay $350 a month to the Supertots Child Care Center for the care of their two sons, ages three and four. The child care cost for both children is $4,000 annually. Under current law, they are eligible for a child care tax credit of $880. Under the bill, the credit would increase to $1,000. This means an additional $120 would be available to the Millers for their child care costs.

Angela Smith is a young widow with one child living in New York. Her job pays her $12,000 annually. For 1989 her federal income tax is $500. Although she is eligible for a child care tax credit of $700 under current law, she only receives $500 of it—the amount which reduces her income taxes to zero. The rest of the credit is lost because it is not refundable.

Under the bill, her child care tax credit would be increased to $960. And Ms. Smith will receive the full benefit of the credit—instead of only $500 under current law—because $460 of the credit would be refunded to her. Thus, Ms. Smith would have an additional $460 to help with her child care costs.

TITLE XX INCREASE FOR CHILD CARE

The second major feature of this bill provides additional funds for child care as part of the present law Social Services Block Grant (Title XX of the Social Security Act).

Under Title XX, states will receive additional funds to correct deficiencies in the supply of child care and to expand and improve the quality of child care services, with an emphasis on lower income families. Within these broad guidelines, states will have wide latitude to determine how best to use these funds.

To be eligible for these funds, a State must submit a written application for approval by the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services.

Funds would be allocated among the States based on the number of children under age 13.

Beginning with FY 1990, Title XX funds for child care will increase by $400 million. This represents a significant increase over the Title XX funds currently used for child care services.●

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today with my friend and colleague from Oregon, the distinguished ranking member of the Senate Committee on Finance, Senator PACKWOOD, to introduce the Expanded Child Care Opportunities Act of 1989 [ECCO].

This is a simple but important bill. It does two things: First, it corrects an inequity in the current Tax Code that deprives low-income working families of the child care tax credit. Our bill will make sure that low-income working families benefit from the credit by making it fully refundable. In addition, our bill will make the credit more generous for the lowest-income families. I want to stress that in making these improvements to the credit we do not in any way reduce the credit available under current law.

Second, our proposed bill would provide States with additional funds, through the social services block grant—title XX of the Social Security Act—for child-care related services and activities.

THE CHANGING AMERICAN FAMILY

Mr. President, the American family has changed dramatically during the last two decades. During this time, we have witnessed a new phenomenon which has no precedent in modern American history: the stagnation of growth in family income. Since 1973, median family income has remained essentially flat: $30,820 in 1973, $30,853 in 1987. More troubling, black and Hispanic families have actually seen a precipitous decline in income. For black families, median family income peaked at $18,952 in 1978. By 1987 it had declined nearly $900 to $18,098. For Hispanic families, median family income peaked at $22,288 in 1973; by 1987, it had declined by nearly $2,000 to $20,306.

Over the same time period, our economy—indeed, our social condition—has been transformed by the entry of unprecedented numbers of women into the work force. Today, over 70 percent of all mothers are in the labor force. Over half of all mothers with preschool-age children are in the labor force: 57 percent with children under 6, 53 percent with children under 3, and, for the first time in our Nation's history, 51 percent with infants under age 1 are returning to work. Many of these working mothers are driven by economic necessity—as the income statistics I mentioned a moment ago make all too plain.

Another social fact commands our attention. I call it the dual family system. We have become a society divided into two kinds of families. The first is the intact family, where both parents live together at home. The second, increasing in number, is the single-parent family. One child in two will at some point live in a single-parent, usually a female-headed household. The Bureau of the Census projects that only 39 percent of children born last year will live with both biological parents until age 18.

There is an important economic dimension to this dual family system; indeed, we may be entering an era in which the dual family system defines the gradations of social class in America. Simply put, intact families are better off than single-parent families. In 1986, counting all cash, in-kind, and tax transfers, the Census Bureau reports that children in married-couple families are far less likely to be poor than those in single-parent families. White children in intact families experienced poverty at the rate of 7 percent, blacks 11 percent, and hispanics 20 percent. Their counterparts in female-headed families suffered a more terrible fate: poverty rates of 34 percent for white children, 50 percent for black, and 48 percent for Hispanic.

In sum, median family income has remained virtually stagnant over the past generation; mothers have entered the labor force in record numbers; and the country has entered upon an era in which half its children will live in single-parent families and, thus, will very likely be poor.

It is essential, then, that we do all we can to enable parents to better the economic status of their families through work. One sure way to help is by ensuring that parents have the wherewithal to afford decent child care.

CHILD CARE AND THE WORKING PARENT

There is a wide range of child care options available, from relatives and family day care homes to church run day care centers to private for-profit child care centers to employer-provided child care services.

Sandra L. Hofferth of the Urban Institute estimates that, in 1986, there were 63,000 day care centers with the capacity to serve some 2 million children. That same year, there were approximately 165,000 licensed homes with room for about half a million children. Dr. Hofferth's study shows that another 2.7 million children could be served in available unlicensed day care homes and day care centers, putting the total number of day care spaces in out-of-home, nonrelative care settings at 5.3 million.

As I say, a wide range of options exists; however, not all options are readily affordable for low-income families. In 1986, the average payment per week for compensated child care was $53 for a preschooler for 40 hours of care. This translates to approximately $2,800 per year. For a minimum wage earner, earning about $7,000 per year, child care costs could consume as much as 40 percent of earnings.

Clearly, for low- and middle-income families, child care at these prices constitutes a major burden. On average, according to Hofferth:

> Among those who pay for care, child care expenditures constitute a substantial proportion of the total weekly income of American families who pay for care . . . as high as 20 to 25 percent among poor families.

THE FAMILY SUPPORT ACT OF 1988

In the Family Support Act of 1988 (Pub. L. 100-485), we created a new capped entitlement program for welfare families called the JOBS Program. The JOBS Program will help poor parents who are AFDC recipients prepared to enter the labor force by providing education, training, and work experience.

While welfare families are participating in the JOBS Program, the Family Support Act guarantees them child care. When those families are ready to make the transition from the welfare rolls to payrolls, the Family Support Act provides 1 year of transitional child care services.

Mr. President, the refundable child care tax credit we propose today will pick up where the Family Support Act leaves off.

THE CHILD CARE TAX CREDIT

The Congress has long recognized that low- and middle-income families need help with child care expenses. A tax break for child care expenses was first enacted as section 214 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. At that time, a deduction was granted to working women, widowers, and legally separated or divorced men for specified employment-related dependent care expenses.

In 1976, the dependent care tax deduction was replaced by a nonrefundable tax credit. The credit was set at a flat 20 percent for all families for work-related dependent care expenses up to $2,000 for one qualifying individual and $4,000 for two or more qualifying individuals. A qualifying individual was defined as a dependent under the age of 15, physically or mentally incapacitated dependent, or a physically or mentally incapacitated spouse.

In 1982, the maximum credit was increased to 30 percent of dependent care expenses, phasing down gradually to 20 percent, by 1 percentage point for each $2,000 of adjusted gross income above $10,000. At the same time, the maximum amount of dependent care expenses to which the credit could be applied was increased to $2,400 for one dependent and to $4,800 for two or more dependents.

In 1988, the Family Support Act modified the definition of a qualifying individual to dependents under age 13, instead of 15.

The credit works well. It is estimated that, in 1988, nearly 10,000 families will claim the credit, for an average amount of $419. There is but one flaw. The families most in need—those working for low wages but with fixed child-care costs—do not now fully benefit from the credit. Many receive no benefit at all. This is because the existing dependent care credit is not refundable. If a family's Federal tax liability exceeds the credit, then the family fully benefits. If the credit exceeds tax liability, then the family benefits in part. If there is no Federal tax liability, there is no benefit. Consider: These families work. They must pay for child care. They earn too little to owe Federal taxes. Yet we deprive them of the child-care tax credit. And we compounded the problem with our sweeping 1986 tax reform legislation.

In the Tax Reform Act of 1986, Congress did something revolutionary: We removed 6 million low-income families from the tax rolls. We are deservedly proud of that act; we stopped taxing people into poverty. However, in removing the working poor from the tax rolls, we inadvertently denied them the child care tax credit. Recall: No tax liability, no dependent care credit. Period.

We are here today to correct this inequity in our Tax Code.

THE EXPANDED CHILD CARE OPPORTUNITIES ACT

The bipartisan legislation we introduce today will do two important things: First, it makes the existing dependent care tax credit refundable and more generous—thereby providing real relief for lower-income families. Second, it will provide additional funds, through the social services block grant—title XX of the Social Security Act—for States to expand and improve their child care services.

By making the dependent care credit refundable, low-income working families with no Federal tax liability will be paid the value of the credit in cash. As under current law, families with income tax liability may apply the credit to the amount of Federal income taxes they owe. If there is limited Federal income tax liability, the credit can be used to reduce that liability to zero and any remaining credit will be paid to the family in cash. Families may claim their credit at the end of the tax year or they may receive the credit throughout the year through reduced Federal wage withholding in each paycheck.

Our bill would also make the credit more generous for lower-income families. Specifically, we increase the maximum credit from 30 percent of dependent care costs of up to $2,400 for one dependent—$4,800 for two or more—to 40 percent. We also modify the credit phase-down. Under current law, the credit begins phasing down for families with adjusted gross incomes above $10,000. Under our legislation, the 40-percent credit will not begin phasing down until a family's adjusted gross income exceeds $12,500.

We recognize that an expanded child-care tax credit by itself may not address some of the current problems with the supply of child care. We know, for example, that there is a shortage of infant care nearly everywhere. We know that some geographical areas have a shortage of child care providers. We also know that States are trying to improve their information and referral services and to better monitor child care providers.

In order to assist States with these and other child-care concerns, title II of our legislation will increase the social services block grant available to States by $400 million in fiscal year 1990 and future fiscal years. These new funds would be earmarked specifically for child care services. States will have wide latitude in determining how best to spend these new resources to improve the availability, accessibility, affordability, and quality of child care. The $400 million will be allocated among States based on the population of children aged 12 and younger. States will be prohibited from using these funds to supplant existing expenditures on child care. The bill also requires the Secretary of HHS to report to the Congress annually on how States are using these funds and, within 3 years from the date of enactment, to evaluate the program and to make recommendations on how it might be improved.

Mr. President, the Expanded Child Care Opportunities Act corrects a grave injustice in our Tax Code—one that punishes low-income working families—and provides States with some additional Federal resources to use as they best see fit to improve their child care services.

The Joint Tax Committee estimates our tax-credit provision will cost $2.6 billion in the first full year of operation. Together with the $400 million increase in title XX funding, our bill weighs in at $3 billion. This is not an inconsiderable sum. And yet, Mr. President, I suggest that the long-term cost of turning our backs on working American families and their children is far higher.

I urge my colleagues to join with Senators PACKWOOD, PRYOR, DANFORTH, HEINZ, ROCKEFELLER, RIEGLE, and me in support of this important legislation.●

By Mr. CHAFEE (for himself, Mr. BAUCUS, and Mr. HOLLINGS):

S.J. Res. 61. Joint resolution to designate April 1989 as "National Recycling Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL RECYCLING MONTH

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today Senator BAUCUS and I are introducing legislation to designate April 1989 as National Recycling Month. The importance of educating the public about the real benefits to society from recycling cannot be overstated.

A public education campaign must be launched to inform consumers that garbage does not disappear when the sanitation worker loads it into the truck. Our society must be made aware that there are very real costs, both financial and environmental, associated with the continued proliferation of municipal garbage.

In the United States today we are facing a crisis in solid waste management. The United States presently is generating about 160 million tons of solid waste, almost double the amount we produced in 1965. If present trends continue, the United States will generate close to 200 million tons by the turn of the century. Towns and cities across the United States are realizing that the city dump will be forced to close its gates in a few short years. In the meantime, during the last two decades the number of landfills accepting solid waste has been reduced dramatically—from about 30,000 to 6,000. It is becoming virtually impossible to establish any new landfill sites because of the "not in my backyard syndrome," and the rising value of land and real estate.

When confronting an urgent crisis, such as the threat to human health and the environment from burgeoning mountains of trash, it is tempting to look to technology to provide us with the easy solution. Such technological fixes, however, will not eliminate the undeniable need for significant changes in the way we conduct our daily lives. Not only must we find more environmentally sound ways of handling municipal trash, but we must also greatly reduce the amount of garbage we generate in the first place. This will require a concerted effort on the part of consumers, manufacturers, and government. That is why we are introducing legislation to designate April 1989 as National Recycling Month.

Reducing the amount of household garbage we generate poses the most difficult of public policy problems: changing human habits. The purpose of this legislation is to encourage a public attitude that can allow these needed changes to take place. People must be made aware that their actions do have a critical impact on reducing the amount of garbage entering the waste stream.

It is imperative that people learn sound disposal practices at an early age, so that by adulthood those practices will have become habit. The primary reason we have selected April as National Recycling Month is so that schools will have an opportunity to commemorate the month with appropriate educational activities centered around source separation and recycling.

My home State of Rhode Island, for example, was the first State to pass a mandatory recycling law. Citizens in West Warwick and East Greenwich, RI, separate recyclables such as glass, paper, aluminum and plastics for curbside collection. This recycling program will eventually extend to the entire State.

Recycling also creates employment. According to one recent study 10,000 tons of material spawns 36 jobs compared to 6 for landfilling the same amount. Some communities have formed working partnerships with workshops for the disabled, developed and administered job training partnerships, or otherwise found work for unemployed labor in recycling programs. In my own State, the Rhode Island Department of Environmental Management estimates that 300 jobs have been created by recycling.

The exciting feature of the battle against solid waste is that it can be won. Other nations are doing far better than we are. No drastic solutions are required, nor are big sacrifices sought. Relatively small changes in habits, modest incentives, and reasonable laws can produce victory. I urge my colleagues to help us move closer toward that victory by joining us in designating April 1989 as National Recycling Month. I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 61

Whereas a solid waste disposal crisis exists in the United States;

Whereas half of the major cities in the United States will have no space available for disposal of garbage within 4 years;

Whereas trash incineration and nonincineration industries should adopt recycling methods;

Whereas source separation, mechanical separation, and community-based recycling programs divert a significant portion of waste from landfills;

Whereas recycling preserves limited landfill capacity for disposal of nontoxic waste;

Whereas recycling saves energy and avoids the pollution created in extracting resources from their natural environment;

Whereas the revenues from goods recovered by public sector recycling programs help to offset the costs of the programs;

Whereas shared savings, which accrue by avoiding the higher cost of landfills or incineration, make recycling an economically efficient disposal policy even where markets for recycled materials are weak or undeveloped;

Whereas a well-developed system of recycling scrap metals, paper, and glass already exists and significantly reduces the quantity of solid waste composed of metal, paper, and glass;

Whereas substantial increases in the amount of materials recycled will require development of markets that absorb the increase in the amount of materials recycled, known as incremental markets;

Whereas many consumer products are designed without sufficient regard for safe and efficient recycling after disposal;

Whereas the Federal Government and State and local governments should enact legislative measures that will increase the amount of solid waste that is recycled;

Whereas the Federal Government and State and local governments should encourage the growth of incremental markets for materials recovered from recyclable goods;

Whereas the Federal Government and State and local governments should promote the design of products that can be recycled safely and efficiently after use;

Whereas the Federal Government and State and local governments should establish requirements for in-home separation of waste to enable efficient recycling; and

Whereas the people of the United States should be encouraged to participate in educational and legislative endeavors that promote waste separation methods, community-based recycling programs, and expanded utilization of recovered materials: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That April 1989 is designated as "National Recycling Month", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.●

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise in support of legislation to designate April 1989 as "National Recycling Month."

Recycling is a good idea whose time has come. Many Americans agree. A recent survey by the National Solid Waste Management Association shows overwhelming support for recycling. Over 80 percent of those questioned support recycling and believe it could make a substantial dent in the amount of solid waste.

But while we all believe in recycling, only about 10 percent of our garbage is currently being recycled. The rest is thrown away, and that may be the biggest waste of all.

We must start to recycle more and throw out less, or we could easily be buried in waste. Our Nation is the clear leader of the throw away society. Each American tosses nearly 3½ pounds of paper, cans, food, and yard wastes every day. By contrast, the Japanese toss out about 3 pounds per day.

Most of our garbage, nearly 85 percent, ends up in one of the Nation's 6,000 existing municipal landfills. In the next 5 years we can expect one-third of these to close. And within 10 years over half will be full. At the same time, our waste heap will continue to grow by another 40 million tons.

As you can see, unless we change our ways, we will run out of places to dump our trash. We will no longer be known as the land of opportunity, but the landfill of opportunity. And while recycling isn't the answer to our problems, it is a giant step in the right direction. And it is one we can all take.

Much of our garbage can be recycled. Some is being recycled. Large scale recycling is fact, not fiction. It is happening now.

Several States have set up programs to turn their waste into recycled paper, bottles and cans. And several manufacturers have done the same.

One of the best examples is aluminum can recycling. It's an American success story we can all learn from. Aluminum can manufacturers, as the story goes, decided they could save money and resources by using cans over and over and over again. So between 1980 and 1988 they recycled nearly 270 billion aluminum cans. And these cans ended up on our store shelves and not in our landfills.

But we need to do much, much more. We must make recycling a part of our daily lives. It must become as common as our morning coffee. Like the aluminum can manufacturers we must treat our waste as a resource, not refuse.

By designating April 1989 as "National Recycling Month" we can begin to get the word out that recycling makes good sense. It is an investment for the future. It will divert some of our waste from landfills. And it will save energy and resources by reusing what we would have thrown away.

But designating April as "National Recycling Month" is just the beginning. We can't simply talk about recycling, our actions not our words are what matters.

We must educate the public about recycling. We must share technical information on recycling. We must manufacture products that can be more easily recycled. We must stimulate and expand our recycling markets. And we must provide the tools and resources to make it happen.

Later this month I will introduce legislation to reauthorize RCRA. Like the RCRA bill I introduced last year, it provides a structure to make recycling happen.

But it goes beyond recycling. It also provides the tools and resources to help our manufacturers develop products, packages and other consumer goods that generate less waste in the first place. And last but certainly not least it puts in place the control necessary to safely manage waste that we can not reduce and cannot recycle.

The problem is too large and too complex for a single solution. Nevertheless, designating April as "National Recycling Month" is a good start. In the short term, it will help to enlighten us on the benefits of recycling. In the longer term, it will help us recognize how recycling, together with waste reduction and better waste management will lead to a safer environment for everyone. I urge my colleagues to help achieve these benefits by designating "April 1989 as National Recycling Month."●

SENATE RESOLUTION 59—COMMENDING THE GOVERNMENT AND PEOPLE OF PAKISTAN ON THEIR RETURN TO DEMOCRACY

Mr. PELL (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. KERRY, Mr. SIMON, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. HARKIN, and Mr. DODD) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 59

Whereas on November 16, 1988, the most free and fair elections in the history of Pakistan were held.

Whereas the elections were held in an orderly fashion and without any election-related fatalities.

Whereas the support of President Ghulam Ishaq Khan, of the Judiciary and of the Military was essential to the restoration of democracy in Pakistan.

Whereas the elections produced an electoral victory for Benazir Bhutto and the Pakistan People's Party.

Whereas Benazir Bhutto has shown extraordinary political and personal courage in the face of prolonged imprisonment and family tragedy.

Whereas Prime Minister Bhutto has moved swiftly to restore full human rights to the people of Pakistan by ordering the release of all political prisoners and the end of restrictions on the written and electronic media.

Whereas Prime Minister Bhutto has pledged to continue Pakistan's steadfast support of freedom for the Afghan people, has promised that Pakistan will not develop nuclear weapons, and has undertaken initiatives to improve relations with India.

Now therefore be it resolved, that the Senate of the United States:

(1) Commends the Government and people of Pakistan on the holding of free and fair elections and for the return to democracy.

(2) Congratulates Benazir Bhutto on her election as Prime Minister of Pakistan and wishes here a successful administration.

(3) Expresses its deep appreciation to President Ghulam Ishaq Khan, Chief Justice Nasrullah, and Chief of Army Staff Beg for their critical role in insuring the successful transition to democracy in Pakistan.

(4) Commends Prime Minister Bhutto for her prompt actions to free political prisoners and restore full human rights and expresses its support for her foreign policy statements on Afghanistan, nuclear weapons, and relations with India.

(5) Expresses its strong support for Pakistan's new democracy, reiterates its commitment to the security and independence of Pakistan, and affirms its willingness to assist the new government's efforts to address Pakistan's many economic and social problems.

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution cosponsored by myself and Senators KENNEDY, LUGAR, SARBANES, HUMPHREY, KERRY, SIMON, KASSEBAUM, MOYNIHAN, BOSCHWITZ, DODD, and HARKIN to congratulate the government and people of Pakistan on the return of that country to democracy.

On November 16, 1988, Pakistan held a remarkable election. Throughout the country, tens of millions of Pakistanis lined up to cast ballots in the first free and fair elections in that country since the 1970's. As remarkable, the elections were conducted almost completely without violence. On November 16, 1988, no Pakistani died in election-related violence, an unprecedented achievement for south Asia, much less for Pakistan.

The election victor was Benazir Bhutto, a truly astonishing young woman. Educated at Harvard and Oxford, Ms. Bhutto returned to Pakistan in 1977 just weeks before her father's government was overthrown by General Zia ul-Haq. She was thrust into the fight to save her father's life, and following his execution, picked up his political mantle.

For her efforts she was imprisoned. In 1981, for most of the year she was held in solitary confinement in an unventilated class C cell. It was not until 1984 that she was released thanks in good measure to the efforts of many Members of Congress who worked with me to try to secure her freedom.

In the face of great adversity, Benazir Bhutto has shown astonishing courage. In 1988 things changed for her. In the space of 12 months, she got married, built a house, wrote a book, had a baby, ran a national election campaign, and took her first salaried job as Prime Minister of her country.

I think we all wish the new Prime Minister of Pakistan the greatest success. More importantly, however, we hope that the return to democracy will be irreversible in Pakistan. And in this regard, the United States has a part to play.

Pakistan's new democracy faces immense social and economic problems. The new government arrived to find the treasury empty and a tough new IMF austerity plan to be implemented. Over the years of military dictatorship, basic human needs have been ignored. As a result, literacy has declined in the last 20 years from 37 to 27 percent; each year 700,000 Pakistani children under the age of 5 die. The success of democracy will depend on the new government's ability to address these problems. The United States generously aided Pakistan in the years of dictatorship; we must do no less now that Pakistan is a democracy.●

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I join my good friend from Rhode Island, Senator PELL and others, in introducing a resolution commending the Government and people of Pakistan for the return to democracy in their country. It is entirely fitting that one of the first actions of the 101st Congress will be to join together in praise of the newest member of the growing family of democracies in Asia. I urge my colleagues to support this important resolution and to ensure its swift and overwhelming passage.

Nearly a decade ago, the deposed Pakistani Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto was sentenced to death and executed by General Zia ul-Haq. His eldest daughter and protege, Benazir Bhutto, assumed control of her father's People's Party but was persecuted by General Zia and forced to spend the next 7 years in jail, house arrest, and exile. Yet during that time, Benazir never gave in to her oppressors and never gave up on her dream of democracy for Pakistan.

Directly or indirectly, Pakistan has been ruled longer by the military than by civilians since the founding of that country over four decades ago. But tide of democracy that swept across the Philippines, that touched the shores of South Korea was lapping at the shores of Pakistan. And the people of Pakistan's yearning for justice, freedom, and democracy grew into an unyielding determination to achieve those ideals.

Bhutto returned to Pakistan in 1986 and ignited the hopes and dreams of the Pakistani people for freedom. Undaunted by the social concerns of many who objected to a woman's involvement in politics in a Moslem country, Benazir quickly came to symbolize the road to a better life for the majority of the impoverished Pakistani people. She gave hope to the children who cannot read, to the father who has no job, to the woman who cannot exercise her basic rights. She gave a new hope to a nation yearning to enjoy the basic rights and liberties of a free country.

The growing desire for change pressured General Zia to schedule elections for the fall of 1988. But he also moved promptly to ensure those elections would not be fair by prohibiting party based elections and disbanding the cabinet and national assembly. The people of Pakistan faced monumental obstacles in their quest for freedom.

Suddenly, in a tragic and as yet unexplained plane crash, General Zia and many of his top military men were killed. America also lost one of our finest citizens and dedicated public servants, Arnold Raphel.

That tragic and brutal act of fate, however, changed the landscape of Pakistani politics. The democracy that had been but a distant hope suddenly became a real and obtainable possibility. And Benazir Bhutto quickly reached out to all segments of Pakistani society—the poor, the businesses, the landed gentry—and instilled in them a confidence in her ability not only to lead a political party, but to govern a nation.

And in a tribute to the sophistication of the Pakistani people and their unwavering determination to bring democracy to this country, the election campaign was calm, free, and fair. With Benazir in the lead, the people broke the long cycle of military control and brutal election violence known so well to the people of that nation. Finally, on November 16, 1988, free and fair elections were held in Pakistan for the first time in nearly two decades. In what will surely become a watershed in Asian politics, this Moslem nation of 100 million Pakistanis voted to return their nation to the family of democracies—and they choose as their leader, 35-year-old Benazir Bhutto—the first woman to head a sovereign Moslem nation.

I share a special pride in the accomplishments of this extraordinary woman. For as a young woman, she came to Massachusetts to receive her education in international relations at Harvard University. Benazir has many friends in Massachusetts and across this Nation who know she will always remain a true friend of the United States.

The new Pakistani Prime Minister faces serious challenges in the day ahead. The democratic transition in Pakistan is fragile at best and she must keep a coterie of senior political figures and military men in close check. The economy is fragile and the future of neighboring Afghanistan is uncertain. The questions of nuclear proliferation must be resolved.

However, Prime Minister Bhutto has already demonstrated her ability to govern and take control. In an early test of her power, the military had given preliminary permission for a plane to land in Pakistan carrying Soviet gunmen without her consent or knowledge. Upon learning of the decision, she acted swiftly and decisively to prevent the terrorists from landing in her country.

Today we stand at the threshold of a new era in Asia where justice and democracy reigns. I join with my colleagues in commending the people of Pakistan and Benazir Bhutto for their historic and monumental accomplishments. The resolution before us sends a clear message that the people of the United States stand firmly behind this progress and stand ready to support it.

Let our two nations work together to solidify these democratic achievements, to promote peace in Afghanistan, to better Indo-Pakistani relations, and to stem the spread of nuclear weapons and materials. Let us act today to promote these goals by approving the important resolution before us.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 61—RELATING TO FIGHTER SALES TO JAPAN

Mr. DIXON (for himself, Mr. HELMS, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. BYRD, Mr. BURNS, Mr. FORD, Mr. GORE, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. LOTT, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. COHEN, and Mr. HUMPHREY) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 61

Whereas the United States world market position in many manufacturing and high-technology areas, such as semiconductors, has deteriorated because of earlier such transfers of American technology to Japan in other industries;

Whereas the United States has a large trade deficit with several countries, particularly with Japan (more than 50 billion dollars in 1988);

Whereas selling Japan advanced fighter plane technology represents a significant leap in capability for Japan's aerospace industry, and may eventually enable it to compete with U.S. aircraft manufacturers in the world market;

Whereas the Japanese can purchase General Dynamic's F-16 at one-third the cost of the FSX and thus reduce Japan's trade surplus with the United States; and

Whereas a strong American industrial base is critical to the security and national defense of the United States, and the best interest of the United States can only be served by thoroughly examining the long-term impact of the FSX program on the United States industrial base: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That (a) the Senate has strong reservations about the long-term impact on the United States aerospace industry that may result from the sale of United States advanced fighter technology to Japan's Mitsubishi Heavy Industries.

(b) It is the sense of the Senate that the President should—

(1) delay notifying Congress under section 36 of the Arms Export Control Act of the sale of General Dynamics F-16 fighter aircraft technology to Japan's Mitsubishi Heavy Industries for 60 days while a further review is undertaken by the Departments of State, Commerce, Labor, Energy, the CIA, DoD, Office of Science and Technology Policy, and the Office of the United States Trade Representative, and;

(2) examine closely the program's long-term impact on the health and competitiveness of the United States aerospace industry, and;

(3) submit a report containing his findings within sixty days of the passage this resolution to the Chairmen of the U.S. Senate Committees on Foreign Relations and Armed Services.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this resolution to the President.

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, last week 11 Senators and I sent a letter to President Bush asking him to thoroughly examine the pending Japanese-United States FSX Fighter Co-Development Program for its long-term impact, on the health and competitiveness of American Aerospace industries. Several of my colleagues and I are concerned that the transfer of United States F-16 fighter technology now would represent a substantial boost in the development of Japan's aerospace industry. Consequently, this could bolster Japan's aerospace competitiveness in future markets. We are also concerned that the Commerce Department was not consulted by the Defense Department on the long-term industry and trade aspects of this program, despite language in the 1988 Defense Authorization Act calling for consultation, which was introduced by my good friend Senator JEFF BINGAMAN. I am disturbed by the fact that this program is about to go into effect without an exhaustive review of the long-term impact on our aerospace industry.

Now, Mr. President, I understand that, according to Defense News, the Department of Defense "hopes to resolve by Friday" the remaining issues pertaining to the sale of United States F-16 fighter technology to the Japanese. I certainly don't believe, and I'm sure several of my colleagues don't believe, that the administration can conduct an extensive review of the FSX program in just 7 days. I agreed with the senior Senator from North Carolina, my friend Senator HELMS, when he asked Secretary of State-designate James Baker to have the administration review this program for 60 days.

In my view, finalizing this complicated agreement with Japan during a leadership transition period probably couldn't have come at a worse time. The current administration did not negotiate the FSX deal, but has the responsibility of making the final decision without the benefit of having participated in the negotiations. This problem is compounded by pressures to continue this deal before moneys budgeted for this program by the Japanese Government are lost on March 31.

Japanese budget pressures aside, my Senate colleagues and I believe that a fresh and in-depth look at this FSX program by the new administration is needed. I want to reemphasize our serious concerns about the impact this program may have on the health of our aerospace industry as expressed in our letter a week ago and by my statement about this deal submitted for the RECORD last Thursday. To insure that there can be no doubt about the serious reservations we have about the benefits of this deal, Mr. President, I would like to introduce a sense of the Senate Resolution that expresses our reservations about the FSX program as it now stands. This resolution asks that the President delay notifying Congress of his intent to sell F-16 fighter technology to Japan for 60 days while a thorough review of the FSX program is conducted by several executive offices, to include the Commerce Department. The resolution also asks that the President report his findings to Congress.

To conduct an exhaustive study of this program is the least we can do for taxpayers who have paid billions of dollars to develop F-16 technology and for those in the aerospace industry who have worked hard to make the United States the undisputed world leader in this industry. They deserve a comprehensive review of this deal, not a parochial perspective provided by just the Departments of Defense and State. This is one area that we can improve on by following methods used by the Japanese. The Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry is actively involved in both civilian and military domestic production programs and influences decisions pertaining to them. We need to follow this example by insuring that the Commerce Department is extensively involved in codevelopment and coproduction programs such as FSX. Congress obviously made it clear in last year's authorization act that this should be done, but apparently the Defense Department wasn't listening.

And finally Mr. President, as a reminder to all of us, if we do not closely look at this issue from an aerospace competitive standpoint, the Japanese certainly will. To quote from a GOA, study on the United States F-15 coproduction program with Japan, the Japanese "Ministry of International Trade and Industry recognizes that the F-15 and P-3C programs, as well as commercial joint ventures, provide the industry new technology." The study also pointed out that the "Ministry of International Trade and Industry has stated that technological developments of both civil and military aircraft mutually supplement and complement each other, because development and manufacturing techniques of both are closely related, and technological spinoffs can be mutually anticipated". In other words, the Japanese intend to extract from the FSX program any manufacturing methods or technology that may benefit the development of their commercial or defense industries. The Japanese are closely examining the FSX program to ensure the long-term health and competitiveness of their aerospace industry. So should we.●

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I want to join my colleagues in asking President Bush to postpone and more carefully review the sale of F-16 fighter aircraft technology worth an estimated $7 billion to Japan to aid the development of their so-called FSX aircraft.

The aerospace industry is one of the last areas in which America holds a predominant market position. In case after case, foreign industries have taken advantage of American industrial technology without having to foot the bill for research and development. Frequently the foreign companies are subsidized by their Government. In the case of TV's, VCR's and semiconductors, foreign industries have turned these advantages into devastating attacks on U.S. industries.

Mr. President, that is exactly what I do not want to have happen with our aerospace technology, especially the technology for our most advanced and successful fighter aircraft, the F-16. All U.S. industries must learn to effectively compete on the world market, but they should have the opportunity to do so on a level playing field.

I would note that today many of our allies including Japan, are not carrying their fair share of the common allied defense burden. Many of us are asking why, in the current world economy, the United States continues to carry the lion's share of that burden.

The United States spends billions of dollars to defend allies around the world. To do so, we spend roughly 6 percent of our GNP on our military. Japan, a country that makes $32 billion a year on its car exports to America alone, spends roughly 1 percent of its growing GNP on defense.

Instead of Japan spending its limited defense funds on this 10-year fighter development project, that money could be put to immediate work bolstering Japan's current defenses.

Mr. President, it cost the American taxpayers about $7 billion to develop the F-16 fighter. I am not saying we should not help our allies with that defense knowledge. But we can and should do so in a way that will not injure U.S. economic competitiveness. In fact, America offered to sell the F-15, the F-18, or the F-16 to Japan outright, which would have protected our technology, provided Japan with the finest aircraft money can buy, and eased United States-Japan trade deficit. But State and Defense Department negotiators allowed the Japanese to prevail in their wish to receive the underlying F-16 technology.

Mr. President, I do not think that Japan or any other country would strike a deal that might sell one of their industries short in the future. On its face the FSX deal we are about to consummate could do just that. Accordingly it makes sense for the Bush administration and Congress to take a closer look at the issue.

Our resolution calls on the Bush administration to delay the technology sale announcement for 60 days during which the long term impact of the sale can be studied more thoroughly. I urge its adoption.●

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

L. CARY BITTICK

● Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding law enforcement officer, L. Cary Bittick, executive director of the National Sheriffs' Association. Cary is retiring on March 1, 1989. Cary's career as a law enforcement officer began in 1961, when he was elected sheriff of Monroe County, GA, a position he held for 22 years. His family has a long history in Monroe County law enforcement with his father serving as sheriff prior to 1961 and his son as the currently elected sheriff.

As sheriff, Cary served as a member of the National Sheriffs' Association Board of Directors and its executive committee for over 10 years. He served as its president from 1981 to 1982.

As a leader in the law enforcement community, Cary has received many exemplary citations. He has served on many national committees such as the National Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies; the Advisory Committee on State and Local Training at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, and as a member of the advisory board of the National Crime Information Center.

Throughout the last 28 years, he has served diligently in his law enforcement efforts at the local and national levels bringing about many innovative and progressive changes. Cary's strong leadership and commonsense approach to challenges facing criminal justice practitioners at all levels has served as an encouragement to all of us.

Upon retiring, Cary intends to remain active in local and national law enforcement activities.

I am sure my colleagues join me in commending him for his dedicated and loyal service and wishing him the best in his retirement and the future.●

THE RECENT DEPOSIT FEE PROPOSAL

● Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, few problems are more pressing as we begin this 101st Congress than the mounting crisis that exists in this Nation's savings and loan industry. Conservative estimates put the total cost of funding our insolvent deposit insurance fund at $50 billion, while several estimates envision the ultimate cost to be closer to $100 billion. In the face of a crisis of this magnitude, the American people demand that changes be made and that responsible decisionmaking take place. The recent proposal to place a fee on deposits is not only an ill-conceived solution to the problem, but it flies in the face of the very thing we should be encouraging—increasing this Nation's dangerously low personal savings rate.

CRITICISMS OF PROPOSAL

Mr. President, we are told that this deposit fee proposal will generate over $7 billion a year for the ailing deposit insurance fund, and that these moneys will adequately fund the deposit insurance system. This may be true, but lets not lose sight of the forest for the trees. The immediate effect of placing a fee on deposits will be to send money out of banks and savings and loans, and into mutual funds, money market accounts and other uninsured investments. As a nation that has a personal savings rate of less than 4 percent of gross national product, the last thing we should do is establish disincentives for people to save. It seems to me that this proposal for curing for the savings and loan crisis may well have side effects that are worse than the disease.

I must admit Mr. President, despite the seriousness of the problems that we face regarding the savings and loan industry, I am somewhat amused at the debate that has been going on in this town over what the Treasury's proposal should be called. You would hardly know we were talking about the same subject when you hear some people refer to the proposal as a deposit fee, while others call it anything from an insurance premium, user fee to a tax increase. Semantics aside, let me just go on record as stating that this proposal—under any name—is simply a bad idea that should die a swift and certain death.

PROPOSED SOLUTIONS

Mr. President, in the weeks and months ahead Congress and the administration will be charged with the responsibility of finding a bipartisan, long term solution to the savings and loan crisis. Merely finding fault with other peoples solutions will not be enough. The American people demand that we return this Nation's financial institutions to sound footing.

One proposal which merits our careful consideration is the splitting up of the duties of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to separate the insurance and regulation duties from those involving the chartering of thrifts and the promotion of home mortgage lending. It seems to me that an inherent conflict of interest exists in any institution in which the promotion and development of an industry rests in the same body that is responsible for its oversight and regulation.

By the same token, while I do believe that we should separate the contrasting duties of the Bank Board, I do not believe that we should eliminate the Bank Board altogether by merging it into the FDIC. All the fault for the savings and loan crisis cannot be placed at the door of the Bank Board. Rising interest rates, plummeting oil and real estate prices in certain energy dependent regions, lax State regulation, mismanagement, and Federal deregulation all contributed to the inevitable crunch that thrifts experienced as they attempted to balance the constraints of holding long-term, fixed-rate home mortgage portfolios with the mounting pressure to offer higher and higher interest rates to depositors in order to attract new capital.

In our attempt to find solutions to these problems, the Congress and the administration should not proceed merely with a "heads will roll" attitude. Symbolic, draconian measures will not solve the savings and loan crisis—sound legislative and regulatory policy will.

Later today I will be introducing legislation which I believe will be a constructive first step in reforming the banking and thrift industry. My bill will seek to curtail the use of federally insured brokered deposits by limiting the amount of insured deposits that can be placed by a broker in a troubled financial institution to $100,000 per broker, per institution. These deposits, which are presently insured up to $100,000 per depositor, per institution, serve to drain the FSLIC and FDIC insurance funds, inflate banking costs, take money away from local communities, encourage funds to flow to poorly managed and financially troubled institutions, and conflict with the intended purpose of Federal deposit insurance.

WORK WITH ADMINISTRATION

Mr. President, I understand that in the next few days Secretary Brady and his staff at Treasury will be compiling a list of proposals to address the savings and loan crisis. I look forward to receiving these proposals and I am confident that Secretary Brady will show the leadership and initiative that this situation requires.

Before coming to the Senate I had the privilege of spending over 20 years in the banking industry. Perhaps that is why I am so deeply troubled by the current state of our financial institutions. I have seen first hand the vital role that banks and thrifts play in community development, entrepreneurial initiative and home ownership. I am confident that if the Congress and the administration work in a bipartisan fashion, focusing on long term solutions and not quick fixes, that we can restore the banking and thrift industries to financial stability.●

TRIBUTE TO STATE SENATOR FRANCIS J. McMANIMON

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to honor State Senator Francis J. McManimon, assistant majority leader from the 14th District of New Jersey. A resident of Hamilton Township, he has also served as its superintendent of parks and recreation since 1961. After serving in this capacity for 28 years he will be retiring on March 1 to devote more time to his senatorial duties and family.

As a State senator also serving in township government, he has shown that cooperation with the community can be a nonpartisan effort. For the past 13 years he has served as parks and recreation superintendent under a Republican township and previously by one controlled by Democrats.

During his tenure as superintendent, a policy called cosponsorship has been implemented. The township maintains fields and provides officials, and private groups organize leagues and teams. Under his direction, cooperation among citizens of the community has contributed to an excellent park system and recreation programs.

Senator McManimon has faithfully served the State of New Jersey since 1971 when he was elected to the State assembly where he served until 1981, when he was elected to the State senate. He has served as chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, the Senate Select Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and the Senate Intergovernmental Relations Committee. In addition he is vice chairman of the Institutions, Health and Welfare Committee, a member of the Transportation and Communications Committee and the Independent Authorities Committee and the Juvenile Delinquency Commission.

Franny was a moving force behind the creation of the New Jersey Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs. His commitment to the welfare of New Jersey's veterans has been well recognized. Known as "Mr. Veteran," he has been the recipient of many community awards, including the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion. He has been honored by the State Association of Elected Officials and the New Jersey Association of Recreation and Physical Education. Franny has also served his community through outstanding constituent work and by looking out for the little guy.

I congratulate Franny for his devoted service to his community and the State of New Jersey. As he retires from his position as superintendent of parks and recreation, the people of Hamilton Township can take consolidation in the fact that he continues to serve them ably in the State senate. I join his family, friends, and colleagues in wishing him all the best for continued success and happiness in the future.●

HELP FOR TROUBLED CHILDREN

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to the efforts that concerned people in the State of Maine have undertaken to help children with special needs.

On January 29, the New York Times featured an article by Lyn Riddle concerning a grassroots campaign on the part of the Coalition for Children with Special Needs, a group made up of Maine teachers, social workers, State legislators, and others, who are working to benefit troubled children. The resolve of the group is well characterized by the man who brought the group together, Mr. John Rosser, executive director of the Spurwink School, a private, nonprofit organization for troubled and handicapped children. Says Mr. Rosser, "We've studied this thing to death; let's get something done."

As the article states, Maine—like many other States around the Nation—is seeing a growing number of children who have been neglected or physically abused. These children often become violent and disruptive and need constant supervision. The coalition began by publicizing the plight of disturbed children who were living on the streets, in facilities unable to meet their needs, or in homes where they remained subject to abuse. Currently, the coalition is lobbying the legislature for more resources to improve foster care programs.

Mr. President, the problems of trouble children are too often ignored or left to grow into problems of troubled adults. I applaud what my fellow Mainers are doing to help children in desperate circumstances. I ask that this article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows.

LOBBY EXTENDS A HAND TO CHILDREN IN TROUBLE

(By Lyn Riddle)

BIDDEFORD, ME.—When an 11-year-old boy was charged with killing his baby sitter by setting his house ablaze here in early January, some Maine residents decided it was time to stop studying the problems of seriously troubled children and start helping them.

A group of 100 social workers, teachers, legislators and others who deal with disturbed children gathered recently to set in motion a grassroots effort. The group, the Coalition for Children with Special Needs, is lobbying the State Legislature for more money to help abused and neglected children live productive lives.

"We've studied this thing to death; let's get something done for these children," said John Rosser, who brought the group together. "Year after year, there's always some other issues that need to be addressed and children with special needs get pushed aside. They don't vote. They're not necessarily nice kids. People don't like these kids."

PEOPLE WHO ARE CONCERNED

Harvey Berman, director of program operations at the Spurwink School, a private, nonprofit organization with programs for troubled and handicapped children in three states, including Maine, said the coalition was unusual because no one was looking out for his own interest.

"These are people who are concerned about children," he said. "It's not accidental that the prisons are overloaded. It's clearly a result of a lack of attention paid to troubled children."

Like many other states around the nation, Maine is seeing a growing number of children who have been neglected or physically abused. They are often violent and disruptive and need constant supervision.

CHILDREN WHO DON'T FIT IN

The situation gained attention in November, when social workers made public a list of 100 disturbed children in southern Maine who were living in unsuitable places: on the streets, in foster homes ill-equipped to handle their problems, in mental institutions and even in their own homes, where they had been subjected to abuse.

Social workers say the figure represents one-seventh of all children in state custody in southern Maine and is indicative of a system in crisis.

Penny Burns, a social worker in Portland, said she had even seen a seriously disturbed 4-year-old. "It was difficult to place her because she was so out of control," she said of the child. "Social workers quit, not because of the money, but because of situations like this. It drains you emotionally."

Social workers say one problem is that the system was developed in a time when foster parents' responsibility was limited to the physical well-being of children. Now, they say, the state relies too heavily on foster parents, many of whom are working without much training in caring for abused and neglected children. Fewer still understand how to deal with serious emotional problems.

"Many of these children don't fit into anyone's family," said Margaret Goodspeed, a social worker here.

Maine has 8,000 children in the protective services system and 1,807 are in state custody. A total of 1,031 are in foster homes, 344 are living alone or with relatives or friends, 252 are in institutions, 71 are in the Maine Youth Center and 67 are in adoptive homes, said Peter Walsh, the director of the Bureau of Social Services. He said caseworkers were not sure of the whereabouts of 42 children.

"I do not believe the whole foster care system is in crisis," said Mr. Walsh. "There are some serious problems with some parts of it and we have to fix the problems."

He said his staff had reviewed the list of children supplied by the social workers and concurred that the state had not had the proper facilities for them. He has written a report to the Commissioner of Human Services recommending ways to reallocate the state's resources to better treat these children.

ADDITIONAL FUNDS REQUESTED

In addition, Gov. John R. McKernan Jr., has asked the State Legislature to appropriate $1.2 million more than the $30 million the state already spends on child welfare to give foster parents more pay and children more money for clothing.

"That's a good start, but that's dealing with only one part of the needs," said Mr. Rosser. "You can't fix it by putting money only in one part."

Social workers in the coalition said more money was needed for a treatment center to house children entering the system so that they could be evaluated for proper placement. The group is also calling for more foster homes in which caring for the children is the parents' full-time job. The state has 171 professional foster homes.

"We're asking for people in the community, if they hate seeing kids on street corners or hearing about it, give us the tools to do our job: appropriate money," said Charlotte Bailey McPherson, a social worker in Portland.

Mr. Rosser, who is the executive director of the Spurwink School and a former Commissioner of Mental Health in Maine, said he would like to see children's services handled by a single agency, instead of spread over four.

Some people would think the incident involving the 11-year-old was an isolated case, said Mr. Berman. "But there are many people out there who have the potential of extreme behavior," he said. "Why it doesn't happen more frequently is a mystery."

Some have said the boy, who was charged as a juvenile in the baby sitter's death, was failed by the system because officials did not find appropriate care for him soon enough, even after his mother said she could no longer control him and asked for help.

But Mr. Walsh said: "This wasn't a boy who fell through the cracks." There was no reason to take him from his home because there was no evidence he had been abused or neglected and he had been scheduled to go to a residential center in late January, Mr. Walsh said.

"We don't have a crystal ball to say what will happen with any of these kids," said Mr. Walsh. "We make a judgment on whether he is in jeopardy. Hindsight is always 20-20. The problem here was we don't know what works with these children."●

SEVENTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF ESTONIA'S PROCLAMATION OF INDEPENDENCE

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, later this month we will commemorate the 71st anniversary of Estonian independence. On February 24, 1918, the Estonians were the first of the three Baltic nationalities to declare an autonomous self-governing state. We remember this significant event in Estonian history, we marvel at the spirit of the Estonian people, and we share in the pride of Estonians around the world in the resilience of Estonian nationalism.

Freedom for Estonia was all too brief. After two decades, Estonian independence came to an abrupt halt when Stalin occupied Estonia, as well as the other Baltic States of Lithuania and Latvia. The United States continues not to recognize the Soviet annexation of the Baltic States. The annexation not only ended Estonian independence, but also led to massive death and deportation. A total of 350,000 people were lost between 1939 and 1949—a third of Estonia's population.

Despite the suffering and stifled nationalism, Estonians have endured in their quest for independence. On November 16, 1988, the Estonian National Assembly issued a declaration of independence, the first of the Baltic States to do so. Over a million letters of support make clear that this new expression of Estonian nationalism has wide popular support. Recalling the events of 1918, this constitutional challenge to Soviet rule has sent a strong signal to Moscow that Estonian aspirations for independence are still very much alive.

A new generation of Estonians, born and raised under Soviet rule, have added their voices to these calls for a free Estonia. Demonstrations in the streets of Tallinn, the capital city, have brought together thousands of young and old to march with the black, white, and blue flag of Estonia. These brave protests resonate in Estonian communities throughout the world.

On December 28, 1988, over 10,000 Estonians gathered in Melbourne, Australia. Esto '88, the fifth such international Estonian gathering, was different from all the others. For the first time, Estonians from Estonia joined their brethren at this Estonian World Festival. Three generations marched together in Melbourne, calling for a free Estonia. And, last month, the Estonian National Asssembly continued to take a firm stand with the Soviets, adopting measures to protect the Estonian language.

These developments have offered great hope to all of us as we remember the brief period when Estonians experienced genuine freedom in their own land. I call on Congress to join with Estonian-Americans in Michigan and throughout the country in celebrating this anniversary of Estonian independence. We celebrate with the knowledge that the voice of Estonia will continue to be heard.●

LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, it is a great honor for me to join again with more than 1 million Lithuanian Americans in celebrating the establishment 71 years ago of the Republic of Lithuania. On February 16, those of Lithuanian heritage and their friends and supporters will commemorate the proclamation of a progressive and independent Lithuania which, for its all-too-brief life of 22 years, was a beacon of democracy. Today all Americans are afforded the opportunity to reflect on the proud heritage of our fellow citizens of Lithuanian descent and to renew our dedication to the principles of freedom and liberty for which this important day stands.

The continuing unity of the Lithuanian people is based on a common heritage dating back many centuries. In the more than 700 years since the original formation of a united Lithuania, the history of this valiant nation has been marked by constant struggle against aggressors. Through countless invasions Lithuanian defenders stood resolutely against their foes and demonstrated their commitment to freedom. After well over a century of domination by Russia, the people of Lithuania proclaimed their independence and reestablished their sovereignty as a nation February 16, 1918. Years of repression ended with the adoption of a constitution in 1922, which granted to the Lithuanian people the basic freedoms of speech, assembly, and religion. For more than two decades the young nation prospered economically and lived at peace with its neighbors. Yet this brief period was terminated in 1940, when Soviet forces occupied and annexed Lithuania in violation of their peace treaty of 1920, an occupation the United States has never recognized.

Remarkably, the brave Lithuanian people have withstood centuries of relentless pressure to abandon their religion, their culture, and their language. Their success in preserving that culture as immigrants to the New World has not only guaranteed their cohesion as a community, but has produced innumerable contributions to American society. In the last century Lithuanians joined in the building of our new land as foundrymen in western Pennsylvania; weavers in New England and New Jersey; tanners in Philadelphia; dockworkers in Cleveland; and tailors in Baltimore. Today their descendents are leading members of the professional, business, artistic, and academic communities. Lithuanian Americans have greatly enriched America's culture with their longstanding tradition of self-help and voluntarism, as shown by the more than 2,000 Lithuanian charity and mutual aid organizations in the United States today.

On this 71st anniversary of the Republic of Lithuania's restoration, we must also pay tribute to the brave men and women whose visions of freedom and whose sacrifices of the past and present continue to guide the Lithuanian people. Our thoughts turn to Viktoras Petkus, founder of the Lithuanian Helsinki Monitoring Group, who has served more than 20 years in prisons, labor camps, and internal exile. We think of Balys Gajauskas, who has spent more than half his life in prison for his human rights activities. Bishop Julijonas Steponavicius has been in exile since 1961, and Father Alfonsas Svarinskas and Sigitas Tamkevicius will remain in exile until 1993. These men have risked their lives for the rights and freedoms we, as Americans, enjoy and cherish, and their strength and steadfastness of purpose serve as a bright ray of hope for all of us.

Mr. President, Lithuanians gather today in their capital, Vilnius, and around the world to commemorate the 71st anniversary of the establishment of an independent Lithuanian Republic. We in the United States stand with them on this important occasion, and share in the hope that the day is near when their dream of independence once again becomes a reality.●

S. 35, RURAL ENTERPRISE ZONE ACT OF 1989

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the Reagan economic recovery has done many fine things for much of America. Yet, even though our economy has generated 19,000,000 new jobs since 1980, many parts of this great country remain in need of economic stimulation.

The purpose of S. 35, the Rural Enterprise Zone Act of 1989, is to encourage more economic investment in pockets of our Nation where unemployment and poverty are too high. We want to bring the power of free enterprise to areas that are having a hard time generating needed jobs.

I like Secretary Jack Kemp's idea of "unleashing the power of free enterprise." In this bill, we are talking about special stimulative measures to unleash this power in our rural areas.

I am proud to be an original sponsor of this act. Along with Senator DANFORTH, several distinguished colleagues joined us on January 25, 1989, in introducing this act. They are Senators PRYOR, BOND, DASCHLE, DURENBERGER, BOSCHWITZ, BURDICK, GRASSLEY, PRESSLER, and COCHRAN.

As stated in our bill, we hope to establish "Rural Enterprise Zones to stimulate the creation of new jobs, to promote revitalization of economically distressed rural areas, and to provide increased economic opportunity for residents of these communities, primarily by providing or encouraging—

First, tax relief at the Federal, State, and local levels,

Second, increased Federal and State assistance,

Third, regulatory relief at the Federal, State, and local levels, and Fourth, improved local services, particularly through the increased involvement of private, local, and community organizations."

Our bill would designate the possibility of establishing 45 enterprise zones throughout the country. These zones would be in areas with populations of less than 50,000 people, an unemployment rate of at least 1½ times the national rate, a poverty rate of at least 20 percent, and several other criterion.

In a typical zone, a city would designate the appropriate rural census districts that meet the income and poverty criteria of the act. That zone—but not the entire city—would then be eligible for the tax and regulatory relief designed to stimulate business activity.

Increased business opportunity and business investment would be encouraged by Federal tax incentives for businesses that choose to expand or relocate to a zone. These incentives include:

First, a 10-percent tax credit for wages paid in the current year that exceed the prior year's wages,

Second, nonrecognition of capital gain for tax purposes when the taxpayer reinvests proceeds in the zone,

Third, the ability to claim accelerated depreciation deductions on property financed with tax-exempt bonds, and Fourth, relaxation of regulatory requirements in a zone.

Mr. President, there are many rural towns and cities in New Mexico that could take good advantage of this new economic development tool. These are towns that already have basic strengths, but are in need of a slight break to become more competitive. This bill would do the trick for many of them.

When I think about the usefulness of the zone concept, I think of the growing areas around Las Cruces. Belen has special attractions along the Rio Grande. Taos could expand its tourism potential. Las Vegas would like to attract more businesses. Farmington is at the heart of a potential boom in agriculture.

Hobbs could use a boost to attract more diversification. Albuquerque's South Valley area has a large labor force and could benefit much from more employment opportunities.

Gallup and Grants have special advantages along a major interstate and a major railroad line. Santa Rosa and Tucumcari have similar benefits and a lot of interstate traffic.

In addition, this bill allows Indian reservations to participate. I feel that Zuni Pueblo, Isleta, Laguna, Santo Domingo, San Juan, and others would show great interest in enterprise zones to boost their plans for future business development.

Mr. President, while it is clear that not every New Mexico rural area would successfully compete for this exciting designation, the fact that it could be available is encouraging to New Mexicans. I enthusiastically support this concept, and I look forward to the day in the near future when New Mexico towns, cities, and Indian pueblos can apply for this special designation.

I urge my colleagues to consider cosponsorship and active support of the Rural Enterprise Zone Act of 1989.●

VOLUNTEER TUTORS

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, last year, Dorothy Gilliam had a column in the Washington Post about a young man who is a volunteer tutor and about the Volunteer Tutor Program at Georgetown University.

It is one small part of a lot of volunteer efforts that are taking place all over this country.

But laudable as these efforts are, we have to be doing more.

I will be saying more to my colleagues about all of this in the weeks ahead, but in the meantime, I ask to print the Gilliam column in the RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to read it.

The material follows:

BREAKING AWAY TO LITERACY

(By Dorothy Gilliam)

When Mark Poirier left his hometown of Tucson to enter Georgetown University two years ago, he didn't want to spend all of his college years in an exclusive Washington neighborhood, so he became a tutor and got to know and respect people in a problem-plagued Washington community.

Pursuing a longtime interest in efforts against illiteracy, the 21-year-old sophomore signed up with Georgetown's Sursum Corda Adult Literacy Program and was assigned to help teach Thomas E. (Preacher) Fenner to read, write and figure.

Such involvement in the community is rare on the part of college students today, who often are said to have elevated political apathy and lack of social concern to an all-time high.

Furthermore, how many students would be eager to go one or two nights each week into the Sursum Corda apartment complex at First Place and M Street NW., which since June has been the scene of five bloody slayings, increased drug peddling and stray bullets occasionally bursting through apartment windows? But Poirier is quick to say that he has gained as much as he has given.

"It means a lot for me to get away from up on the hill and be able to get out into the community," said Poirier, who is studying pre-med and engineering but hopes to pursue a career in education. "I'm learning how to teach, and Preacher is learning how to read and do math. Besides, there's a real sense of community at Sursum Corda. There's stuff we can learn from them, and they from us."

Preacher Fenner is 6 feet tall, 40 years old and was, for many years, an inmate at Lorton. Before he started in the literacy program a year and a half ago, he could barely read or do any mathematics. "It felt strange, it felt funny," he recalled, seated in the Sursum Corda living room where he and Poirier work every week. On the other side of the room, Poirier looked sheepish as Fenner's mother, Mary Fenner, chided him about not wearing socks with his penny loafers. Poirier played casually with Preacher Fenner's nephews and nieces.

For Fenner, learning to decipher symbols, lines and dots on paper is his way of trying to make a complete break from his past and reach his goal of attaining a job and financial independence. Closed-mouthed about his past, Fenner didn't want to talk about Lorton with a visitor and remarked casually to Poirier that he had spent a long time in jail "for committing a bad crime." Today, Fenner is one of the literacy program's most dedicated participants.

Begun in October 1987 by the Sursum Corda Tenants Association and Georgetown University, the literacy program has 30 specially trained tutors who meet students at their homes or in the nearby Sursum Corda Community Center to teach them one-to-one.

Fenner helped to develop the curriculum that Poirier is using to tutor him—for fun and practice, he has written to entertainer Eddie Murphy to tell him how much he enjoyed his film "Coming to America"—and is using his skills to take more control of his life. Fenner and other literacy students plan to join the neighborhood association's drive to get city officials to help them tackle the problems at Sursum Corda.

Recognizing that building literacy skills is the way to empower the community, such an action fits the program's goal.

Christine Nicholson, who heads the tenants group, said some residents were "a little bit bashful at first, but are coming out more. They are beginning not to worry about people knowing they can't read or write much and are willing to learn more."

I've always thought that being unable to read or write is the modern equivalent of being enslaved, or, at least, of being blind to much of the surrounding world. In the Washington area, entirely too many are blind or enslaved by this problem. Nicholson said that perhaps as many as 40 percent of the tenants at Sursum Corda are illiterate. People such as Mark Poirier are making a difference. But many more volunteers, in myriad literacy program across the area, are needed.

One of the rewards is the appreciation from people such as Fenner. Saying it "feels so good" to be able to write a letter, to finally know how to add and subtract, he added, "There's a lot I still don't know, but I feel like I'm on my way at last."●

NATIONAL SKI DAY

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join Senator WIRTH in cosponsoring a resolution designating January 19, 1990 as "National Ski Day." It has been my policy throughout my service in the Senate to encourage economic development in an environmentally responsible way. This day will help citizens foster appreciation and respect for the outdoors and, at the same time, afford economic growth in the many ski regions throughout this country.

Skiing is a vital part of recreation and tourism in my State's economy as well as the economies of many other States. Nationally, ski areas bring in over $1.6 billion a year. In Utah alone, the ski industry employs an estimated 6,000 workers in manufacturing, distribution, and resort positions. Utah's ski resorts have evolved into year-round mountain resorts providing both winter and summer activities. Skiing in Utah brings in over $360 million, and over $27 million in combined State and local tax receipts. Of the 2.5 million lift tickets sold in Utah, over 53 percent are sold to out-of-State skiers while 47 percent of the lift tickets are purchased by Utah residents. In a family oriented State like Utah, skiing is excellent recreation for the entire family.

Utahns' are extremely fortunate to have seven world class resorts within 30 minutes of downtown Salt Lake City. Skiing has had a positive effect on our canyons by increasing both recreational value and commercial use of the national forests, providing employment opportunities and economic development, and creating an appreciation for the beauties of nature. In fact, because of the lack of humidity in our desert climate, Utah's snow is light, dry, and plentiful. That is why Utah's license plates claim ours as "The Greatest Snow on Earth."

This resolution is good for the vitality of America. No sport can so clear the senses and invigorate the body, as can skiing. I urge my distinguished colleagues to join us in this fitting recognition of an important and growing industry.●

INFANT MORTALITY AND CHILDREN'S HEALTH ACT OF 1989

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise today to join several of my colleagues in cosponsoring S. 339, the Medicaid Infant Mortality and Children's Health Act of 1989. I would also like to commend Senator BRADLEY for his leadership in this area.

Last year I was proud to cosponsor S. 2122, a bill introduced by Senator BRADLEY which mandated State coverage of pregnant women and infants up to 100 percent of the Federal poverty level. Through his guidance, and the support of other Members of this body, this provision was included in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 which President Reagan signed into law on July 1, 1988.

Mr. President, my home State of Alabama had the dubious distinction of leading the Nation in the number of infant deaths in 1986. In 1987, we improved somewhat from 13.3 deaths per every 1,000 live births to 12.2 deaths per 1,000 live births. According to recent statistics, Alabama still ranks fourth in this indicator of our Nation's health.

Alabama is not alone in its problem with infant mortality. Our Nation ranks 19th, behind most other industrialized nations and is still far away from the Surgeon General's goal of reducing the Nation's infant mortality rate from its current level of 10.4 deaths per every 1,000 live births to 9.0 deaths per every 1,000 live births by 1990.

One significant step we can take to eradicate this problem is to expand the availability of prenatal care, the benefits of which have been demonstrated repeatedly. The Institute of Medicine recently stated that the best weapon in the fight against infant mortality is expanded access to prenatal care and treatment of infants in the first year of life.

Prenatal care is cost effective in both financial and human terms—for every $1 spent on prenatal care, $3 is saved over the first year of the infant's life. Also, prenatal care has proven effective in reducing the number of low birthweight babies.

These low birthweight babies are at the greatest risk for high mortality and morbidity, according to an Office of Technology Assessment study. Neonatal intensive care for these babies is also one of the most costly of all hospital admissions. The OTA reported that the U.S. health care system saves somewhere between $14,000 and $30,000 in hospitalization and long-term care costs for every low birthweight birth avoided. Thus, the cost of Medicaid expansion to make prenatal care available to more pregnant women will be outweighted by the savings our health care delivery system will realize from the avoidance of low birthweight births.

Although the benefits of prenatal care are obvious, many barriers exist between this care and the patient. In Alabama, one critical problem we face is the lack of adequate obstetrical services. Pregnant women who are already disinclined to seek prenatal care are further discouraged if they have to travel great distances to receive medical attention. Currently, 28 counties in Alabama are without obstetrical services, a trend which will only worsen with time.

In 1987, the Alabama Association of Obstetricians and Gynecologists [AAOG] conducted a statewide survey of its members, 80 percent of whom responded. The survey listed the three primary reasons given by respondents for refusal to treat Medicaid patients as inadequate reimbursement, paperwork, and the fear of litigation.

The survey also noted that 30 obstetricians who had recently decided to refrain from providing care would come back if the Medicaid reimbursement was increased to a reasonable rate. In Alabama, the State Medicaid agency has set reimbursement for obstetrical services at $675. The survey indicated that a majority of obstetricians would participate in Medicaid if the reimbursement level was closer to $1,000 for these services. This is still far below the average of $2,000 to $2,500 charged to private pay patients.

The lack of obstetrical services is even worse in the rural portions of my State. The maldistribution of obstetricians in urban centers will continue as more rural hospitals are forced to close their doors.

Also, the rapid rise in malpractice insurance premiums has driven qualified obstetricians to the decision to stop delivering babies. In a 1987 State survey, the average malpractice premium approached $37,500 a year. I have spoken with several doctors recently who claim that this year that figure has risen to $60,000 a year.

Mr. President, something must be done to protect the children of our future. I am pleased to support this bill, which I understand will make Medicaid eligible to about 200,000 more pregnant women and infants each year. I can think of no worthier investment we can make than in our children and the future of our country.●

RECOGNIZING THE DISTINGUISHED SERVICE OF MAJ. DON W. JANSSEN

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the hard work and superb contribution of Maj. Don W. Janssen in our armed services. After more than 20 years of distinguished service Major Janssen is retiring from the U.S. Air Force effective March 1. Major Janssen served his country honorably and loyally in his capacity as the Deputy Director of Planning in the Headquarters Air Weather Service at Scott Air Force Base in Belleville, IL. Major Janssen has been responsible for Air Weather Service's technical management of the $2.8 billion Defense Meteorological Satellite Program. Data received from these weather satellites are used to support worldwide Department of Defense operations and the National Weather Service. Major Janssen has served his country with great distinction and should be very proud of his fine accomplishments. I would like to join my voice with those of his family and many friends in thanking Major Janssen for a job well done and wishing him the very best in the coming years.●

REFUGEES

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the Chicago Tribune's magazine had a story by William Mullen describing what refugees face around the world.

It is a remarkably perceptive piece of writing that shows graphically the problems faced by much of the world. I wish I could also insert the pictures from this report in the RECORD.

It is commonplace to say, "We don't know how fortunate we are." But reading this account, or visiting refugees in other countries as I have had the opportunity to do, makes these words breathe.

I urge my colleagues in the Senate and their staffs to read this remarkable story by William Mullen, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

REFUGEES

(Special report by William Mullen)

Wars create refugees, and refugees prolong wars. If there is a truism about late 20th Century warfare, that is it. Wars of independence, civil wars, border conflicts, internal revolutions and full-fledged declared wars spill people across borders every day.

If there is a truism about refugees in the late 20th Century, it is this: Most refugees will never have a chance to return to the places they once called home. That is a frightening prospect for the world's 13 million refugees but one that seems increasingly likely through the passage of years, even though all refugee camps are built to be "temporary."

The temporary camps set up 40 years ago in the Middle East now hold four generations of people, two of which have never known any other kind of life. Temporary camps in Africa will soon mark their 30th anniversaries. Southeast Asia, South Asia and Central America are pockmarked with camps turning almost 10 years old. Refugee camps have a way of building their own permanency in these peace-forsaken days when "small" wars can drag on for 10 years and set no duration records.

I first encountered refugee camps as a journalist in 1972 during the latter stages of the Vietnam War. I ran across numerous refugee camps in trips to Africa in 1974 and 1975. In 1977 I watched the first refugee outpourings into Thailand from Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam. In 1978 I met refugees coming into Somalia from Ethiopia and visited Palestinian refugees under fire in their camps during the Israeli invasion of southern Lebanon. In January, 1980, I saw the great flood of Afghan refugees inundating Pakistan's western borders as they fled the Soviet invasion of their country.

I thought I had seen those people when they were at their lowest, coming across borders grief-stricken and battered. But as the years dragged on and so many of those people were never able to go home, I began to have nagging thoughts about them. I wondered if there was some factor or pattern common to all refugees globally that might explain why the refugee camp has become such a perniciously enduring institution around the world. I wanted to go back.

Most of us will never have to make a decision to drop everything and flee all we know and cherish. The hundreds of people I talked with during my journey through refugee camps new and old did have to make that decision, and they crossed borders for the soundest of reasons—they and their loved ones were threatened with lethal violence. The stories of their escapes were harrowing. Even more harrowing, however, were the stories of endless years of lives on hold, of never having a life to call your own, of never having a claim on your own future.

If there was one overriding impression that I carried away from my nine-month tour, it was the stunning cruelty of keeping people in camps and in limbo, away from home and normal life, for so long.

We think of refugees as having safety when they make it to a refugee camp. But they never really escape the conflicts that sent them running. The longer they live as exiles, the more likely the conflict they escaped will come to swirl around them once again. It may come at the hands of the countries as asylum, when residents rebel at the burden placed on them by refugees. It may come at the hands of the refugees' enemies, who follow them across borders to continue old battles. It may come from the refugees themselves, when they turn on one another as the years of incarceration take their toll. One way or another, it will come.

We of the Old and New Worlds ask Third World nations to take on the burden of accepting millions of refugees, and then we are puzzled when those nations eventually rebel against shouldering the burden year after year. Before the world can solve its refugee problem, it must understand that the problem is not logistical—how to care for refugees—but political. Millions of human beings around the world want a place to call home but are denied fulfillment of that want. Denied long enough, they will do anything that promises an escape from their current situation. Life in a refugee camp provides the refugees with hours, days—years—to mourn what they have lost and to hate those who have driven them away from home. Let someone offer them a chance to fight back, and the takers line up.

More than 5 million Afghan refugees in Iran and Pakistan form the nation-in-exile that sends men into Afghanistan to fight the Soviet invaders and the Marxist regime they support in Kabul. Camps and settlements throughout the Middle East for decades have been the breeding ground for Palestinian insurrectionists and terrorist cabals. A million Ethiopians—half in Sudan and half in Somalia—send their young men home to fight a Soviet-backed regime there. A coalition of insurgent armies holds 300,000 people in Thailand to form a guerrilla army against Vietnamese occupation troops inside Cambodia. Tens of thousands of Nicaraguans, backed by the United States, send their men from refugee camps in Honduras and Costa Rica to fight a Marxist regime in Nicaragua.

For the various United Nations agencies charged with providing humanitarian care for 13 million refugees around the world, the refugees as combatants pose a dilemma. UN aid is supposed to be strictly humanitarian. The activities in the camps and settlements that the UN provides for refugees are supposed to be, if not nonpolitical, at least nonmilitary.

That is a difficult standard to maintain. For the most part, the refugees, fueled by their painful memories, are willing participants in these armed struggles. They openly manipulate and in turn are manipulated by outside political forces that have a stake in whatever conflict sent the refugees fleeing from their homes.

Inevitably the countries who give sanctuary to refugees get sucked into the deadly game. Usually the host countries also are willing participants because they fear the governments that sent the refugees into their midst.

Honduras and Costa Rica fear the leftist Sandinista regime in Nicaragua. Thailand fears the ambitions of the Vietnamese regime whose army is occupying Cambodia. Sudan and Somalia are bitter, historic enemies of Ethiopia, as are the Arab nations of Israel. Pakistan lives in the shadow of Soviet power plays in South Asia. In each case, the host governments not only give sanctuary to the refugees but to some degree also allow their countries to be used as bases for continuing attacks on their neighbors' governments. Obviously this is a risky situation. When things go wrong, the host countries can suffer horribly, but eventually the refugees will suffer more because no one will take them in anymore.

On July 9, 1987, a car bomb exploded in the middle of a busy bazaar in Peshawar, the Pakistani city that is the center for Afghanistan's exiled resistance movements. The bomb killed 72 people, most of them Pakistanis. Last Feb. 19 another car bomb went off in Peshawar at a Pakistani political rally, near a public school. A dozen people were killed, including two children.

"Eighty percent of the world's state-sponsored terrorism occurred last year in Pakistan," says a Western diplomat in Islamabad, Pakistan's capital, "killing about 500 people in all. It's almost a daily occurrence. There's no secret about who's setting off these bombs. It's KHAD [the secret police of Afghanistan's pro-Soviet regime] and the KGB [the Soviet secret police]. The bombs follow a very consistent pattern, set off in crowded public places with the intention of killing and maiming as many people as possible. Bus stations, cinemas, bazaars—that sort of thing."

The main target of the bombs, he says, is not the 3 million Afghan refugees in Pakistan. It is Pakistani public opinion, which has approved of the ongoing war against the Soviets in Afghanistan and has given a generally warm reception to the hordes of refugees in their midst.

"It's no surprise that there are calls for public order by Pakistanis after the bombs explode and the casualties are counted," says the diplomat. "There are two or three levels of response to the bombs. One is a call to remove all refugees from cities and towns, to isolate them in camps so that Pakistanis won't get caught in the violence. In other instances Pakistanis have beaten up refugees after bombing incidents, blaming their presence in Pakistan for the violence. Another response has been to attack the government's policy of Afghanistan, that if the government withdrew its support of the resistance, the bombs would stop, and the refugees would go away."

Many Pakistanis are uneasy about the increased violence refugees have brought to Pakistan, but they remain supportive of the refugees' cause. "There is only a shift in degree of uneasiness about the refugees," the diplomat continues, "but certainly it's not anything that has gotten out of control."

The impact of the sudden influx of more than 3 million people into Pakistan and their prolonged stay—now up to eight years—will not easily be erased.

Ecologically the refugees have been a disaster to Pakistan, especially to the North West Frontier and Baluchistan, the provinces to which most of the Afghans have fled. In searching for firewood, they have so denuded the forests and scrublands in which they have built their camps that the World Bank has invested $60 million in reforestation projects to try to undo some of the damage.

Economically the refugees have been a mixed blessing. They have been a plentiful source of cheap labor to Pakistani farmers and businessmen, especially those in the construction industry. In other sectors, however, the refugees have been direct competitors for jobs. For example, the many refugees who came into Pakistan driving their own trucks have gone into the trucking business on a large scale. As refugees, they were not obligated until recently to pay Pakistani taxes, so they could undercut the Pakistani truckers' rates. This has led to several bloody riots.

Perhaps most serious, the enormous amount of sophisticated weapons being funneled through Pakistan for the benefit of Afghan rebels will likely alter domestic political equations in Pakistan for years to come. The North West Frontier and Baluchistan are semiautonomous tribal areas that have never been fully under the control of Pakistan's government. The history of the two provinces is one of almost constant armed feuding with the central government and among the tribes themselves.

Tribal and clan fueding within Pakistan used to be mostly minor affairs of murder and kidnaping during small/scale raids with single-shot rifles on neighboring villages. Now whole sections of rival villages are being reduced to rubble by long-range mortar and rocket attacks as tribal rustics familiarize themselves with the advanced 20th Century weaponry pouring into Pakistan to arm the Afghan resistance.

The atmosphere of violence and military bravado that the Afghans brought back with them into the North West Frontier and Baluchistan has permeated nearly every level of Pakistani society there.

Before the refugees came, few private citizens walked around carrying arms, says a Western-educated Pakistani economist in Peshawar." There were no more than 500 or 600 automatic weapons in private hands in the province," he says. "Today you can brush up against a man accidentially in the street, and you can feel a weapon underneath his clothes. An American M-16 rifle costs about $1,250, and ammunition for it is about 60 cents a round. A Russian-style AK-47 rifle is about $900, and ammunition for it is only 3 to 4 cents a round. Everybody has one, and, of course, the American gun is the prestige firearm, the one everybody wants.

"Our tribesmen today have antiaircraft guns, mortars, rockets and rocket launchers. In the Kurram Agency tribal area last year, there was a clash between the Shiite and Sunni communities, something that has always happened. This time, however, unofficially 200 people were killed. After a few days, pictures appeared in the local press. They were pure and simple war photos, not of a communal riot. Houses were collapsed from six or seven miles away by exchanges of rocket fire."

The economist admits he is himself in the market for an M-16 rifle.

"I'm going to buy one for my 16-year-old son," he says sheepishly. "He's been after me for months, arguing that all of his friends have one. I've run out of arguments. It's a status symbol, something to shoot off into the air at weddings and special functions. I'm not a rich man, and I'm not willing to buy a useless piece of metal that I hope I myself or any member of my family will never have to use. However, it comes to a point when you have to bow to societal pressures.

"The upshot of it all is that the initial feeling of goodwill for the refugees here has undergone a change. Today I think Pakistan still has the best refugee situation in the world in terms of treating them equitably. But if you ask a Pakistani man on the street, he will tell you, 'I wish them well, but I wish them gone.' The Pakistani welcomed the Afghan as a guest, but after three or four years, it wasn't exactly a guest-host relationship."

The welcome mat is wearing thin for refugees in many countries of first asylum. Underlying the lessening of hospitality for refugees is the sheer length of the time they remain in exile. The changing patterns of geopolitical alliances since World War II have meant that refugees remain in camps for years and decades. They are unable to go home, but they are also undersirable candidates for permanent resettlement elsewhere. For the first-asylum nations that must house them, the refugees create nearly impossible physical, economic and political strains.

First-asylum countries are those directly in the path of refugees looking for a haven. Because most refugees are from the Third World, most countries of first asylum are in the Third World, too, and are themselves quite poor.

There are 25 countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America that now have refugee populations of more than 50,000, according to the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues. The 20 nations with the highest ratio of refugees to their own populations have a per-capita income of less than $700 annually.

Malawi is just such an accident of geography, inundated by hundreds of thousands of refugees. About the size of Pennsylvania, it is a long, narrow, landlocked country of 7.5 million people in south central Africa. With a per-capita income of $200, it is one of the most densely populated countries in Africa and one of the poorest. In the best of times, about 85 percent of all Malawians eke out living from subsistence farming. In the last three years drought and plagues of insects have brought widespread hunger and illness to the population.

Coinciding with those economic disasters is the human disasters of the civil war in Mozambique, Malawi's southern neighbor, with which it shares a 300-mile border. In 1986 Mozambicans, hungry and terrorized by war, began arriving in Malawi by the tens of thousands.

By November, 1987, when I arrived in Malawi for a tour of its refugee camps, 400,000 Mozambicans had already been registered in camps operated by the UN High Commission for Refugees, and they continued to arrive at the rate of 20,000 a month.

A 40-mile drive down Malawi's main highway connecting Lilongwe, the country's capital, with its southern districts, is one of the more eerie drives in the world.

On the Mozambican side of the road, which marks Malawi's western border with Mozambique, every town, village, hamlet and farmhouse stands empty and gutted by the insurgent Mozambican army called Renamo. Doors are gone. Window casements are empty. The corrugated tin roofs have been carted away. Not a living soul stirs in the abandoned landscape.

Just a few yards away on the Malawian side of the road, every town, village, hamlet and farmhouse is jammed to overflowing with life. Of these, many are older settlements of Malawians who, linked closely to the fleeing Mozambicans by family and tribal ties, have taken in the refugees on their own. Others are brand-new communities made up solely of refugees, set up by the UN on Malawian farmland.

One side of the road represents death or enslavement to an unpopular uprising. The other side offers life itself, albeit a precarious one. The Malawian settlements are targets of frequent raids by Renamo fighters, who steal food supplies and often kidnap refugees and force them to work as porters or field hands for the rebel forces inside Mozambique.

Even the UN is having difficulty getting sufficient food and other supplies into Malawi to care for the refugees. Renamo continues to sabotage two main rail lines that once carried 90 percent of Malawi's freight from Mozambican ports into and out of Malawi. Most supplies now must go on a circuitous truck route through the war-contested Mozambican province of Tete down to Durban, South Africa. Last November the number of army-protected convoys over that route were cut from six to three because of Renamo attacks.

At that time the UN was importing 950 metric tons of corn every week to feed the 400,000 refugees, only about half the amount needed to feed so many people adequately, says one international relief official.

In Nsanje, the southernmost district of Malawi, the 220,000 Mozambicans settled there actually outnumbered the native Malawians by 30,000. In the shade of an enormous banyan tree there last November, I met one of the most recent arrivals.

"I arrived today, walking," said Madeza Misikeni, a 33-year-old Mozambican farmer. He shared the shade of the tree with his two wives, three children and dozens of other refugees who, like him, had arrived that morning nearly naked and wracked with exhaustion. They were waiting to be registered by local officials.

Misikeni said he and his family walked for four nights from their home to get to Malawi.

"Renamo soldiers were in our area for a long time, fighting government troops," he said. "Renamo people were asking for food from the villages, and if you failed to give them any, they would torture and sometimes kill you. They came to my house one day, and I gave them food. I was afraid of their guns. Many, many people were being killed. I was afraid I would be killed.

"Nobody was working in their gardens anymore because if you were found by Renamo, they might force you to work as their porter. The day I left for Malawi the Renamo people were in our village forcing people to prepare their gardens. We were forced to give them seeds and plant their gardens, and we were forced to carry their dead after their fights with the army.

"We had knowledge that there was a big refugee camp here. Last Wednesday I just simply slipped away with my family. Soldiers were in the bush looking for people trying to escape, so we slept during the day in the bush and walked all night."

Misikeni and his family sat with all of their wordly possessions in two baskets at their feet. They contained some tin cups and kettles and some metal farm tools. His youngest child, a 6-month-old baby, was covered with scabies.

"Most of the children are malnourished and sick," he said. "We just came with our baskets, with no blankets, no clothes and certainly no food. I expect more and more people to come."

Misikeni was right. From November to last July, 200,000 more Mozambicans arrived in Malawi, and the rate of their arrival has increased from 20,000 to 30,000 a month. By Christmastime there should be 750,000 Mozambicans in Malawi.

The additional competition for Malawian food, land, water and medical facilities deeply worries refugee and development experts working inside the country. Malawi until four years ago was generally considered self-sufficient in food and—an oddity in black Africa—a thriving, free-market economy free of international debt.

Now it appears Malawi may be sliding into a status similar to Ethiopia's—that of a chronically food-short nation that will in the future depend heavily on international assistance to avoid famine. It has an annual birthrate of 2.4 percent but less than one acre of arable land per person, and most of its farmland is only marginally productive.

The country has one of the highest child-mortality rates in the world; 151 children out of 1,000 die in their first year, and 320 out of 1,000 die fefore their fifth birthday. Child-malnutrition levels in the rural areas are among the highest in the world, with 55 percent of the children under 5 showing symptoms of chronic maluntrition. In some parts of the country, the figure is as high as 65 percent. The addition of 750,000 destitute Mozambicans to an already impoverished people could spell tragedy for Malawi.

"The refugees are camping out on farm fields, taking already very limited land out of production," one aid official said. "They are cutting down wood for fuel and accelerating deforestation and degradation of land, creating long-term problems for the government. The health concerns the refugees bring with them are very serious for Malawi.

"Few of the Mozambicans, when they arrive here, and only 40 percent of all Malawians are covered by inoculations. The government health services responded magnificently to the refugees, diverting much of the country's primary health-care resources to them. But that has compounded the problems of an already inadequate health-care system for Malawians. There are only 18 Malawian doctors in the country, and very few trained health workers."

Thus far the Malawians have been extraordinarily accepting of the Mozambican refugees. Perhaps that is because most of the early arrivals are from areas close to Malawi's border, which means they are ethnically related. As the war grinds on, however, the newer arrivals are coming from deeper and deeper inside Mozambique and thus have no tribal or family claims on Malawian hospitality. Most refugee officials in Malawi believe resentment will eventually show its face to the refugees.

"How long Malawians are going to continue to be tolerant is a matter of speculation," one UN official said. "We don't except them to be always hospitable when their own situation continues to get worse."

A catastrophe similar to that of Malawi is building in tiny Swaziland, another landlocked country, which shares borders with South Africa and Mozambique. A nation of 720,000 people and smaller in area than New Jersey, it now has 60,000 Mozambicans and 7,500 black South Africans living in refugee camps and settlements.

Swaziland and Mozambique share an 80-mile border, and so far Renamo has not operated heavily there. International relief workers believe that if Renamo became more active near that border, more people would come to Swaziland. Already 250,000 Mozambicans have fled into South Africa from areas close to Swaziland.

"There are a million people in rural areas inside Mozambique that are within a five-day walk from here," said a UN official in Swaziland. "If Renamo brings the war into that area, the Mozambicans would go either for . . . South Africa, or they would come here. Even if only 10 percent came this way, it would overwhelm us, and it would overwhelm the country."

Already Swazi newspapers are filled with stories blaming Mozambican refugees for the rising crime rates and increasing disease in the country. At a public meeting of top government officials in July this year, the Mozambican refugees emerged as the issue that most concerned Swazis, who demanded to know how long the country would have to continue ceding land to refugees. The government itself has for more than a year refused to earmark additional land for UN refugee camps.

So far, however, neither Malawi nor Swaziland has turned away refugees who appear on their borders. But increasingly other nations in the world already saddled with long-term refugee problems are going to extraordinary lengths to keep out new arrivals.

Mozambicans trying to escape into South Africa, for example, have to overcome a macabre series of lethal barriers to get through. The refugees are trying to reach the black "homelands" created by South Africa. Mozambique does not want its citizens to flee to the hated South African apartheid regime and has built a no-man's land to stop them. It is a narrow strip running along the border of the two countries that has been heavily seeded with land mines.

Those who succeed in crossing this barrier must then choose between two obstacle courses. One is a series of three parallel fences, erected by the South African government in 1986, that runs from Swaziland for about 40 miles north to the southern edge of the Kruger National Game Park. Two lower fences with a higher one between them run along the length of the border. The two lower fences are there to keep stray wild animals from running into the higher center fence, which, topped with razor-sharp concertina wire and carrying an electric charge, is designed to discourage refugees from crossing over. In its first year of operation, the charged fence has proved fatal to at least 36 would-be refugees, according to the United Nations.

Refugees who don't want to risk the fence can cross into South Africa through the game park. No fences there, but they face two other obstacles—South African authorities and the wild animals, especially lions and crocodiles.

Refugees caught inside the park by South African authorities are immediately arrested and dumped back into Mozambique. As a result, refugees hide in the bush during the day and try to cross the park at night.

"If they get into the park," says a refugee official in Swaziland, "some get eaten by the animals. The rivers are jammed with crocodiles, and the lions are developing a taste for human flesh because they're such easy prey."

Deaths in the park are common enough that they rate only a paragraph or two in South African newspapers. Last Dec. 3, in a section deep inside the newspaper devoted to local news, the Star, a Johannesburg English-language daily, ran the following account:

"On Sunday a group of people, thought to be Mozambican refugees, scattered when a large crocodile grabbed a woman and disappeared with her under dense growth in the Crocodile River.

"The woman's body was seen later alongside a large crocodile, which became aggressive when they approached.

"A search later brought in only pieces of clothing."

That Mozambicans still try this harrowing trek to get into South Africa is a testament to their tenacious will to survive. The same could be said for hundreds of thousands of refugees elsewhere in the world who have had to overcome enormous odds in their flight from danger.

Untold thousands of Vietnamese have died anonymously in the last 10 years in small, unseaworthy boats in the South China Sea. They have drowned when their boats capsized. Or they have been murdered by pirates. Or they have starved to death when their boats' engines failed and they drifted aimlessly on an endless, watery void.

The exodus of the "boat people" from Vietnam reached its peak in 1979, when as many as 50,000 people were fleeing by sea each month. Thailand, by virtue of its geography, was the hardest-hit country of first asylum. At the same time that Vietnamese boats were piling up on Thai beaches, tens of thousands of Cambodians were fleeing over Thailand's eastern border, and like numbers of Laotians were fleeing across its northern border.

Faced with feeding and housing this increasing accumulation of unwanted humanity, with little meaningful help from the outside world, Thailand took drastic measures. Thai naval vessles began towing Vietnamese back out to sea in their leaky boats, condemning many of them to certain death. In June, 1979, the Thais rounded up 40,000 Cambodian refugees and forced them at gunpoint to re-enter their own country down a steep escarpment into a heavily mined field. Ten thousand people died in the exercise, either from exploding mines or from Thai gunfire when they tried to turn back.

In this, Thailand was not alone. Other nations, in the region also began turning Vietnamese boat people back out to sea. As cruel as the policy was, it succeeded in getting the international community to react. A special UN session was called in Geneva in July, 1979, to alleviate the plight of the refugees and to assure the Southeast Asian nations of first asylum that they would not be saddled with a permanent refugee population. Thus began the remarkable effort to resettle Indochinese exiles in third countries.

To date, more than 1 million Vietnamese, Cambodians and Laotians have been resettled in the U.S., Canada and Australia. Another 150,000 have been resettled in such Western European nations as France, Great Britain and the Scandinavian countries. By 1981, however, the initial burst of welcome for the Indochinese refugees had waned in the West.

Refugee experts began to worry that the wide-scale resettlement of Indochinese was exacerbating the problem, luring more and more people across borders with the promise of new lives in rich, industrialized countries. This fear has been mixed with so-called Western "compassion fatigue," brought about by years of seemingly endless crisis intervention in Third World famine and refugee situations. Together those forces have gradually curtailed Western resettlement programs for Indochinese.

Cambodians, Laotians and Vietnamese are highly distrusted and disliked by the Thais, and to give them refuge year after year is a continuing dilemma for Thai politicians. The idea that the Thais might allow Indochinese refugees to settle permanently in their country is totally out of the question. The idea that the rest of the world will default on promises to empty the camps through resettlement is a recurring political nightmare for Thailand.

A country of first asylum like Thailand becomes paranoid as it watches Western commitment to refugee resettlement fade. In 1981 Thailand instituted a new policy to dam the continual flow of Indochinese. Under "humane deterrence," the Thais deliberately make life in the refugee camps, difficult. Housing is barely adequate, and refugees are restricted throughout their stay from leaving their cramped, guarded compounds. Some refugees are refused the right to apply for resettlement in other countries, as is the case with 300,000 Cambodians housed in Thai-Cambodian border camps. The idea is to make the lot of the refugees so miserable that no more will come.

Humane deterrence has not worked. Though the numbers of people fleeing Indochina dwindled initially, they increased again in 1987. By last January, new arrivals of Vietnamese boat people in Thailand had reached 2,500 a month.

The upsurge in boat people has meant a renewed source of prey for Thai pirates, who have been a constant source of torment for refugees. More and better naval patrols on refugee sea routes have curtailed piracy somewhat but not stopped it.

Last January, for example, 8 of 157 refugee boats landing in Thailand encountered pirates during their escape. Refugees in six boats were simply robbed of gold, jewelry and other belongings. The other two refugee vessels were rammed by pirate ships, killing five in one and seven in the other, six more refugees were lost at sea. Seven survivors of the latter boat also reported that two women were plucked from the water and abducted by the pirates. Since piracy statistics in the Gulf of Siam were first complied in 1981, 659 refugee women and girls have been similarly abudcted by pirates, 357 of them never to be seen again.

Alarmed by the growing new influx of boat people, Thailand in January reinstituted its policy of towing refugee boats back out to sea. The small boats then head for other Southeast Asian nations, usually Malaysia and Indonesia, both of which also have a history of refusing refugee vessels. In April a boat carrying 125 Vietnamese was fired upon by Indonesian soldiers as it tried to land, killing one refugee and wounding another. The boat eventually landed in Malaysia.

The U.S. has led the Western nations' protests against these dangerous "push back" policies of Southeast Asian first-asylum nations. Such criticism from the U.S. is viewed by the Thais as sheer hypocrisy because in 1981 President Reagan signed an executive order directing the U.S. Coast Guard to intercept boats with would-be Haitian refugees headed for Florida. The policy is still in force, and Haitian boats, when caught, are still towed back to Haiti by the Coast Guard.

"In recent years it has become quite clear that it is not wise to preach what one cannot practice," says Zia Rizvi of the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues. "You can't tell the Third World to open their doors to refugees while you are slamming your own."

Thailand and other Southeast Asian nations argue that many Vietnamese now fleeing their homes are not legitimate refugees. They claim that recent arrivals are less victims of persecution than "economic" refugees merely escaping grinding poverty under Vietnam's communist system. Of the refugees landing in Thailand last January, however, 73 percent of the families either included somebody who had been jailed in Vietnamese "re-education" centers for political beliefs or were ethnic Chinese who had suffered racial persecution.

Who is a political refugee and who is an economic migrant is an increasingly blurred issue, particularly in Southeast Asia. Conditions must be excruciating any time people feel compelled to leave home, abandon their society and all that they know and love and risk death to reach an alien and inhospitable land.

Cao Thi Phi Sa and Cao Dang Ra made their wrenching farewwells to Vietnam in November, 1987, arriving in Thailand safely last Dec. 1. Their boat didn't sink, they weren't attacked by pirates and they arrived a month before Thai naval vessels began towing refugee boats back to sea. Moreover, they stand an excellent chance of jumping to the head of the line to emigrate to the U.S.

That is because Sa, 12, and her brother, Ra, 10, arrived in Thailand without their parents or other close relatives. They are housed in Phanat Nikhom refugee camp in Central Thailand, in a special compound that stands as an example of how "Band-Aid" refugee policies, no matter how well-intentioned, often turn into something verging on the perverse.

Sa and Ra live in what is called the "unaccompanied-minors compound" in the camp. In March the two long, tin-roofed buildings in the compound housed 307 children, all of them 14 years old or younger. The youngest was 4 years old. All of them arrived from Vietnam without parents or family, either sent away from home deliberately by their parents or separated from them in one way or another during their escape.

The children are well-looked after by nurses, missionaries and Vietnamese lay workers, but the emptiness of life without their parents, especially for the younger ones, is heartbreaking.

"The children are supposed to go to sleep at 9:30 at night," said a Vietnamese seminarian, also a refugee, who works in the children's compound. "I go into the dormitories and check on them about 11. Some of the children just sit by themselves and cry. They tell me they are homesick. They have no relatives, and they feel lonely. They worry because they don't have enough clothes. They worry about resettlement."

Sa said she and her brother were living in Saigon when their father arranged for their family to leave by boat last Nov. 11. They had gone with their parents from Saigon to Ha Tien, a coastal town near the Cambodian border, and gathered on the beach at nightfall with other Vietnamese who had paid for their passage. She and her brother were put into a rowboat and taken to a larger vessel moored offshore. They then waited on deck for their parents, who were to come out in a late rowboat, she said.

"On the land something happened," Sa said. She is unclear about the details, but Vietnamese authorities apparently arrived suddenly on the beach. Those caught on shore were arrested, though Sa's parents apparently got away. Whatever happened, Sa and Ra went on their way to Thailand without their parents: "When the trouble started, the big boat left right away. There were only nine of us on the boat."

When Sa and Ra arrived safely in Thailand, they were immediately taken to the unaccompanied-minors compound. More than 10,000 Indochinese children have arrived in Thailand without parents or guardians since 1975, 800 in 1987 alone. Because the U.S. considers the children of "profound humanitarian concern," it works to get them out of the camps and resettled in third countries quickly, taking the vast majority of them itself.

The swiftness of their resettlement, however legitimate a humanitarian exercise it might be, also establishes a foothold for the rest of their families to follow. The dwindling number of slots being offered to Indochinese refugees for permanent resettlement in the West has created something of a quandary.

"I'm always thinking about my father," Sa said. "I'm always hoping that he will come here. I don't know why we left, but I know he wanted to go to America."

It always helps, when applying for resettlement, for the refugee to prove he has close relatives already living in the country to which he wants to migrate. Many refugee workers believe large numbers of children are arriving in Thailand unaccompanied to take advantage of this policy.

Not all of this is cold and calculating. Refugee workers say that unaccompanied children are from very strong, tightly knit, loving families.

"The parents are usually well aware of the risks they are putting their children through," said a Western nurse working in Phanat Nikhom. "Establishing a solid future for your children is of paramount importance in Vietnamese society. Many of the children come from families who are at odds with the regime in Vietnam, and the educational and employment opportunities are very limited for their families there as a result.

"Culturally you have to divorce yourself from what a Western parent would do. It's a different situation. The parents know that circumstances change, that they might never get out of Vietnam themselves or see their children again. But they think that if their kids can get out and get to the West, even if they can't, they are making sure that their children will be properly educated and given an opportunity to make something out of life."

Unfortunately, the children are often too young to understand why their parents sent them away, believing they have done something wrong, that they are somehow at fault for the separation. Though about 75 percent of the children spend only a few weeks or months in the camp before resettlement (98 percent of them going to the U.S.), it can take three years or more for others to get out of Thailand. These children, according to Bridget Messana, an American Catholic lay worker at the compound, often get scolding letters from their parents in Vietnam. The letter chide the children for "misbehaving and taking so long" to get resettled.

"The most pain-filled group are those children who are hopeless," Messana said. "They arrived in Thailand one, two or, for some, more than three years ago and have seen so many other children come and go, and still they remain. What is even more frustrating is that these long-staying children have no idea if 1988 will bring them that long-hoped-for freedom . . . because the international attitude toward these children is not at all welcoming. The workers who cannot comfort them with false hope because the reality is that at least half the children will remain in Phanat Nikhom throughout 1988 unless policies change."

Policies are changing rapidly in Southeast Asia, and most of them make it harder for refugees. Canada, Australia, France and Britain are under public pressure to end the resettlement policy.

The U.S. resettlement of Indochinese is gradually declining, too. In 1986 the country accepted 36,000. In 1987, 32,000. Early in 1988, in the midst of a growing number of refugee arrivals in Southeast Asia, it earmarked slots for 29,500.

Thailand, Malaysia, Indonesia and Hong Kong all point to large refugee populations in their camps who are longstayers, people who have been in camps four, five and six years. They are refugees who for one reason or another have already been turned down by Western nations and have fading hopes of ever being resettled anywhere.

Besides the 300,000 Cambodian refugees it wishes to keep for the moment, Thailand also has nearly 100,000 "residual" refugees whom nobody wants. They are Vietnamese army deserters, North Vietnamese who cannot prove they have been persecuted at home, Cambodians who have been somehow connected to the Khmer Rouge, and Hmong from Laos who do not want to be resettled but only wish to go home when it is safe.

If nobody else wants them, Thailand doesn't, either. And Thailand does not want to allow any more refugees into its camps, a certain percentage of whom are bound to become "residuals."

The Southeast Asian countries most affected by the most recent tide of refugees have been banding together to shut their doors. Most are adopting strict screening of new arrivals. If refugees cannot provide persecution by their home countries, they are arrested and jailed pending their forced removal back to their homelands.

Vietnam, the biggest generator of refugees in the region, promised last July to accept such returns of human merchandise. Previously Vietnam considered any of its refugee citizens "illegal departures" and labeled them criminals. In July, however, it declared it was ready to allow refugees unable to resettle elsewhere to come home under UN supervision.

Western nations, just as weary as Southeast Asia of the endless stream of Indochinese refugees, are beginning to support the move to send the unwanted home. Last July U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz said such repatriation, if voluntary on the part of the refugees, should be considered as an alternative to Western resettlement.

"It is feared the policies themselves are creating a possible problem," Schultz said. If resettlement is in fact encouraging economic migrants to pose as political refugees, it should be curtailed, he said.

The softening of the Western commitment to accept all refugees fleeing Indochina is typical of most refugee policy "solutions." Primarily it solves the political problems of the powerful—the nations of first asylum and of resettlement. Of secondary importance is the plight of the powerless refugees, who will eventually move where the rest of the world tells them to move. The 23,000 refugees in Hong Kong are prime examples.

Breakfast begins at 8 a.m. at the Hei Ling Chau refugee camp on a hilltop of an isolated island an hour's boat ride from the British Crown Colony of Hong Kong. The camp's 3,000 Vietnamese inmates have been up scurrying around since a public address system began trumpeting Chinese music at 7 a.m. They have lined up to use the toilets, one for each 145 inmates, and then lined up to get into the communal dining halls for their morning meal of rice, pork and vegetables.

Nowhere else in the world does the image of "warehousing" unwanted refugees become reality as it does in Hong Kong. The refugees of Hei Ling Chau are housed in 10 brick, barrackslike buildings. Each family is assigned to a cubicle made from industrial shelving exactly 8 feet long, 6 feet wide and 3 feet high. Each cubicle is expected to accommodate a family of five and all their belongings. They are stacked three high. All that separates one family from those on either side is a curtain. Those living on the top tier don't even have that small nod to privacy.

Once breakfast, served in shifts, is over, there is little for the inmates to do, except for the children, who attend school. At lunch and dinner times they line up again for a prepared, communal meal. The meals are nutritious and probably the most generous provided to refugees anywhere in the world, with beef served twice a week, fresh fish twice a week and pork and canned fish each served once a week. And boring.

"The food is healthy, but it is so repetitive that you sometimes don't eat enough," said Tran Huu Tiep. Tran, a 30-year-old bachelor, had been staring the same menu in the face for six years, since he arrived in Hong Kong on a leaky boat from North Vietnam in October, 1982.

Women are not permitted to prepare meals for their own families. Men aren't allowed out of the camp to find work. Clothing is distributed army-style: You stand in line for it, you take what they give you and you wear it, whether you like it or not.

All the basic needs of life are taken care of in Hei Ling Chau camp, but that can be said of prison, too. Everything operates smoothly and efficiently. The camp is overseen by courteous, no-nonsense young guards from Hong Kong's Correctional Services Department. Though the young men and women are trained for prison duty, they look more like resort recreation directors in their charcoal slacks, white shirts, ties and blue blazers.

The natty guards stand at the gates in the high fences that surround the camp and divide it into sectors, locking and unlocking them each time a refugee or a camp worker walks from one section to another. There is no greenery or even dirt in the camp, only cement and brick. I fit has the sterile air of a prison, that is because the Hong Kong government built Hei Ling Chau for use as a medium-security prison once it is rid of the refugees.

"A lot of people have nothing to do," said Tran. "They sit around during the day and talk or watch television in the dining halls, or they sleep. At night they sit around in their cubicles playing cards and talking, making a lot of noise when others are trying to sleep. It is a very bad problem, having nothing to do, when you are living on top of each other.

"If too many people are in a small area, you are going to have fights. Fistfights, bludgeons or whatever. Sometimes the fights send people to the hospital. Usually it's over something trivial.

"I lived in Hanoi City at home, where I never saw a man hit his wife. Here I can see trouble in families every day. A husband can't do anything for his wife and children, and people just go slightly crazy."

The sterility of life in Tran's camp is no accident. It was designed that way deliberately by the Hong Kong government. In 1982 the colonial government implemented its program of "humane deterrence," following Thailand's lead.

Leaving nothing to chance, the authorities insert a printed flier that graphically describes the misery of Hong Kong camp life into each letter the refugees send home to Vietnam.

But the boats come anyway, arriving in Hong Kong after days or weeks at sea. They are greeted by harbor police boats and officials who try to talk the refugees out of landing, and they offer to reprovision the refugee boats and help them head out to sea again. It is all explained in circulars printed in Vietnamese:

"All former residents of Vietnam seeking to enter Hong Kong since 2 July 1982 are detained in special centers.

"If you do not leave Hong Kong now, you will be taken to a closed center and detained there indefinitely. You will not be permitted to leave detention during the time you remain in Hong Kong. It is extremely unlikely that any opportunity for resettlement will be forthcoming.

"You are free to leave Hong Kong now, and if you choose to continue your journey, you will be given assistance to do so."

Hong Kong clearly wants to wash its hands of this particular political issue. Since the end of the Vietnamese war in 1975, some 140,000 refugees have come to Hong Kong from Vietnam. About 115,000 have been resettled elsewhere, half in the U.S.

The colony's population is largely Chinese, many of whom illegally crossed the border themselves or have relatives back in China clamoring to come out. The sight of Hong Kong tax-supported camps housing 23,000 Vietnamese legally admitted to the colony and awaiting legal resettlement elsewhere is a galling one to the Hong Kong Chinese.

For the last several years Chinese legislators in the colony have been demanding that any new Vietnamese arrivals in Hong Kong either be pushed back to sea or held in detention until they can be sent back to Vietnam.

"We have 6 million people [in 400 square miles]," said Nigel French, the senior civil servant in charge of Hong Kong's refugee policy. "We have 27,000 illegal immigrants a year coming in from China alone to top our own population pressures. We can't resettle a lot of Vietnamese. We can't politically resettle Vietnamese when we are sending home illegal Chinese immigrants, many of whom are close relatives of our own citizens, every day."

About 70 percent of the Vietnamese boat people coming to Hong Kong are from the north of Vietnam, not the south, which makes them difficult to resettle. The U.S. inundated with requests from South Vietnamese, its former allies, generally will not consider northerners. Because Hong Kong has been by far the most generous area in terms of the numbers it accepts for resettlement, departures have not matched the influx of new arrivals.

The Hong Kong government believes the vast majority of current Vietnamese refugees are simply people hoping to improve their lot by resettling abroad, or merely joining family members who preceded them. Acting on that belief, on June 15 it, too, imposed strict screening of new arrivals. Those deemed to be economic immigrants are locked up pending shipment back to Vietnam. Still, more than 7,000 boat people arrived in Hong Kong in the first two months after screening began.

"It's not legitimate to become reunited with your family by leaving in a small boat and imposing yourself on the nearest regional nation by posing as a refugee," French said. "It brings the status of refugee into some disrepute."

Many would call Tran Huu Tiep, a slight, cheery but earnest young man, an economic migrant. Tran grew up on Quang Ninh province in North Vietnam. In 1974, a year before the North Vietnamese victory over the South, he was sent to Czechoslovakia to study electrical engineering. He stayed there for five years until the government brought him home in disgrace before he could finish his degree, he said.

"They [the Hanoi government] told me I was not a good Communist and said I had to come home. I met students from many countries when I was studying there, and I began to see the world wasn't exactly like I was told by the government when I was home. I began to question why my country was constantly at war. Every year we had three periods of vacation, and all Vietnamese had to use that time for political education among ourselves. I complained at these meetings about not being told the truth and wondered why we had to fight continually."

Removed from the Czechoslovakian engineering program for political heresy, Tran said he was sent back to his home province and was told first to become a charcoal-maker, then a truck driver. When his name came up in the draft, he said he ran away to Hanoi and began to plot his escape.

"If I had to go into the army, I thought I would end up in Kampuchea [Cambodia]," he said, "and that is not the choice I wanted. I had a friend in Hanoi who had a boat, and he was planning to take some people to Hong Kong. I chose Hong Kong because it was the closest."

For nearly five years after he arrived in Hong Kong, Tran was routinely rejected in interviews with resettlement countries. He is a bachelor, a draft dodger, presumed to be unsettled in life and potentially difficult to deal with. By contrast, young children, young single women and established families are considered the ideal immigrants.

Early in 1987, however, Canada interviewed and accepted Tran for resettlement. He, of course, was ecstatic and began researching everything he could about his intended new home, becoming a fan of ice hockey in the process, he said. Even more promising, a young Vietnamese woman he has met and fallen in love with in the camp, Pham Thi Minh, had been accepted and left for Canada in September, 1986.

In preparation for his departure, Tran was sent from Hei Ling Chau to another camp for intensive English and cultural instruction. He had been there for three months when in May, 1987, another Canada-bound refugee was allowed out of the camp to pick up a few things in preparation for his trip. When the man did not return after five hours, the camp administrator asked Tran, a friend of the man's, to go out and look for him. Tran found him in a small shop having a heated argument with the Chinese shopkeeper.

"My friend said the shopkeeper had insulted him about being a refugee, and he thought he was already Canadian," Tran said. "It was all such a silly affair, and I tried to calm them both down. I thought I had settled it, but my friend persisted in arguing with him.

"The security police came, and the shopkeeper accused both of us of stealing from him. We were taken to court and given a year's probation. After court, I got a letter from Canada rejecting me."

Considered by refugee workers and administrators who know him as a model citizen and a tragic victim of the system, Tran nonetheless is now back in Hei Ling Chau sharing a cubicle with two other bachelors. With the rapidly developing new policies aimed at repatriation rather than resettlement, he may one day find himself back in Vietnam, the fate he said he feared the most.

"I'm not sure what will happen," Tran said last May. "Sometimes I think I'll never be resettled. In the camp many people know me very well, and my camp record is very clear and very good. I hope that will clear things up and the Canadians will eventually forget this past incident."

Any plans Tran once had for a future with the young woman he met in the camp are now abandoned. She is now a dressmaker in Edmonton, Canada.

"Since this trouble, I wrote her a letter saying that I don't know when I'll get out," he said. "She wrote back and said she was sorry, that it wasn't my mistake or hers, that perhaps someday I still can come. I told her in the last letter I wrote to her that she should look for somebody else."

Tran Huu Tiep told me his story in Hei Ling Chau camp six weeks before Hong Kong announced its June policy of repatriation for Vietnam refugees. Since then the camp's refugees have staged several protests, including setting small fires and, early in August, holding a three-day hunger strike involving 3,000 persons.

The gradual hardening of world attitudes about refugees usually is linked to the long duration of the wars that sent the refugees away from their homes. The humanitarian impulse to care for homeless war victims turns into resentment when, as months become years and years become decades, these victims and their camps somehow never manage to disappear.

The longer refugees remain in camps and the longer the conflicts that sent them running spill yet more victims across borders, the greater the resentment. Refugees become "economic migrants." They are called a disruptive force within the countries that give them asylum. Or they are accused of being parasites who live comfortably on the international dole.

At the end of World War II it was relatively easy to identify legitimate refugees among the 17 million homeless wandering around Europe. Those who simply left home to get out of the way were in due course returned. Those who fled persecution for racial, religious or political reasons were resettled in safe countries where they could begin life anew. They were treated by and large on a case-by-case basis.

The post-World War II refugee practice became international refugee law in the 1951 UN Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees. That convention defined a refugee as a person who, "owing to a well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion, is outside the country of his nationality."

The 1951 convention stipulated, "No Contracting State shall expel or return a refugee in any manner whatsoever to the frontiers of territories where his life or freedom would be threatened" on account of the reasons mentioned above.

Since 1951, there have been more than 30 other international agreements and about 20 regional agreements dealing with refugees in specific parts of the world. The most important of the latter was the 1969 Organization of African Unity (OAU) Convention Governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa.

Under international law, if any nation wishes to bar its doors to refugees, it can do so because it can exercise its sovereign power to control movement across its borders.

The OAU convention tried to deal with this by pledging that its "Member States . . . shall use their best endeavors . . . to receive refugees and to secure the settlement of those refugees who [cannot return home]."

The OAU convention also recognized that the changing nature of warfare had made identification of refugees more difficult. The 1951 definition was based on a European concept of ideological totalitarianism in the model of Hitler or Stalin, in which individuals are singled out as enemies of the state. The OAU recognized that 1960s Africa was experiencing new mass movements of people fleeing home not because they were singled out but because they were endangered by random, often mindless violence growing out of post-colonial wars and terrorism.

To deal with that, the OAU broadened its definition: "The term 'refugee' shall also apply to every person who, owing to external aggression, occupation, foreign domination or events seriously disturbing public order . . . is compelled to leave his place of habitual residence."

Since 1969 the OAU convention generally has become the norm, though a nonbinding one, for refugee treatment worldwide.

The problem with all these international refugee agreements and protocols is that they often are ignored in the heat of conflict. Political expediency and political advantage, usually couched in terms of state sovereignty rights, always take precedence over the rights of refugees.

The refugees' only support in exile is the international bureaucracy created to house, clothe, feed and care for them. These organizations, too, evolved out of World War II and led to the creation of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) in 1951.

UNHCR has a mandate to protect, assist and find "permanent solutions" for refugees. For the last several years UNHCR has operated with an annual budget approaching half a billion dollars largely contributed by wealthy Western nations to share the burden with Third World nations who give sanctuary to refugees. Its staff of 1,500 handles funding and administrative organization but provides few direct services to refugees.

UNHCR contracts out the actual work in camps to about 300 nongovernmental organizations. These organizations are a diverse group of large and small units all over the world. They include such church-related groups as Catholic Relief Services, Lutheran World Relief and Quaker, Baptist and Mennonite agencies. Some have been organized specifically to deal with refugees, such as the American Refugee Committee or the International Rescue Committee. Others are humanitarian groups active in a broad spectrum of Third World development, among them CARE, Oxfam, Médecins Sans Frontières, World Vision and Africare.

By contracting day-to-day services out to other agencies, UNHCR is able to pursue the most important aspects of its mandate—providing protection to refugees and finding permanent solutions to their plight.

No international protocol explicitly prohibits nations from expelling their own citizens or denying them citizenship or livelihood in their own land. But although all human beings supposedly are protected against such depredations by the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, there are 13 million refugees who can testify that that declaration is meaningless.

Mass expulsion has become a worldwide phenomenon, a tool of governments attempting to rid themselves of opposition. According to Alan Dowty, a University of Notre Dame political scientist and the author of a 1987 book on emigration, "Closed Borders," Vietnam, Cambodia, Afghanistan, Ethiopia, Laos, Mongolia, Burma, Rwanda, Iraq, South Yemen, Iran, Uganda, Cyprus, Sri Lanka, Indonesia and Sudan have engaged in mass expulsions in recent years.

In addition, Dowty cites other nations that have no mass-expulsion policy but have nonetheless viewed the exodus of citizens as a convenient solution to their internal conflicts: Guatemala, El Salvador, the Philippines, Lebanon, Angola, Mozambique, Chad, Zaire and Western Sahara. Dowty's list is a pretty fair catalogue of the origins of most of the world's refugees.

"In all the situations taking place during the past decade," said a 1981 UN Human Rights Commission study on mass exodus, "violations of the spirit, and frequently of the letter, of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and its Preamble must be recognized."

It is in this totally political and often vicious atmosphere that UNHCR must try to operate as a nonpolitical, humanitarian agency. Even its access to refugees is not automatic. When people begin to flee one country for another, UNHCR can provide its services only after it is invited to do so by the receiving nation.

The politics of refugees immediately came into focus when UNHCR was created in 1951: It was prohibited from taking care of 700,000 Palestinians chased from their homes in Israel. Anti-Israeli Arab nations prevented the Palestinians from falling under UNHCR care and protection because they wanted to keep the Palestinian refugee problem alive.

Under the UNHCR mandate, Palestinians might have been resettled permanently in other parts of the Arab world, making Palestinian claims against Israel academic at best. Instead, a "temporary" organization, UN Relief and Work Agency (UNRWA), has provided assistance to the Palestinian refugees for nearly 40 years.

Similarly, when Thailand, for its own political reasons, did not want to classify hundreds of thousands of Cambodians living on its eastern border as refugees in 1981, the Thais simply refused UNHCR permission to care for the Cambodians and classified them as "displaced persons." Yet another agency, the UN Border Relief Operation (UNBRO), was created to care for those people.

UNHCR has no army at its disposal to stop or prevent the cruelties of forced exile or to protect refugees in border camps from further violence at the hands of hostile armies or local residents. It has no power to force countries that become sanctuaries to provide the exiles with even minimal humanitarian treatment.

"Its only weapon," said the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues in a 1986 report, "is diplomatic pressure in the form of moral persuasion, protest and, ultimately, public condemnation."

While it feeds, shelters, clothes, and tries to protect refugees, UNHCR also tries to find permanent solutions that will get refugees out of camps and allow them to resume normal lives, ideally back in their home countries or, failing that, either in the host or a third country.

The overall failure to achieve permanent solutions has meant that refugees remain in camps and settlements by the millions year after year. Usually the camps are makeshift affairs, built hastily in the heat of a crisis. Designed as temporary housing, they have, by default, become permanent.

As a rule the camps are woefully overcrowded, slapped together in rural remote corners of the Third World. The remoteness of the camps, however, can be one of their few positive aspects. It locates the refugees relatively close to where they came from, in familiar landscapes and climates and among local people who share similar cultures and languages.

The basic necessities are generally well met in UNHCR camps, which are run by skilled international technocrats. In fact, the refugees usually enjoy more plentiful and more nutritious food, cleaner water and better medical treatment than do many of the local residents. Physically, most refugees are better off than they were in their home countries.

But sustenance is a spiritual thing, too, and no amount of international aid can mend the wounds of a spirit trapped in exile. Whether it holds 180 persons or 180,000 and whether it is four days or four decades old, the refugee camp has an uncanny sameness about it, be it in the Middle East, Africa, Asia or Central America.

Open garbage ditches carrying raw sewage are the norm, as are communal toilets and spartan housing crammed so closely together there is no room for privacy or space for children to play. Always there are the long lines in front of scarce water taps, in front of food depots, in front of medical clinics. People in refugee camps spend a lot of time waiting for basic necessities.

The crowding of essentially rural people into urban slumlike enclosures, the rigid routine of camp life and the constant worrying over an uncertain future combine to make refugee existence a sort of stale, sterile half-life. Refugees spend a lot of time just sitting around and brooding, wards of international welfare.

Refugees and refugeedom have become institutionalized, despite the best efforts of UNHCR. There are now UNHCR experts in camp construction and management. Nutritionists who can devise exact diets for a given refugee population in a given climate. Medical specialists who can set up hospitals overnight and inoculate refugees by the thousands in a day. Logistics experts who can calculate the precise wear and tear on local roads and bridges from trucks supplying the camps and who can then marshal the materials and the people needed to rectify the problems. Unfortunately, there are no experts in the UNHCR or anywhere else in the world who can end the wars that create the camps and send the refugees home.

"The problem of institutionalizing refugees is due to the absence of solutions to their plight," said Jean-Pierer Hocké, the high commissioner for refugees who oversees UNHCR's operations, based in Geneva. "By allowing camps to crystallize, to become semipermanent, we allow the people inside them to become increasingly dependent on our aid.

"We try to initiate some things that will bring about some amount of self-sufficiency. Even if a farmer in a camp is only given enough land to grow 15, 20 or 25 percent of the food that he and his family needs, it allows him some dignity in life. To get out of emergency assistance in the camps as soon as possible, even if we cannot get the refugees out of them, is a goal that is important to us."

Hocké's theories on refugee self-sufficiency are not mere bureaucratic rhetoric. In camps all over the world, UNHCR administrators push the theory with hard-nosed determination, even in the face of opposition from the refugees themselves. Despite these efforts, self-sufficiency is rare.

The countries that have accepted refugees are most often destitute themselves, land-poor and lacking basic resources. Whatever land is made available to refugees is usually marginally productive at best. Often camp sites are totally barren, and for lack of land or water or both, refugee farmers find it difficult to raise crops. As for traders and businessmen in exile, they are too isolated from the normal channels of commerce and industry to find a job or nurture a small business.

The refugee's plight is complicated by their sheer numbers. Once processed and placed in a camp, they are dealt with by the numbers as nameless, faceless hordes. Despite its efficiency, UNHCR simply cannot afford to deal with them individually, as European refugees were treated after World War II. Individuals with special problems, as in any large bureaucratic undertaking, often fall through the cracks.

Idris Adem Aki, 60, is a refugee who fled to Sudan from Ethiopia's northern Eritrea province in 1976, when the Ethiopian army attacked his village. A farmer, he escaped with his wife and five children into Sudan, which was just a few miles from his home. The day after the raid he returned to his village and discovered that the army not only had burned his and every other house in his community but also looted all his possessions and walked off with his 10 cows.

Ali has been living in Sudan refugee camps ever since, the last several years in Um Gargur, a camp in an arid plain on the eastern side of the country. UNHCR and Sudanese refugee officials have been trying for some time to get the camp's 7,000 people off the dole by encouraging them to plant gardens.

Motivating the refugees was easier said than done. Most people were willing to grow crops that would supplement the boring UN food rations, according to Eritrean officials inside the camp. But they were not willing to make the gardens into a full-blown self-sufficient enterprise.

"People here do not want to make something permanent out of the camp," one of the officials said. "People want to work with community development and improve their lives, but it is a contradiction. They want to go home, and every year they hold out for that in their hopes and dreams, thinking that maybe in six months the trouble will be over and they can return. They don't want to work hard and build up a stake in this place when their primary thought is to leave it behind. If I tell somebody to think of long-term projects, they say, 'No, I don't want to stay here a long time.' "

To encourage the garden project, UNHCR gradually began to cut the rations it gave to the Um Gargur refugees. In June 1987 Sudanese refugee officials declared the camp entirely food self-sufficient, and all rations were terminated except for "at risk" groups such as widows and the elderly. The refugees tried to grow enough, but three successive 1987 plantings withered in a drought, and the fourth was destroyed by insects.

By the time I talked with Ali in October, 1987, he and many people in the camp were complaining of chronic hunger. Ali, who has a family of nine to feed, receives a monthy bag of sorghum, which the Eritreans call dura, from the UN.

"Here they give me this dura, which is not good quality at all," Ali said, sitting in his mud hut with a half-eaten bag of the grain in front of him. "I used to feed my cows at home with dura like this. Smell it. It's no good. How can I expect to be healthy with this sort of food in such small amounts? It's only enough for 10 days for all of us.

"Usually I try to find work outside the camp with local farmers. If I can't find work, I ask friends to help me. If they can't help, we go hungry. It happens every month. When there is no food and I am very hungry, sometimes I sit up at night and drink as much water as I can until I vomit.

"At home I had lots of butter, milk and good crops. A person my age should be fat and strong."

The Eritreans insist that self-sufficiency projects are unrealistic. The areas in which their camps are located are marginal croplands in the best of times but are so vulnerable to drought and insects that getting sufficient harvests each year is nearly impossible.

"There are many people here who are now malnourished," said one Eritrean camp official, "and they get no assistance from anywhere. The majority of the families are in some sort of difficulty."

At its Sudan headquarters in Khartoum, a UNHCR official did not dispute that statement. The garden projects in the camps have become more policy than experiment, she said, both to cut expenses and to force refugees to take charge of their own lives again. Hard-nosed as the cutting of rations seems, she said it was the only realistic way to get people to take their farming work seriously. The drought and insect problems were just bad luck, even though they left refugees hungry.

"Under our system it can happen from time to time," she said. "We do have safeguards built in, and the adjustments eventually are made. We do a major food assessment in the camps every November, and if we discover that people are in trouble, we will increase the rations."

Pakistan is home to more than 3 million refugees from neighboring Afghanistan who live in 328 refugee "villages" of sundried-mud-brick huts. The settlements, some of them with 30,000 to 170,000 people, are more populous than all but four or five of Afghanistan's largest towns. A huge concentration of refugees lives in and around Peshawar, the main city in Pakistan's North West Frontier Province. But the majority live in camps in remote, ecologically fragile desert and mountain areas.

The UNHCR effort to feed and care for so many people is the biggest and one of the best-run refugee operations in the world. Throughout the decade-long presence of Afghans in Pakistan, there have been no famines or epidemics and little acute malnutrition.

Part of the credit belongs to the Pakistan government. The camps are completely open, with no fences surrounding them, and Pakistan allows the refugees complete freedom to enter and leave. Refugees can work for local farmers, merchants and industries to supplement their rationed existence in the camps. Pakistan, which has a well-developed federal bureaucracy, supplies 3,000 administrators of its own, who do much of the refugee assistance distribution. In addition, Pakistan itself pays 48 percent of the daily operating costs of $1 million a day.

The war in Afghanistan has gone on so long, however, and the refugees have become such permanent fixtures that outside contributions for their care began to diminish in 1987, forcing UNHCR into some grim cutbacks.

Last year, for example, UNHCR stopped distributing tea and sugar in the camps to save $5 million annually. A seemingly trivial thing, the tea and sugar served two basic needs in the camps. Much of the water used in the camps is tainted, taken from irrigation ditches and rivers because refugees become impatient waiting in the interminable lines at scarce safe-water wells. Impure water is the most common cause of diarrhea, the No. 1 child-killer in the camps.

Refugee workers had used the tea to train refugees to boil impurities out of their drinking water, but they also worry that no more tea means the loss of one of the few social pleasures refugees have to break up the suffocating monotony—neighborly conversation over a shared pot of tea.

UNHCR also has been forced to make drastic cuts in its rations of powdered milk for refugee children and of kerosene for lighting and heating. Those two cutbacks save $2 million and $8 million a year, respectively.

"For our operations here, we are 100 percent dependent on donations from governments and nongovernment agencies," said a UNHCR official in Islamabad, Pakistan's capital. "We have very little regular budget, only the salaries of our essential personnel. Our cutbacks represent a saving of $15 million a year. That is a lot of money with which you can do a lot in public health, sanitation and education. Do you provide more clean-water systems in the camp or a couple of tons of tea every year?"

With a diminishing budget and with arable land so scarce in Pakistan, UNHCR cannot make the refugee population self-sufficient. The only food assistance refugees now get from the UN comes in the form of wheat and cooking oil, which are generously rationed so refugees can trade the excess on local markets for meat, vegetables and fruit.

Through the 85 international voluntary agencies that help run the camps, UNHCR has begun income-generating workshops in carpetweaving, carpentry, mechanics and other crafts. These are designed to give the refugees income and something to occupy their time. The workshops have worked well as far as they go, but they touch the lives of only a small percentage of camp inhabitants.

The essentially urban nature of the large Pakistan camps is totally unnatural to Afghans. At home they lived in remote mountain valleys, each family's house hundreds of yards from the next, each community made up of closely interlocking families and clans.

Camp life in Pakistan has been particularly hard on Afghan women, who must observe Muslim purdah and cover their faces with a veil when in front of men who are not close relatives. In rural Afghanistan, observing purdah is not so much a problem because even neighbors are likely to be close family members. Women can go outside during the day without veils and other restrictions. But in crowded refugee camps, men do not like women to leave their huts at all.

"The stress is incredible on village women," a Western volunteer said. "We have been developing craft workshops expressly for women so they can get a little bit of extra income but also to give them a chance just to get out of their houses once in a while. We have had a terrible struggle to overcome the objections of the mullahs [Muslim religious leaders], who don't want the women out of their houses under any circumstances."

The mullahs push to maintain the Afghan rural tradition of sending a husband to the doctor when his wife is sick. "There have been instances," said the volunteer, "when the mullahs said they would rather have their womenfolk die than allow them to be examined by a male doctor, and subsequently all women disappeared from the clinics. This has created terrible friction over health care for small children. If the mothers aren't there, we can't teach them anything about effective home remedies and preventive practices such as oral rehydration or nutrition.

"Oddly enough, we have been able to use purdah to introduce some living improvements in the camps. In Afghanistan, villagers relieve themselves in the fields near their homes, and that is what they have continued to do in the camps. But in the camps, the women have had to wait for nightfall or get up before dawn to dash outside in the dark. The whole practice has created enormous health hazards, as you can imagine.

"We have introduced family pit latrines for each house that eliminate the pollution. After initial resistance from the mullahs, who didn't see how it fit into the traditional way of things, the project began to succeed when men saw that their women would not have to leave their houses to relieve themselves."

Most women have been in the camps from six to eight years, however, and the experience of being held virtual prisoners in their own homes for that long has taken its toll.

"There is a lot of despondency and of uncontrollable, spontaneous weeping," said the volunteer. "When you ask them what is wrong, they don't know. They don't see camp life and purdah as part of the problem. Some of the mullahs have said that if women had kept stricter purdah in Afghanistan, the Russians wouldn't have invaded. God is punishing them, in other words. It makes women feel all the worse."

Their prolonged stay in Pakistan has, of course, created problems for everybody in Afghan exile society. At any given time 40 percent of all married women between 15 and 45 are pregnant, according to one study. There is little for children to do. The girls, by and large, are not allowed to attend school. The boys, their hearts set on becoming soldiers, drop out as soon as they are old enough. The soldiers come home to bury their dead at the edge of the camps in cemeteries that resemble burial grounds of American Plains Indians, bristling with tribal flags attached to long poles staked into the ground.

"What is going to happen to a generation of men who now know nothing but war?" asked a Western aid worker. "What is going to happen to a generation of children who know nothing but life in a camp? Whether they like it or not, whether they win the war or not, these people are eventually going to have to go home, and their lives have been fundamentally changed by this experience."

Dr. Mohammed Azam Dadfar, an Afghan physician who now runs the Psychiatry Center for Afghans in Pesawar, said a psychological disorder he had labeled "refugee camp syndrome" had reached epidemic proportions. The refugees have relied so long on outside assistance, he said earlier this year, that they now suffer an overwhelming sense of dependency.

"We've become a paralyzed people, a nation of souls bought and sold by distant powers," he said. "The principal cause of distress is the pervasive atmosphere of life in a border society, a place of refuge that is strangely both temporary yet all too permanent. The camps are wells of frustration, of unresolved grief. It leaves the patients with a bleak view of the future, therefore they feel no urge to exert themselves."

The same sort of cultural paralysis has set in among the Hmong, the mountain tribal people from Laos who have fled by the tens of thousands into northern Thailand. The Hmong were closely allied with the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency's clandestine war in Laos during the American involvement in the Vietnam conflict.

When the Communists came to power in Laos in 1975, they turned on the Hmong for their American connections. Wholesale Communist bombing, raiding and murder inside Hmong settlements after 1975 set off their exodus to Thailand. And the Hmong were among the first groups that the U.S. wanted to bring to America for resettlement.

Of all the people the U.S. has allied itself with during the Vietnam War, the Hmong proved to be the bravest and most selfless and incorruptible. They tied down enemy forces far beyond their own numbers and saved the lives of countless American fliers shot down over Laotian jungles. America believed, rightly, that it owed something to the Hmong.

The problem is the Hmong themselves. More than 80,000 have come to the U.S., but while their numbers in Thai refugee camps keep rising, they have come here only reluctantly and slowly. In their native Laos, the Hmong were an extremely isolated, primitive mountain society that did not see or use the wheel until World War II. They are a polygamist, animist, traditionbound people who, like the Afghans, are organized by clans.

Moving to America is not particularly desirable, and the Hmong clan elder know it. Those who have come to the U.S. have not adjusted well to life in a freewheeling, high-tech, Christian, monogamist society. The children adapt, as all children do, but the older people long to go home. They write to their friends and relatives in the Tai camps of the difficulties in America.

To see the 75,000 Hmong now lodged in the Thai border camps is to see a whole culture unraveling. Old men, the family and clan leaders, stand warily outside interview centers for possible emigration to the U.S. They are afraid to go inside because they don't really want to emigrate, hoping that somehow, someday they can go back to Laos. If they do go inside, they sometimes sit answering questions with their backs to the interviewers, perhaps to show that their hearts are not really in it.

Their children, many of whom have grown up after 10 years in the camp and now have families of their own, are increasingly frustrated with their fathers' uncertainty. There is no life, no education, no opportunity in the camps. The Thais have begun hinting they may soon resolve the problem simply by pushing all the Hmong back to Laos. The children want to go to America before that day of reckoning comes, but if their fathers say they cannot, they will not go on their own.

Ban Vinai is the largest of the Hmong camps in Thailand, housing 42,000 people in a hilly, pictuesque jungle area where the Mekong River separates northern Thailand from Laos. Songleng Chang is the 62-year-old head of the Chang clan in the camp. He has been living in Thailand since May, 1979, when, he said, Communist soldiers began harassing and robbing people in his village, threatening his family in particular because of his position as head of the clan. He fled with two wives, two sisters, two sons and their wives and two grandchildren, all of whom remain in Ban Vinai.

"Many people left when we did, maybe 1,000 of us," Chang said. "We walked for 12 days until we reached the Mekong. We had to make boats out of bamboo to cross. One person would have two pieces of bamboo lashed under his arms, and he would use his hands to paddle. We lashed the old people and the babies to the younger ones. Some young men had to keep recrossing to bring the babies across."

Chang has seen many people leave Ban Vinai for the U.S., including relatives who now live in California, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan. He has never gone for an interview with U.S. immigration authorities.

"I've decided not to go yet," he said, though he admits life in the camp is unbearable for most people who have been there for a long time. "I'm so bored. I want to go into the forests and hunt, but they won't let you do that here. I want to plant by fields, but they don't have land here for us to plant. In Laos we could hunt and plant any time we wanted to. In this camp or in another country, the Hmong can't farm anymore."

Charming and almost docile in demeanor, the Hmong also have a stubborness about them. Health workers are chagrined because elders have decided that modern medicines and inoculations are themselves dangerous, disease-bearing agents. As a result, it took camp doctors from 1984 to 1988 to increase inoculation coverage of children from 4 percent to 20 percent. At the same time, the overcrowded camps have been outbreaks of measles, tetanus, diphtheria, tuberculosis, polio and whooping cough.

Suicide rates in the camp are high, principally among women aged 15 to 25 who are forced into arranged marriages. Many of the adult men have turned to opium, which may be a way to escape anxiety over the future but is also a sure route to rejection by American immigration officials.

"It is a real pity," said Dr. Andre Veneman, a Dutch physician working as a camp medical coordinator.' "You can see that when fathers smoke opium, their children look worse off. Whatever money they manage to get goes to their habit, not to their families. We see a real breakup in society here. The best people leave, the rest are deprived of their leadership."

Still the Hmong continue crossing the Mekong illegally and setting up households in camps like Ban Vinai without registering with UN or Thai officials. By not registering, they have no hope of resettlement in the U.S., but they also avoid the risk of being forced to return to Laos.

Concerned about the continuing influx, Thailand earlier this year accused Laos of deliberately trying to rid itself of all Hmong. Last year the U.S. UNHCR and Amnesty International accused Thailand itself of serious human rights violations when it forced Hmong refugees it considered illegals back to Loas. One group of 33 people, shoved back across the river by the Thais, were shot to death on the banks of the Mekong by Laotian soldiers. The massacre came to light only because passing Thai fishermen stumbled on the only survivor, an 8-year-old girl.

Political reality gives men like Chang only one real option, resettlement in the U.S. But he won't take the necessary steps to leave. In a long meandering conversation, Chang came up with any number of reasons why he shouldn't go to the U.S. As he named them, you could almost hear the echoes of years of tortuous family discussions and arguments about going or staying. Finally he concluded: "I am just going to wait for Laos to reopen. I don't know when we can go back. We're just waiting. I'll wait here as long as I can. I can't permit my childen to go [to the U.S.]. I have told them they must stay with me until I make my decision. If the father cannot go, the son cannot go. He depends on the father."

Westerners working with the Hmong in the camps, however, believe that is the compelling reason older Hmong are reluctant to leave for America. "They get letters from relatives in the States all the time," said one refugee worker at Ban Vinai. "The news is bad for the older people. They know the older ones in the States are just too old to master English. They get there, and all of a sudden they have to depend on their children to get by in life. The kids learn the language, the kids dial the phones, do the talking, drive the cars. The kids get the jobs and bring home the money. It flies in the face of their tradition. It means the older ones will have to relinquish family leadership. They will never be the head of their families again. They will not be the boss."

Chang's oldest son, Lee, 30, himself married to one wife and the father of five, would not be so brutally frank about the reasons for his father's reluctance to go to the U.S. Nevertheless, he said he is ready to break tradition—and, perhaps, Chang's heart—by disobeying his father.

"Right now I've decided to go to the U.S. independent of my father. We have been in this camp too long, and I am at an age when I have to make my opportunities in the U.S. before I am too old. I will try to explain to my father the reasons why I am going. If he understands, maybe he will go with me. I wouldn't want to go without him and my mother.

"Right now he is wavering again. He thinks he can't go because he can't speak English, so he won't be able to work. It is very difficult for him."

The Hmong experience is one of the more horrible legacies of modern proxy warfare. The Hmong were courted and used in a war by a larger, richer, more powerful society—America. America lost a war; the Hmong probably lost everything. While the U.S. works vigorously to make amends with individual Hmong, the Hmong culture may not survive, not in Thailand, not in the U.S. and possibly not in Laos.

The Hmong reluctance to accept resettlement in the U.S. is odd when viewed against the belief of refugees elsewhere that America is morally obligated to take them in. The streets of Karachi, Pakistan's teeming port city, can be as mean as any in the world if you are broke, homeless and desperate to escape. Karachi is the home of Pakistan's "other" refugee problem, some 10,000 Iranians who have fled Ayatollah Khomeini's Iran.

Some are legitimate refugees, usually members of minority religious groups singled out for persecution by the Khomeini regime, including Jews, Bahais and Christians. They are relatively easy to resettle in Europe, Israel and the U.S.

Others are far more difficult. Members of two Marxist Muslim sects that have been hounded to near-extinction in Iran, the Mujahideen Khalq and the Fedayeen Khalq, have found sanctuary in Karachi, where they have remained as unreconstructed, violent radicals. Nobody else in the world wants them, though Iran's archenemy, Iraq, has funded their activities in Pakistan, enabling them to buy houses in some of Karachi's best neighborhoods.

Their presence last year set off a national debate in Pakistan about the nation's generosity to the displaced. It came after an Iranian hit squad launched a full-scale bomb, rocket and machine-gun attack on a Mujahideen Khalq house early one morning, rudely awakening the refugees' neighbors, including some of the most influential families in Pakistan. The battle transformed one of Karachi's wealthiest suburbs into an Iranian battleground for a few brief, bloody minutes.

No matter how well-run a UNHCR operation can be in any given country, people who need services fall through the cracks. Perhaps 200,000 Afghan refugees live in Pakistan without being registered with UNHCR. Many, perhaps the majority of them, do so out of choice, usually because they want to live in a city and find work on their own, rather than being stuck in a rural camp.

Tens of thousands of them, however, are in desperate need of UNHCR assistance but are blocked by Pakistani corruption. Nations of first asylum can write their own rules. Pakistan uses its own civil servants in all phases of the Afghan refugee effort, including registration for UNHCR benefits.

Registration officials are thought to charge Afghans "registration fees" of up to $200 per person at some points on the border. If the refugees don't pay, they don't get ration cards or a place in a UNHCR camp.

The knottiest problem here for UNHCR, however, is the thousands of Iranian boys and young men who have traveled dangerous roads to escape the draft and the war against Iraq. Draft dodging is not a legitimate qualification for refugee status, no matter whose war is being avoided. Most of these young men are from wealthy or middle-class Iranian families who supported Khomeini's predecessor, the late Shah Pahlavi. Many have family members in the U.S. and desperately want to get there. Their parents have the money to smuggle them out, but once they are inside Pakistan, UNHCR can do little for them.

"The big problem is that UNHCR doesn't accept draft dodgers as refugees," said a UN official in Karachi. "Their cases as refugees are rejected, but Pakistan allows them to stay unofficially to work out their own lives."

The truly rich get themselves to Europe or the U.S. rather easily. The majority become a sort of nonpeople, prey to all sorts of con artists and Karachi lowlife.

Hamid Reza Hashemi arrived in Pakistan from Mashhad, Iran's third largest city, in October, 1986, when he was 15 years old. Hashemi is the youngest of seven boys born to a Mashhad businessman. Three brothers already live in New Jersey. Another brother, Saeid, 22, followed him out of Iran in November, 1986, and remains with him.

Hashimi said he was arrested by Iranian secret police a few months before he fled to Pakistan. He had been attending high school in Mashhad and had joined a pro-shah underground protest group after 36 boys from his school had been forced to join the army. He said he was arrested one night when he was caught placing photographs of the shah's son on windows of parked cars. He was detained for 24 hours and beaten severely, he said, then released to a hospital with broken cheekbones and whip lacerations.

After a week's recovery, he said his parents told him he would be safer if he left Iran. They scraped together $2,000 to pay a Baluchi tribesman to take him into Pakistan. The escape routes, however, are well-traveled not only by draft dodgers but by bands of smugglers operating on both sides of the border, and it was Hashemi's bad fortune to stumble into a running, three-day gunfight between drug smugglers and border guards as soon as he got into Pakistan.

"We kept trying to avoid the fight by running from one mountain pass to the next," Hashemi said, "but each time we arrived at a new place, the fight would come our way. One day when we were running, I became separated from my guide. I became lost and wandered for four days by myself. A car full of Pakistani border police found me the first day and arrested me. They told me they were taking me back to Iran and drove for half an hour toward the border. When they stopped, they asked me how much I had. I took off a shoe and showed them an American $100 bill. They took it and let me out of the car."

Hashemi was lucky. UNHCR accepted the documentation he had brought with him that showed his arrest and subsequent hospitalization in Iran and proved that he was not just a draft resister. He received a coveted "blue" card from the UN identifying him as a refugee and granting him a living allowance of $60 a month and the chance to seek third-country resettlement by legitimate means.

Hashemi studied English in Islamabad for 17 months, then joined his brother in Karachi. They get a little money from home, but they must stretch their budget by sharing an $11-a-night room in a third-class tourist hotel with four other Iranian boys. There are no jobs for them, and they cannot finish school in Pakistan, so they idle away their time.

Nobody much wants them. Hashemi had an unsuccessful interview with Swedish authorities, but he and his brother most want to go to the U.S., where three older brothers got asylum while attending colleges. The U.S., however, won't interview them.

"The U.S. says they will only take Bahais, Jews and Christians but no Moslems," Hashemi said. "We don't need America to pay us anything. Just to go there as refugees and go to school so that we can be with our brothers—that is all we want."

The Iranian draft dodgers are fair game in Karachi. Pakistanis and Baluchis approach them in hotel lobbies and coffee houses, offering them forged and stolen travel documents ($350 for a Pakistani passport, $1,100 for a European one). Most Pakistani immigration officials can spot the bogus travel papers, so bribes—as high as $1,500—are arranged to get them through the gates.

The whole process has bankrupted many families in Iran. Usually the exercise is for naught, anyway. European airline personnel, trained to spot phony travel documents, refuse to take the boys on board. Should they get through to Europe, most are caught by immigration officials and returned to Pakistan and end up with a jail sentence. Worse still, many of the document peddlers are in collusion with Karachi airport officials, who arrest the boys there (after bribes change hands, of course) and send them to jail for six to nine months.

With legitimate refugee papers, Hashemi and his brother eventually have a chance for a bona-fide resettlement offer. But hundreds of draft dodgers live in seedy rooming houses in an area of Karachi called Lee Market. A burly Iranian army deserter named Asghar lives there, sharing a 40-square-foot room with five other Iranians. None has a UN refugee card, so they pool whatever resources they have to pay the $50-a-month rent and buy food. They share three cots, taking turns sleeping on the floor. A filthy toilet and washbasin are in the hall, shared with other tenants in the roach-infested building.

Asghar remains in Pakistan illegally as he tries to get to Amsterdam, where he says he has a wife and two children who emigrated legally in 1985, a year before he deserted from the army. At 34 he is the patriarch of his room. The next oldest man is 24.

Asghar takes a paternal interest in the two youngest, who are brothers, 15 and 19 years old. Their parents happened to be in England when the shah left Iran, and they remained there, he said. They finally arranged their sons' escape to Pakistan in 1986, but the boys arrived with no documentation or passports, so they are trapped in Karachi.

"I am going crazy sitting in this place, but I am even more worried about those two," Asghar said, nodding at the youths. "There is a lot of heroin in this neighborhood, and I am afraid they are giving up on hope. Right now I won't let them out of the building. Last week the younger one got into trouble on the street. A man offered to give him 1,000 rupees [$60], asking the boy to go with him.

"Somebody told me what was going on, and I ran down to the street and tracked them down. I found this Pakistani, this pimp, who was going to take this boy and turn him into a prostitute. I handled that my own way. You can't go to the police here if you don't have a UN blue card. That will just draw you into deeper trouble.

The moment a person steps across a border to seek asylum in another nation, he is supposed to be protected by international protocols. In theory, such a person cannot be sent back against his will, at least until his case is examined. In practice, with so many of them coming continuously, most refugees don't get individual hearings.

Most of those granted ayslum are protected by UNHCR against forcible repatriation, military attacks from their home countries and legal and economic exploitation by the host nation—theoretically. In practice, it rarely works that way.

International legislation drawn up after World War II assumed that the countries granting asylum would also provide the same legal, police and military protection they extend to their own citizens. But today's host countries often are too poor to provide such services even to their own citizens. When refugee camps are attacked by military forces or local citizens, UNHCR can do little but protest.

Officially there are about 500,000 Eritrean refugees living in Sudan. Unofficially the figure is far higher, as tens of thousands of Eritreans move into larger cities and towns without documentation, seeking work in the local economy. For the most part they are the urban, better-educated, better-trained Eritreans who were never farmers and for whom extended stays in isolated, rural camps is a form of ghastly torture.

In Port Sudan, a city of 300,000 and the nation's major seaport, for instance, 60,000 Eritreans live and work without direct UNHCR assistance. They live mostly in segregated refugee slums, cramped shacks and hovels without sewers or water, eking out a living from low-paying jobs. The UN helps by funding schools, hospitals and health clinics in the city, which is supposed to offer services to refugees as it would to citizens.

"The refugees are in fact sharing everything with the Sudanese people in the city," said a Sudanese refugee official. "Even the job market is open fully to them to compete equally with people in the town, and people complain that wages stay low because of the big labor market. The city's infrastructure was very fragile to begin with, and the refugees have overburdened it.

"It can't handle the additional sewage problems and the demands on electricity. The additional population drives up prices on everything. During our recent drought, everybody was looking for safe drinking water, and the sellers were getting [75 cents] for each pail. Rent for a house that should be [$14] a month now costs [$70] a month.

"At first refugees were accepted warmly in Port Sudan, as it is in the tradition of the people here. Now, after all these years and the worsening of economic conditions for Sudan, this warm welcome has changed. Now there is resentment against all refugees, especially in the towns."

In Khartoum, Sudan's capital, police periodically round up Eritreans without residency or work permits. Eritrean community leaders complain that their people are regularly shaken down by corrupt police officials. Refugee women in the city, they say, are sometimes gang-raped by police and told not to complain under threat of deportation to remote camps.

"Any man on the street can come up to you and identify himself as a policeman," one Eritrean said. "He can harass you and even rob you, and you have no recourse. Policemen can come into your house and rob you, and you have no recourse. You can't go to the courts and charge them because you yourself will be charged with having no papers and no right to be where you are. So you just keep your mouth shut and try to stay out of people's way."

On May 27, 1987, six off-duty Sudanese soldiers in civilian clothes entered an Ethiopian refugee camp not far from Gedaref, a busy market town in the eastern part of Sudan. The soldiers went to the camp to get what they cannot get on the Sudanese market—liquor. Under Sudan's Islamic law, the sale and consumption of liquor are strictly illegal, but in the camps, the refugees make a traditional Ethiopian wine for their own consumption.

According to all accounts, the Sudanese soldiers had a good time at the camp drinking much of the night away in a makeshift bar set up by a refugee. At the end of the night, the soldiers left the bar without paying but were surrounded by angry refugees before they got out of the camp. After an argument, the military men were soundly beaten for their arrogance but allowed to leave.

On May 28 rumors began to spread in the area that six Sudanese soldiers had been murdered in the camp by refugees. When the rumor hit Gedaref (a town of about 75,000 people with 7,000 unregistered Ethiopians who get by working in tea shops and as house servants), angry mobs of Sudanese began to gather.

"That night a mob gathered outside the local cinema," said an Ethiopian refugee who works for a European humanitarian agency in Gedaref. "When people came out of the cinema after the last film, they began to single out and beat any refugee they could find in the crowd. They used fists, stones and sticks.

"The next day it spread throughout the town. Any refugee found on the street was beaten. No refugees dared leave their homes, even to go out and buy food. In some cases, the mob was joined by soldiers, who went right into refugee houses and beat and robbed the people, raping the women. On Saturday, May 30, a man was beaten to death by a plainclothes policeman, and dozens of refugees were picked up and thrown in jail without charges.

"The violence continued for 15 to 20 days. You couldn't move on foot or by vehicle. The official toll was one person killed in the town, and hundreds were injured. It got so far out of hand that finally the governor of the province had to come to the city to tell the local people the truth, that no soldiers had been murdered in the camp. But he did nothing to punish them for the violence they did to the refugees here. No Sudanese were arrested, no investigation was made. Instead, he blamed the refugees for the problem because they made the liquor."

The last decade is rife with incidents of governments sending their armies across borders to attack UNHCR refugee camps on punitive raids. Guatemala has sent expeditions into Mexico against Guatemalan refugees. El Salvador has sent troops after its own citizens in Honduras. Uganda has murdered Ugandan refugees in Sudan. Vietnam has attacked and shelled refugee camps in Thailand. Afghanistan sends terrorist bomb squads and assassins after Afghans in Pakistan.

When such incidents occur, UNHCR can only protest through diplomatic channels and public condemnation through the press.

Public censure, however, is almost pointless when the raids are conducted by rebel groups beholden to no government or international organization, as is the case with Renamo in Mozambique. One seldom encounters armed soldiers anywhere in Malawi, a rare and welcome treat in security-conscious Africa. Certainly Malawi cannot afford to garrison its 300-mile border with Mozambique to protect refugees. That makes the camps easy pickings for Renamo soldiers.

"Renamo sometimes crosses into Malawi to steal food and cows from the refugees," said a Malawi government official in the Ntcheu District on the country's western border with Mozambique. "Two and a half weeks ago the wells on the Malawi side went dry, and a group of refugees went [1½ miles] inside Mozambique to their old wells. They were caught there by a group of Renamo soldiers, and two of them were shot to death."

The vulnerability of the refugees in Malawi came home personally to me last November when I toured camps in the Ntcheu district with a British journalist and a British doctor. At the end of a long day, we headed out of the area in a government vehicle. I noticed a group of refugee women taking water from a well 20 feet inside the Mozambican border, the road on which we were driving. I asked the driver to stop so I could photograph them. Having done that, I asked one of my companions to photograph me standing in "war-torn" Mozambican territory.

The doctor, a knowledgeable veteran of several years of refugee work, chided me for my horseplay. Two days later, we discoverd that Renamo soldiers apparently had watched our impromptu stop, and 10 minutes after we had left, raided the camp from which the women at the well had come. They took several cattle and half a dozen people back to Mozambique.

UNHCR's inability to protect refugee groups ironically has led to the most "successful" solutions of at least two long-standing refugee problems in Sudan and Honduras.

Between 1979 and 1982, following Idi Amin's downfall, about 350,000 people fled from Uganda's northwestern provinces into southern Sudan. Many were from the Arua district of Uganda, which happened to be Amin's home province. Though most were apolitical peasants and tradesmen who had little or no connection with Amin's government, they were singled out for revenge by the new government of Milton Obote. Arua became the scene of horrendous crimes as Obote's army stripped the province bare, literally razing entire towns and villages and robbing, killing and raping along the way.

The exodus from Arua to the Sudan was, as all refugee movements are, a harrowing one. People were murdered as they fled from pursuing Obote troops. As they crossed the border, many refugees were robbed by Sudanese border guards of whatever possessions they had managed to bring with them. UNHCR was totally unprepared for the exodus, and it took years to set up adequate camps.

But the Ugandans happily discoverd that they had moved to a vastly underpopulated, fertile part of the world with abundant if untapped water supplies. Through their years in exile, they began to do something that rarely happens with refugees in the Third World. They began to prosper in their new land.

In 1985 a civil war broke out in southern Sudan. The southern Sudanese tribes, Christian and animist alike, rose up in revolution against the Sudanese government in Khartoum, which is dominated by the nation's Arab Muslim majority. The Ugandan refugees, the majority of whom are Muslim, again found themselves being singled out for violence.

Since 1985, the Ugandans have been running again, trying this time to get back into Uganda. Obote has since been kicked out, and the new Ugandan government has guaranteed their safety, but the Ugandans understandably have been wary. More than half have already returned, but to all, it has been a painful dilemma: Which side of the border—Sudan or Uganda—holds the most danger?

Early last November Alemi Quick, 30, brought his two wives and nine children back to Arua from Sudan on a truck convoy organized by UNHCR for several hundred returning refugees. He hadn't been in Uganda since February, 1982, he said, when Obote soldiers raided his village, looting, burning and murdering the occupants, including his grandmother.

In Sudan, Quick said life took a turn for the better. "I was given some land to farm, and every year we had a good harvest," he said. "The soil had different nutrients for crops, better than what we had at home. I had no interest in coming back to Uganda because it was comfortable there."

On July 17, 1987, however, a unit of the rebelling Sudanese Peoples Liberation Army (SPLA) surrounded the refugee settlement where Quick's family lived. "They started grabbing men in the village and beating them up," he said. "I was given strokes with a stick and hit with a gun barrel. They took all my possessions and money, and forced me to go with them by foot through the bush to their camp in Zaire. I was taken as a porter."

After several days in captivity, he was allowed to return to Sudan, he said, where he immediately went to UNHCR and filled out an application for repatriation to Uganda. The convoy he and his family returned with was laden with hundreds of bicycles, generator motors, tools, pots and pans—ample evidence of the prosperity the Ugandans had found in Sudan. Quick was not so fortunate; most of what he had accumulated in exile had been stolen by the SPLA. He was grateful for the survival package UNHCR gave to each returning family: pots, pans soap, buckets, machetes, axes, scythes, blankets and plastic tarpaulins to make temporary shelters while they repaired their old homes in their Ugandan villages.

The returning refugees were brought to a processing center in Arua, where UNHCR personnel registered them with Ugandan authorities. They arranged for the refugees to recover the lands they had abandoned when they fled Obote's troops and for transport there within a day of their return to Uganda. It was a neat and quick operation, an efficient end to several years of exile, though most of the refugees displayed little overt jubilation about being back.

"I have been told there will be no problem recovering my old farm," Quick said as he stood in line waiting to pick up his survival package. "I'am happy to be home, but now I have to start all over again for the third time in my life."

A similar repatriation process is now underway in Central America. In this case, however, the repatriation is by boat and canoe, as Miskito Indians return from exile in Honduras across the Coco River to their traditional lands in Nicaragua.

The Miskitos are a tribe of 100,000 Indians who live along both sides of the Honduran-Nicaraguan border. Until the Sandinista regime came to power in Nicaragua in 1979, the Miskitos had remained relatively untouched by the long series of Central America revolutions.

Once in power, however, the new Marxist Sandinista government embarked on a clumsy program of reorganizing and collectivizing the Miskitos. The Indians resisted this move, and many of them joined the U.S.-backed contra forces fighting the Sandinista regime.

The Sandinistas reacted quickly and harshly against the Miskitos, running large-scale military operations through the Indians tribal areas inside Nicaragua and forcing whole villages at gunpoint to move to "resettlement" villages far from the tribal lands. By 1983, 30,000 Miskitos had fled Nicaragua, settling among their fellow tribespeople in Honduras. About half settled in UNHCR camps and the rest in their own jungle communities supported, at least in part, by the contras.

By the end of this year, UNHCR officials in Honduras think that most of the 30,000 Miskito refugees will have returned to Nicaragua not so much because they think the Sandinista government will leave them alone but because Honduran soldiers began harassing them early this year.

As thin a veneer as it sometimes proves to be, protection is at least part of the UNHCR mandate. For political reasons, protection was pointedly left out of the mandate of the UN Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA), which cares for displaced Palestinians in the Middle East. Politics, too, left protection out of the mandate of the UN Border Relief Operation (UNBRO), which cares for the 300,000 Cambodians inside Thailand.

Palestinians refugees were excluded from UNHCR's jurisdiction when the agency was being formed in 1950. The Palestinian question was so politically volatile that organizers feared it would corrupt the "purely humanitarian role" envisioned for UNHCR. By creating UNRWA and denying it a protection mandate, the 2,300,000 registered Palestinian refugees living in their Middle Eastern diaspora have had at best, only second-class citizenship in the world.

Since the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, 650,000 Palestinians have lived under Israeli military occupation in the Gaza Strip with no citizenship at all. They have no rights; they have no representation in any body that enacts laws governing their life; they have no access to appeal when they feel they have suffered legal or physical injury from the Israeli military government.

Mota Jeidi is a 61-year-old shopkeeper in Rafah Camp on the southern end of Gaza Strip. As a young husband of six months in 1948, he fled with his wife from his native village in what is now Israel during the Israeli war for independence. He had fought as an irregular against the Israelis, drawing on his previous experience as a police railroad guard for the British Palestinian protectorate government.

Having fought on the losing side, Jeidi and three brothers had to abandon their 60-acre family farm. Three of the brothers ran for Gaza; the eldest, for Jordan. They have been separated ever since. For the first few years, Jeidi and his family lived in a series of tents, eventually building a more substantial house in Canada Camp near Rafah, raising three sons and a daughter. In 1982, when the Israelis wanted to build a road as a demarcation line between southern Gaza and neighboring Egypt, the surveyor's line went through Jeidi's house, and it was condemned.

"They paid me $1,000 for a house that had cost me $30,000," Jeidi said, "and they gave me an empty lot of 200 square yards in another housing project. I had no choice but to build a new house there.

"On the 20th of December, 1986, the Israeli security forces came at 3:30 a.m. to my new house. They found me and my children home, except for one son, Khalid [then 20 years old]. They asked me for Khalid, and I told them I didn't know where he was because I had gone to bed early. They told me they were taking me to jail and leaving me there until he showed up."

The next day, he said, the security forces jailed his wife, his two sons and his daughter as well because Khalid still had not appeared.

"After a week they came and told us that they had caught Khalid, and they released us," he continued. "Nobody told us what he was wanted for, where he was being held or what was happening. We were told nothing. On Feb. 11, 1987, the Israeli forces came back to my house and cordoned off the whole neighborhood at about 1:30 p.m. I had been at home waiting that day for the ICRC [International Committee of the Red Cross] to come and give me news about where Khalid was being held and what was happening to him.

"They [the Israelis] came in Jeeps, along with a bulldozer. They told me they had orders to demolish my house. I was told, 'You have only one half hour to remove what you want to save, otherwise everything that is left inside will be destroyed with the house.' I asked them: 'Why? What was my crime to deserve this?' They said they had to punish me as the father of Khalid because he had committed several crimes against the security of Israel."

Jeidi started pulling out what he could from the house, and precisely half an hour later, he was ordered to stop, and the bulldozer went to work. It took 15 minutes to pulverize his home. Five more months passed before Jeidi learned the charges against his son, he said. In July, 1987, Khalid was tried, convicted and sentenced to life in prison for stabbing two Israeli settlers to death in an open-air market in Gaza.

The Israeli military government in the Gaza Strip is a grim, no-nonsense presence that looms over every facet of life of the territory. There is no pretense of civility when Israeli soldiers issue out of their heavily guarded, fortified quarters inside Gaza to make their daily patrols. The soldiers treat the Gazans with withering contempt and stop them randomly. The Gazans are mute; but there is deadly fury in their eyes as they produce identity cards on demand. For 20 years Gaza Strip was an untended pressure cooker waiting to explode. And last December it exploded with a force that shocked not just the rest of the world but the Israelis and Palestinians themselves.

The rest of the world was stunned by the severe Israeli crackdown inside the occupied territories after refugee youths rose up in Gaza last December. Led by students, the Palestinian intifada against Israeli occupation troops continues.

More than 250 Palestinians and six Israelis have died in this conflict. Hundreds of Palestinians have been severely beaten by Israeli troops in a deliberate pattern designed to quell the unrest. Scores of Palestinians believed to be leaders of the uprising have been separated from their families and expelled. Thousands have been imprisoned under a policy of preventive detention whereby they can be held up to six months without formal charges. Dozens of Palestinian homes have been bulldozed by Israeli troops because an occupant of the house was suspected of "crimes against the security of Israel."

Israel has used each of those instruments of suppression in Gaza throughout its 21-year occupation. More than a year before Gaza uprising erupted last December, the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues urged that more attention be paid to protecting the dispossessed Palestinians. The commission went so far as to suggest having UNHCR replace UNRWA so it could protect Palestinians from Israeli abuses.

"The events of recent years have illustrated a desperate need for the physical protection of civilian refugees, a role for which neither UNHCR nor UNRWA is adequately equipped," a 1986 commission study said. "The protection needs of the Palestinian refugees are not limited to physical protection. They include the protection of their fundamental human rights, and some very complicated problems stemming from the statelessness that many of them suffer. . . ."

Late in September, 1987, more than two months before the intifada, a Western administrator of refugee programs in Gaza described his suspicions of a coming Palestinian revolt. For more than a year Gazan youths had been engaged in escalating civil disobedience, and Israeli troops in turn had escalated their responses.

"UNRWA is charged with maintaining the status quo in Gaza," the administrator said. "It spends about $40 million annually here, 70 percent on education, 20 percent on medical and 10 percent on welfare. With the way the Israelis are administering the occupied territories, all they are doing is building more and more sheer, spontaneous, homegrown Palestinian hatred towards them.

"Gaza is the worst of the occupied territories because of the high level of education attained by Palestinian children, but they cannot get any work other than low-paying manual labor inside Israel. Israel uses Gaza as a labor pool and has effectively stopped economic development in Gaza.

"We have had absolute frustration on the part of the young. They see no point in studying when all they are going to do is end up as laborers in Israel. The young are angry at their parents, who are resigned after so many lost wars and have sullenly accepted the status quo. They [Palestinian youths] pay little attention to the traditional Palestinian leaders such as the PLO, which they feel has never adequately fought for their rights.

They have instead formed their own groups of 16- and 17-year-olds who roam the streets and lead even younger kids in confrontation with the soldiers. If children throw stones, the soldiers open fire, even on kids as young as 8 and 9 years old. The soldiers have no riot training or gear, but they open fire with standard infantry weapons. The children are arrested and put into prison, and new ones spring up. These kids don't give a damn, and they don't give a damn about dying."

UNBRO, the agency providing physical assistance to 300,000 Cambodian refugees along the Thai-Cambodian border is another political creation. Its mandate does not include protecting the refugees; that is the responsibility of Thailand, which supplies the camps with armed guards. Earlier this year the special Thai camp guard unit, called Task Force 80 Rangers, was disbanded after severe international criticism of its eight-year record of criminal conduct against the refugees.

Protection in the international sense is supposed to be provided in the Thai camps by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) through its protection officers. Thailand, however, forbids international personnel to remain in the camps after 5 p.m. each day, and it is at night that predators of various stripes—Thai guards, bandit gangs and gangs of refugees themselves—feed on the misfortune of the inmates. Even during the day the ICRC protection officers, who are in reality unarmed humanitarian workers, are not equipped to stop trouble when it starts.

In July 1987, for example, ICRC representatives stood impotently as a drunken Task Force 80 guard murdered two refugees at mid-afternoon in Site 2, the largest of the border camps with 170,000 inmates. Site 2, like all the border camps, is a "closed" facility, ringed with barbed wire and guard towers. The refugees are, by Thai regulation, not allowed outside.

In practice, however, refugees often make short trips outside the camp. Depending on their moods, guards sometimes let refugees go through the fence to gather firewood or collect water, both of which are in short supply. Refugee traders also bribe their way in and out of the camp in the course of business.

At 1:45 p.m., July 31, 1987, two ICRC delegates inside Site 2 were summoned to its northern perimeter fence by a group of agitated refugees. A few yards outside the fence, a Task Force 80 guard had stopped a 30-year-old pregnant woman, who had left the camp in search of wood in a nearby forest. As the ICRC delegates and the refugees inside the fence watched in horror, the guard began beating the woman and then turned on her 32-year-old husband, an amputee on crutches.

"You must understand the brutality of some of the guards," a high-ranking European refugee official said in Bangkok, asking for anonymity for diplomatic reasons. "If they are as drunk as this one was, they are vicious, and if you try to intervene yourself, they will turn their guns on you and kill you with no thought about it. The witnesses to this incident [the ICRC delegates] did the only prudent thing they could do. They frantically tried to raise the guard commander on their walkie-talkies. Unfortunately, it happened to be the first day on the job for a new commander, he was in an introductory briefing meeting, and one of his aides had turned off his radio.

"Unable to find the Ranger commander, the people inside the fence stood wordlessly while the guard pointed his gun at the couple and forced them into the forest. Moments later some shots were fired. Two hours later the camp police were allowed to go into the forest to investigate, and within several minutes they brought two bodies out. The dead parents left three orphans. The guard simply disappeared, never to be seen again in the camp."

Leaving the Cambodians exposed to physical abuse and international neglect for so many years has stripped many inmates of all vestiges of civility, the official said. "The normal behavior of people should not automatically result in violence, but this population is under such stress that . . . just a negative word can set off an eruption of violence between spouses or neighbors."

Humanitarian agencies periodically and vainly have tried to convince the Thai government to move the camps deeper inside Thailand to protect refugees from military attacks. All eight are within a mile of the Cambodian border, within easy reach of Vietnamese artillery.

I found Pra Cheau, a 53-year former rice farmer, digging furiously in front of his thatch hut in Site 8, a camp controlled by the Khmer Rouge, one scorchingly hot Saturday morning last March. The hole he was digging had the dimensions of an oversized grave.

He had survived the U.S. Air Force carpet bombings of Cambodia in the early 1970s. He had lived through the butchery and famine of Pol Pot's murderous regime that killed more than 1 million Cambodians between 1975 and 1978. He had been chased by Vietnamese shot and shell for six years along the border. And still, after all those years of living on the precipice, he was on this day digging yet another bunker for the protection of himself, his wife and his 10 children.

"Now that it's the dry season," Pra said matter-of-factly, "it's time for the Vietnamese offensive to begin again. They have been shelling nearby every day. I'm afraid of the shelling, and my old bunker has caved in, so now I'm repairing it." True to his word, while I spoke with him, a battery of Vietnamese artillery opened up from somewhere across the border.

Pra and his family live in a typical thatch hut built on stilts. If faces a wide camp service road, giving him enough room for a small vegetable garden and his bunker.

The Khmer Rouge have opened Site 8 to the outside world, allowing UN officials and humanitarian workers to visit and work in the camp daily. They have even allowed some conventions of the outside world inside Site 8. Occasionally a radio can be heard playing in some refugee huts, an activity punishable by death when Pol Pot ran Cambodia.

Schools have opened, and Khmer Rouge children are attending classes for the first time since 1975, when Pol Pot banned formal education inside Cambodia, Small-scale commerce using money, also outlawed by Pol Pot, is alive in a small but active black market along the camp fences.

But Site 8 is the only Khmer Rouge camp outsiders can enter. UN officials and humanitarian workers are stopped at the gates of the other four by armed guards. Any supplies and materials, including medicines, are left at the gate. Any information, either offered or sought, is passed along at the gate. Nobody goes inside, and no outsider knows how UN supplies are distributed or what living conditions are inside.

Site 8 is believed to be mostly populated by expendable people for whom the Khmer Rouge have little use—the sick, the lame and the old. Few fighters are recruited from the place, though young men and women are sometimes pressed into service as porters carrying supplies into Cambodia.

Even though the Khmer Rouge present it as a model camp, it is a hellhole. Fear permeates most conversations, the sort of fear that keeps someone from saying something because he could be turned in by ever-present eavesdroppers.

As we talked, many of Pra Cheau's neighbors and curious passersby on the road stopped to listen. He seemed nervous as he watched the growing collection of people, frequently looking to see who was listening.

As residents of Site 8, Pra's family are considered Khmer Rouge loyalists. If the Khmer Rouge want him or his sons to go back to Cambodia to fight, he really won't have much choice in the matter. The Khmer Rouge routinely moves groups of camp residents out of Site 8 to its other closed border camps. What happens to them there is a mystery.

According to the camp workers, at least 50 percent, probably as much as 80 percent, of the residents in Site 8 have no allegiance whatsoever to the Khmer Rouge. They are, in effect, prisoners of the Khmer Rouge.

Every relief worker I spoke with who has worked with the Khmer Rouge is adamant that the Khmer Rouge have not substantially changed since they murdered more than a million of their countrymen. The camp workers believe that if the Vietnamese make good their promise to withdraw from Cambodia by 1990, the Khmer Rouge will seize power once again and the the bloodbath will start all over.

"It seems the Khmer Rouge are just as cruel and bloody as they ever were," said one of the few relief workers who has visited other Khmer Rouge camps. "My skin would crawl when I went into those camps. People were so quiet so robotlike. It's really a reign of terror. I'm convinced there has to be an international presence in all the border camps.

"The lack of active concern on the part of the U.S. and others to demand that nobody be forced to live with the Khmer Rouge is one of the most appalling chapters of this century's history. Informal surveys show that three-fourths of the Khmer Rouge civilians would go to another camp and another faction if given the chance. But the international community just doesn't have the will to liberate the civilian population from the Khmer Rouge. So we're condemning hundreds of thousands of people to an unspeakable fate, year after year."

No refugees in Site 8 would openly say they wished to leave, of course, for fear of reprisals. I asked Pra why he remained under Khmer Rouge control, probably a silly question to ask in front of so many people. Pra looked stunned, and real fear seemed to creep into his eyes as he remained silent for some moments.

Finally Pra blurted that he and his family fell under Khmer Rouge domination in early 1979 while hiding in the forests after the Vietnamese invasion. He said no more about it. At that, he said he is relatively happy in Site 8, especially since his children can attend school. He is quite proud of the fact that his 22-year-old son is now enrolled in primary school and learning to read and write, something he never did.

"I'm happy with this situation," he said "We get enough rice now, and we're freer than before. All my children are studying. I refused to allow the administration to let my son be taken into the army. If the enemy [Vietnam] is still in Cambodia, we would prefer to remain here in the camp.

"We have no choice, anyway. If we go back to Cambodia, we will get shot. If we try to go out of the camp here, the Thais will shoot us. So we just dig here, and we live here."

As dangerous as life can be in refugee camps, by far the most vulnerable populations in the world today are those beyond the reach of international humanitarian aid and protection. These are the "internally displaced," people displaced in their own counntries by war.

If they are lucky, the displaced fall under the control of benign forces, a socially conscientious government or a rebel group. If they are unlucky, they fall under control of malevolent forces who enslave, starve or murder them as Pol Pot did in Cambodia.

Unfortunately, in the two decades there have been dozens of Cambodias in which to one degree or another the human rights of millions of internally displaced people have been ignored. El Salvador has a million internally displaced people. At least 2 million are displaced inside Afghanistan. Another 5 million to 6 million are homeless or held in servitude inside Mozambique.

Nobody knows the number of displaced inside Ethiopia because the government won't let anybody count them. The most informed guess is at least 2 million.

If there are 13 million recognized refugees living across borders in foreign countries today, there are, by the most conservative estimates, at least twice that number living displaced in their own countries.

"In Mozambique alone," said Jean Pierre Hocke, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, "it is a 10-to-1 ratio of internally displaced people to registered refugees outside Mozambique. To multiply the number of world-wide refugees by two or three to arrive at the number of internally displaced is probably on the conservative side."

The internally displaced are a grave concern to humanitarian agencies because they often live under far worse conditions than refugees in camps. If governments or rebel groups choose to murder or starve their own people within their own borders, they can do it. Even if the rest of the world is aware that massive crimes are being committed in a given nation, present international law works against intervention.

"What can be done about this?" asked the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues in its 1986 report on refugees. "The international community is founded on the principle of state sovereignty, and governments can almost act as they please within their own borders. Their excesses may, regrettably, be condoned and even somewhat encouraged by their more powerful allies."

One example is El Salvador. "In order to receive official assistance," the commission's report said, "displaced Salvadorans must register with authorities and provide details of their personal background. Many refuse to do this, fearing that those details will be used by the military and death squads to identify and eliminate relative or fellow villagers. In response, the government considers that the . . . unregistered people are by definition 'subversive.' In some areas they have been bombed, strafed and mortared, sometimes while waiting to collect food supplies from nongovernment relief organizations. Safe havens run by the church and voluntary organizations are kept under surveillance. Any displaced person leaving the refuge runs the risk of arrest, torture and even death."

Calle Real is a camp of low-slung, dormitory-style buildings built by the Salvadoran Catholic Church nearly four years ago on a steep hillside half an hour's drive from San Salvador, the nation's capital. The camp, like many others near the city, was constructed to house the overflow of campesinos from San Salvador where the rural peasants, their homes and villages destroyed in the ongoing civil war, had flocked.

The camp is surrounded by a high fence, and its one gate is under constant guard. The 325 people living there last May seldom left the compound, though they are allowed to do so if they ask for permission. Outside the camp gate, they risk being stopped and detained by military patrols, whether they have written passes or not.

"Because we came from conflicted areas in the war zones," said a camp leader, "we are accused of being guerrillas or helping the guerrillas. If your home district is listed on a pass and a soldier stops you outside the camp, they become suspicious of you as soon as they look at it.

"Last November [1987] some women went outside the camp to do some shopping in San Salvador and were stopped by soldiers on the highway. They were kept blindfolded for 24 hours and taken to a cemetery, where they were held and questioned. If you want, you can go outside the camp and look for work, but five days later you might be arrested and detained because the military is suspicious of the village you came from. People fear going outside the camp, so most remain here all the time."

The Calle Real inmates make most of their own clothing and shoes and at least partially feed themselves with their own garden plots. The rest of their food is supplied by the Salvadoran Catholic Church and by international voluntary agencies. They are looked after by volunteer doctors and nurses, most of them American with strong church affiliations.

The mood in Calle Real is one of quiet defiance. If most of the inmates aren't rebels, their sympathies probably lie with the rebels. Every adult in the camp lost his or her home in government "sweeps" of the Salvadoran countryside. Nearly every adult has had at least one close relative killed in the civil war, usually by indiscriminate government aerial bombing or artillery fire in their native villages.

The utter savagery of civil war in a place like El Salvador stymies even the best relief organizations. The atmosphere is so politically charged that the mere act of providing the most basic aid to the internally displaced is interpreted as helping one side or the other. The Independent Commission's 1986 refugee report noted the cynical exploitation of Red Cross assistance by the Salvadoran government:

"In order to retain a good working relationship with the government, the ICRC has provided the authorities with details of its food deliveries to displaced people. In 1983 and 1984 this information was used by the military to organize attacks on the displaced people as they assembled to collect their rations. As a result, many were deterred from seeking further assistance, and the ICRC was forced to make a substantial cut in its feeding program. Not surprisingly, the ICRC has refused to take on the task of coordinating assistance to the displaced in El Salvador, believing that this would inevitably lead to conflict with the government or charges of collaboration from the guerrillas."

For internally displaced refugees, the most dreaded situations occur when governments or rebel groups completely draw curtains around their borders, keeping journalists and humanitarian workers away. The total denial of outside access to a country or a rebel-held territory is usually telling. It often means that the people in charge are busy committing atrocities on their own people.

It took years for the rest of the world to learn of and accept as fact the mayhem Pol Pot inflicted on his people in Cambodia. Hundreds of thousands of people in rebel-controlled areas of Mozambique today are being held in a state of slavery by threat of death. A similar orgy of violence wiped out more than half a million people in Uganda in the early 1980s. But the curtains were so tightly drawn by Uganda's dictator of that period, Milton Obote, that few people outside Uganda even today are aware that anything happened. In Uganda, however, the horror of Obote's reign is evoked simply with the mention of one place: the Luwero Triangle.

Between 1982 and 1985, Milton Obote's army very nearly succeeded in depopulating the Luwero Triangle of its 1.6 million people. Any males between the ages of 14 and 50 were automatically considered opposition. If they were caught with their families, all were summarily shot. Women, children and the elderly caught in the army sweeps were herded into government enclaves run like slave camps, with no medical attention and very little food provided. When starvation began to set in, the ICRC tried to run food convoys out to the camps, but Obote stopped them, claiming the food was intended for opposition guerrillas. Within three years, 300,000 persons in the Luwero Triangle were dead either by gunshot or by enforced starvation. Another million were held in government camps, had fled to neighboring provinces or had joined the guerrilla army fighting Obote's regime.

In early November, 1987, I spent a day touring the southern districts of Luwero Triangle, just an hour north of Kampala. My driver-interpreter, Joseph, is in his early 40s. He is, I soon learned, a national celebrity who once had been the first-string goalie for the All-Africa soccer team. In the wreckage of Uganda's economy, he now makes a living with his battered old car guiding journalists and foreign delegations in and around Kampala.

The Luwero Triangle is one of the lushest areas of Uganda, a country so blessed with rain and land so rich you half-expect a broomstick left out overnight to sprout branches. Under good leadership Uganda could have been the most prosperous nation in black Africa.

As we drove along the fractured pavement of roads that obviously hadn't seen repairs since the British left, Joseph talked about the everyday terror everybody felt during the Obote regime. He had lived through it in Kampala.

"For a long time everybody went to bed wearing all their clothes, even their shoes," he said. "You wanted to be prepared in case the soldiers came to your home. You had to be ready to move fast. You wouldn't dare play a radio or a tape in your house. If soldiers came by and heard music in a house, they'd figure, 'Aha! Somebody has tapes in there,' and they'd force their way in to rob you. You didn't even want to keep a light on. Many people just didn't bother to stay in their houses at night, sleeping instead outside in their gardens or yards."

We had left Kampala early in the morning, and in my haste I had forgotten a notebook with directions to some places in Luwero that a diplomat had recommended I try to see. Joseph couldn't recognize anything from my fuzzy recollections, so he turned into a small village churchyard to consult the local priest.

I noticed as we walked toward the rectory that the church was overflowing with 300 or 400 women dressed in their finest. It being a Thursday morning, I was curious about the gathering.

"Ah, said the genial priest of Kiziba Parish, Father John Baptist Kkonde, "you have chosen a very good day to visit us. Today is the first Thursday of the month, the day we have the meeting of the Widows Club."

Father Kkonde wanted me to stay and watch the meeting. I was worried about a gathering storm. The roads would soon be impassable and my day would be wasted if I did not see and photograph some of the evidence of Obote's brutality.

We left the priest standing in the churchyard, and two minutes later Joseph stopped the car. He walked across a gully, motioning me to follow him through a 6-foot-tall barrier of grass and reeds. On the other side, neatly stacked on a platform, were perhaps 500 skulls and the bones that once belonged to them.

Many of the skulls had bullet holes through the forehead, others were horribly crushed. There was no way of identifying the remains, so the bones were just stacked up as a memorial. They were, Joseph said, Father Kkonde's former parishioners, all that was left of the husbands, brothers, sons and daughters of the Widows Club I had just left.

We hurried back to the church. The widows were of all ages, but most seemed to be in their 50s, 60s and 70s. Father Kkonde said many of the village families were wiped out except for older women and very young orphans. Returning survivors were causing great problems.

Families with surviving males were doing all right, but the widows, especially the older ones left to care for orphaned grandchildren, could not cope with the heavy farm work needed to support their households.

"After Obote was defeated, I found my nephew's children, a 5-year old girl and a 6-year old boy," said Federesi Walana, 70. "My nephew and his wife had been killed, so I have taken them in. We eat what little we can cultivate, and I make a little working as a casual laborer, but it is not a very good life."

Erunesi Ddumba, a 50-year-old primary-school teacher, lost her husband, a daughter and two sons. "When the troops came," she said, "they looted the houses and forced the men to carry to the trucks tin roofs, foodstuffs and whatever they found valuable, which they sent to Kampala to sell in the markets. They killed most of the men who were captured. Some were shot, some were beaten to death.

"The rest of us they forced to go with them to camps they had set up. There was no food, no shelter, no medicines. There the soldiers forced us to become their wives. This life continued until July, 1985, when Obote was defeated. Now I am caring for the orphans of three of my children, two boys and four girls. We have no house, so I'm living in a small room I rent. We're able to grow some food, but it's a struggle. So much of it gets eaten at night by monkeys and pigs that grew wild during the war."

Widow Rose Luboyera, 60, lost most of her relatives during the war and now helps one surviving daughter, also a widow, take care of six children.

"They just destroyed everything," she said. "All of my relatives' houses are gone. All of my brothers and sisters have been killed. When the soldiers came, we prayed for our lives, begging them to take our property but to spare our lives. They mocked us with a song they made up, 'Take anything, but spare our lives.' "

The church was trying to help, Father Kkonde said, but because little outside aid had yet arrived in the Triangle, some of the widows were having extreme difficulties.

"That is why we organized this club," he said. "They just come together to talk about their problems and help each other with their grief."

As the meeting ended, the women lingered in the churchyard. Village children came racing over as word spread that Joseph, the soccer hero, was in town. The ladies of the club wanted me to photograph the gathering to commemorate the occasion. As they organized themselves, one of them began singing. Soon all had joined in, swaying rhythmically to the tune, serenading me as I tried to focus my camera through my tears. Joseph, as moved as I, hurriedly groped through the trunk of his car and tossed to the awestruck children two brand-new $45 soccer balls he could ill afford to give away.

Joseph had seen the evidence of the Luwero Triangle carnage many times. Still, as we resumed our journey, he seemed as stunned and repulsed as I was.

Two years after the carnage ended, the Luwero Triangle had become its own monument to inhumanity. Wherever there were more than half a dozen houses clustered together, there was the same macabre display along the road—a little platform piled with bleached skulls and bones. Each village and settlement we passed through was more than half-empty, a collection of roofless houses with gaping doorways and smashed windows.

"The empty houses will never be used again," Joseph said. "Their people are all gone, dead."

That is the legacy Milton Obote left Uganda, a benighted, fractured forlorn land.

Obote and his predecessor Amin were leaders of a sovereign state, and, as such, were courted by other nations wishing to gain favor and an "edge" that would serve specific geo-political interests. In the name of Uganda, these nations were given grants, loans and gifts of modern weapons—and advice on how to use them. To serve their own personal interests, Obote and Amin used the weapons to destroy nearly all that is productive in Uganda.

In all the years that Amin and Obote ruled, from 1971 to 1985, no roads were constructed, no schools were built, no hospitals opened, while millions of acres of once-productive farmland fell fallow. Even the game parks, once the finest in Africa, were emptied of game, suffering a ghoulish parallel to the fate of so many Ugandans. Thousands of elephants, hippo, rhinos and other wild game were machine-gunned to death by marauding soldiers for sheer sport. Surviving herds, sensing the danger, migrated to neighboring countries. Strangely, the animals, too, are now returning gradually to the spectacular parks.

In his 1982 book, "Ideology and Development in Africa," Crawford Young, a University of Wisconsin political scientist, referred to Uganda as a phenomenon of our time. "Regimes might not only fail to achieve development," he wrote, "but might transform the state itself into a predator upon society."

Certainly one can fit Amin and Obote's names into that description, and Pol Pot's, too. All three currently live comfortably in exile. There are others straining to get on the list, sovereign rulers and guerrilla leaders of "liberation" armies, predators feeding upon their own societies. That most sacrosanct international law, national sovereignty, lets the predators go about their work.

But the rest of the world, particularly the key industrial and military powers, often has had a hand in creating the Amins, Obotes and Pol Pots of our sanguinary age. It is a time of remarkable advancements in conventional weapons, enabling even illiterate bush soldiers to kill unprecedented numbers of people. It is a time when a trillion-dollar-a-year arms business supplies proxy was in the world's most impoverished, least-developed societies.

Milton Obote, Idi Amin and Pol Pot are perhaps not aberrations but the logical extension of an age that has seen 13 million people thrown into the miserable oblivion of refugee camps to rot in their own despair and grief for years and decades at a time.

Since World War II, persistent conflicts have spread refugees like malignancies in the body politic of all the world. The hatred, sorrow and misery engendered in these refugees only deepens the probability of more war, more instability, more global insecurity.

"We consider around here environmental impact statements," Sen. Edward Kennedy said during a 1987 congressional debate on U.S. funding of the rebel side in Angola's civil war. "Shouldn't we consider refugee impact statements as a result of our foreign-policy decisions? I think it would be good guidance to all administrators to consider the impact of our policies, particularly military aid, on the creation of refugees."●

THE SPECTER OF QUOTAS—DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ASIAN-AMERICAN STUDENTS IN HIGHER EDUCATION ADMISSIONS?

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the Washington Post editorialized on December 17, 1988 on a subject that is of increasing concern to me—the question of discrimination against Asian-American students in making admissions decisions by institutions of higher education. "The Specter of Quotas" properly outlines the issues present in the current debate about the refusal of some of the Nation's most prestigious colleges and universities to admit apparently qualified Chinese and Japanese, as well as other Asian-American students.

My colleague, Tom Daschle and I held a seminar during the congressional adjournment on this important issue and others affecting the Asian community. We were pleased to have the participation of then Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights William Bradford Reynolds, Dean Eric Widmer of Brown University, Assistant Vice President Alice Cox of the University of California, Grace Tsuang of the Yale University Law School and Henry Der of Chinese for Affirmative Action. The discussion was both scholarly and productive.

The Department of Education's current compliance review of several of the alleged offending institutions is critical. We must have the facts and the inquiry by the Department's Office for Civil Rights is the appropriate way to get those facts. I look forward to hearing the results of their inquiry.

Mr. President, I ask that the December 17, 1988 editorial for the Post, as well an editorial from the Boston Globe "Affirmative Action Crumbs" be printed in the RECORD at this point and I urge my colleagues to read both carefully.

The material follows:

[From the Boston Globe, Dec. 4, 1988]

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION CRUMBS

If for no other reason—and there probably is not another—Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds will be missed for his predictability. Reynolds, the head of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, is devoutly opposed to any affirmative action or preference program and will go to almost any length to justify his position.

This time Reynolds has decided to befriend Asian-Americans—an admirable position if Reynolds were not just using it as an excuse to attack programs to benefit blacks and Latinos. But that appears to be the case.

It is not that Reynolds or the Reagan administration cares so deeply about alleged discrimination against Asians by universities. It is that after eight years the administration's failure to declare the nation racially colorblind and derail affirmative action still galls.

Reynolds, who is resigning Friday, had what must have seemed a good forum for his last attack on affirmative action. He participated in a symposium on Asian-American university admissions sponsored by Sen. Tom Daschle (D-S.D.).

Reynolds said there is evidence that universities discriminate against Asians by giving racial preference to blacks and Latinos. Giving such preference, he said, is "the most likely explanation of the alleged discrimination against Asian-Americans."

The problem is not Reynolds' contention that some schools set quotas on admissions for Asian-Americans. It likely occurs, and such quotas are insupportable.

What is so cynical is the blatant attempt to set minorities against each other to fight over the leftover crumbs. As Grace Tsuang, a Yale Law School student, said, Asians are not against affirmative action programs for minorities. They want to be treated as fairly as whites in the college-application process—and that is not always the case.

Reynolds' departure will not be greeted with sadness in the civil rights community. It will be seen as an opportunity for President-elect Bush to show that his kinder, gentler America will include tougher enforcement of civil rights laws.

[From the Washington Post, Dec. 17, 1988]

THE SPECTER OF QUOTAS

With the approach of Jan. 1 comes high season again for applications and admissions to the most selective colleges—a process that always generates substantial amounts of anguish as a byproduct. This year one variety of that anguish is undergoing scrutiny by the Education Department. Faced with rising numbers of complaints from Asian students and parents that various colleges are trying to limit the numbers of Asians they accept—in effect, applying an unwritten quota—the department is reviewing the admissions processes of Harvard and the University of California at Los Angeles to see whether they comply with existing civil rights law. The process is likely to be long and complex.

The ethical question here is easy; obviously it is wrong, as well as illegal, to establish an admissions ceiling for a given group of students of a particular ethnic background. The idea that there is anything intrinsically "wrong" with a student body's being heavily Asian, if those students represent the best and ablest ones available, is similarly pernicious—not to mention bad for the institutions involved. What's complicated, given the traditionally secretive nature of college admissions decisions and the different kinds of factors that play into them—the student's needs, the university's, the society's—is figuring out whether that is going on. Some patterns are offered as evidence: at Harvard, for instance, average grades and scores of Asian students admitted are somewhat higher than the corresponding averages for whites, suggesting Asians face more rigorous criteria. In California, where many of the complaints originate, the situation is somewhat different: the University of California system is committed to accommodating a specified top percentage of all high school graduates in the state but, given overcrowding, doesn't promise they can go to the campus or enter the department of their choice. Asian groups say some desirable campuses—for instance, Berkeley and UCLA, both near large Asian communities—have shown suspicious drops in Asian acceptance rates in recent years.

In general, the defense offered by universities is that other factors besides ethnicity are at play, factors that may yield disproportionate results but are themselves not ethnically suspect. Harvard says certain types of avowedly preferential treatment, mainly that afforded to children of alumni and to athletes, just haven't been available to many Asians so far; admissions officers there also argue that this is the kind of preference universities are entitled to exercise, and that when corrected for these factors the gaps in achievement disappear. Some schools put heavy emphasis on extracurricular activities, and recently immigrated Asian families have tended not to encourage their children in that direction. The groups charging discrimination argue in essence that the new attention to such factors is not coincidental, that it reflects colleges' nervousness about rising numbers of successful Asian applicants. But it's been generally thought reasonable till now that colleges be permitted to seek "diversity" of interests and strengths among applicants.

The government's inquiry is a chance to examine all those perceptions afresh. Whether or not changes result (and any government litigation or compulsion would come only after many more procedural steps and chances for the universities to change themselves), such a reexamination every so often is useful; given the ugly nature of the suspicions and allegations that have been raised, it is also essential.●

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND HUMAN RESOURCES

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I submit the rules of the Committee on

Labor and Human Resources. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

In the event there are supplemental, minority, or additional views, an appropriate opportunity shall be given the Majority to examine the proposed text prior to filing or publication.

Rule 17.—(a) The Committee, or any subcommittee, may issue subpoenas, or hold hearings to take sworn testimony or hear subpoenaed witnesses, only if such investigative activity has been authorized by majority vote of the Committee.

(b) For the purpose of holding a hearing to take sworn testimony or hear subpoenaed witnesses, three members of the Committee or subcommittee shall constitute a quorum: provided, with the concurrence of the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee or subcommittee, a single member may hear subpoenaed witnesses or take sworn testimony.

(c) The Committee may, by a majority vote, delegate the authority to issue subpoenas to the Chairman of the Committee or a subcommittee, or to any member designated by such Chairman. Prior to the issuance of each subpoena, the ranking minority member of the Committee or subcommittee, and any other member so requesting, shall be notified regarding the identity of the person to whom it will be issued and the nature of the information sought and its relationship to the authorized investigative activity, except where the Chairman of the Committee or subcommittee, in consultation with the ranking minority member, determines that such notice would unduly impede the investigation. All information obtained pursuant to such investigative activity shall be made available as promptly as possible to each member of the Committee requesting same, or to any assistant to a member of the Committee designated by such member in writing, but the use of any such information is subject to restrictions imposed by the Rules of the Senate. Such information, to the extent that it is relevant to the investigation shall, if requested by a member, be summarized in writing as soon as practicable. Upon the request of any member, the Chairman of the Committee or subcommittee shall call an executive session to discuss such investigative activity or the issuance of any subpoena in connection therewith.

(d) Any witness summoned to testify at a hearing, or any witness giving sworn testimony, may be accompanied by counsel of his own choosing who shall be permitted, while the witness is testifying, to advise him of his legal rights.

(e) No confidential testimony taken or confidential material presented in an executive hearing, or any report of the proceedings of such an executive hearing, shall be made public, either in whole or in part or by way of summary, unless authorized by a majority of the members of the Committee or subcommittee.

Rule 18.—Presidential nominees shall submit a statement of their background and financial interests, including the financial interests of their spouse and children living in their household, on a form approved by the Committee which shall be sworn to as to its completeness and accuracy. The Committee form shall be in two parts—

(I) information relating to employment, education and background of the nominee relating to the position to which the individual is nominated, and which is to be made public; and,

(II) information relating to financial and other background of the nominee, to be made public when the Committee determines that such information bears directly on the nominee's qualifications to hold the position to which the individual is nominated.

Information relating to background and financial interests (Parts I and II) shall not be required of (a) candidates for appointment and promotion in the Public Health Service Corps; and (b) nominees for less than full-time appointments to councils, commissions or boards when the Committee determines that some or all of the information is not relevant to the nature of the position. Information relating to other background and financial interests (Part II) shall not be required of any nominee when the Committee determines that it is not relevant to the nature of the position.

Committee action on a nomination, including hearings or meetings to consider a motion to recommend confirmation, shall not be initiated until at least five days after the nominee submits the form required by this rule unless the Chairman, with the concurrence of the ranking minority member, waives this waiting period.

Rule 19.—Subject to statutory requirements imposed on the Committee with respect to procedure, the rules of the Committee may be changed, modified, amended or suspended at any time; provided, not less than a majority of the entire membership so determine at a regular meeting with due notice, or at a meeting specifically called for that purpose.

Rule 20.—In addition to the foregoing, the proceedings of the Committee shall be governed by the Standing Rules of the Senate and the provisions of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended.●

GOV. WILLIAM DONALD SCHAEFER ON THE FEDERAL-STATE PARTNERSHIP

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I want to share with my colleagues a letter Gov. William Donald Schaefer, of Maryland, recently sent to President George Bush to let him know, "one Governor's view of how States and the Federal Government can work together to truly build that 'kinder and gentler' Nation to help all our people."

In his letter, Governor Schaefer lets the President know that he looks forward to being a partner with him in working on the priorities of the people of Maryland and our Nation, including educating our children, protecting our environment, cleaning up the Chesapeake Bay, improving the infrastructure, and generally building a stronger America and improving our quality of life.

I urge my colleagues to review Governor Schaefer's letter. It is a comprehensive and insightful look at what is needed to reach the goal of a better life for all Americans and how the Federal-State partnership can accomplish that goal. I ask that Governor Schaefer's letter be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD along with the accompanying executive summary.

The material follows:

STATE OF MARYLAND,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, DC, January 30, 1989.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the United States,
The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I listened carefully to your inaugural speech and your pledge during the campaign for a "kinder and gentler nation." Though we are from different parties and our every step may not be completely in sync, I sense we are marching to the same tune: a better life for the people of America.

People are the backbone of our economy. Investment in people is the best way to make America strong and competitive in the world market.

I would like to be your partner in finding better ways to educate our children, to lift the indigent out of poverty, to stem the rising tide of homelessness, to build up America's infrastructure, to preserve and protect our environment, to rid our society of drugs, to make our streets safer and to provide quality health care for all Americans.

The dynamics of the federal-state relationship have changed over the last decade. The time has come to re-examine that relationship and create a new partnership.

The states have become engines for innovation in recent years. Many of their efforts have provided blueprints for successful national programs. For example, the new federal welfare law is for the most part patterned after state welfare-to-work programs. And innovative environmental projects on the state level have provided the inspiration for national efforts.

I can't think of a better example of how effective a joint federal-state partnership can be than the Chesapeake Bay clean-up program. Three states, the District of Columbia and five federal agencies have worked together to develop innovative programs to restore the Bay. The program has been so successful that it has become a model for the restoration of other estuaries around the country. If you have the opportunity, I hope you will join me on a tour of the Bay. I would like to show you first hand what can be accomplished when all levels of government join forces.

We want to build on these successes. Unfortunately, the success of the Bay clean-up program has been more the exception than the rule. We have been unable to forge an effective federal-state partnership in many other areas. While the states have bolstered their efforts, the federal government has drastically reduced its role in meeting many of the domestic needs of our country. Some cleaning and cutting of the federal budget is necessary to put our fiscal house in order. However, crippling programs that have a proven track record of helping people is counterproductive and shortsighted.

Many of the problems we face are national in scope. The states do not have the tools to solve them alone. They require a national solution. We need your assistance and cooperation. We need your leadership to reinvigorate the federal commitment to domestic programs.

I would like to share with you one Governor's view of how states and the federal government can work together to truly build that "kinder and gentler" nation to help all our people. I am enclosing some of my ideas about how we can achieve that goal. I would be happy to meet with appropriate officials of your administration to discuss these ideas in greater detail.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM DONALD SCHAEFER,
Governor.

[President George Bush, Jan. 30, 1989, Attachment No. 1]

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

HUMAN RESOURCES

The new Welfare Reform Law guarantees welfare recipients they can receive the job training, education and support services they need to get jobs. The federal government should act quickly to give us guidance on how to implement this new law and provide us with the funds promised.

We must not only devote our efforts to increasing the supply of affordable child care, but we must also take the extra step of ensuring the health and safety of our children.

EDUCATION AND TRAINING

I am glad you agree with me that full federal support of early intervention programs—such as Head Start and Chapter One—is the best way to solve the problems of teenage pregnancy, school dropouts and drug and alcohol abuse.

Your consistent support for student aid to help all Americans receive a college education is to be commended. To achieve our goal of improving access to college for all qualified students, we need full funding of federal grant and loan programs such as the Pell Grant program for financial assistance to low income students.

I applaud your commitment to providing full funding for the Job Training and Partnership Act (JTPA), which has been particularly effective in providing young and disadvantaged workers with the training they need to adapt to the work force.

DRUGS

I applaud your emphasis on education and treatment as a long-term approach to reducing the demand for drugs. We also must take steps to reduce supply. Increased federal interdiction efforts, and a consistent federal financial commitment to assisting state and local drug enforcement efforts are essential if we are to reduce the availability of drugs in our society.

HEALTH

There are approximately 37 million uninsured Americans who face financial ruin if they contract a serious illness or other medical emergency. The federal government and the private sector must coordinate their resources to ensure these Americans have access to adequate insurance protection.

The federal government should work with the insurance industry to expand the availability of private coverage for older Americans. At the same time, it is essential that government pay costs of long-term care for those older Americans who cannot afford care or cannot obtain private insurance.

I am pleased that you believe that the AIDS epidemic requires a national solution. I applaud your proposal to provide some $2 billion for AIDS research, education, and treatment programs.

HOUSING

I urge you to renew the federal government's historic commitment to providing decent, affordable housing for all Americans. I applaud your pledge to fully fund the McKinney Act to assist the homeless. I urge you to also support federal efforts to assure an adequate supply of affordable rental housing and to increase home ownership opportunities for middle and lower income Americans.

INFRASTRUCTURE

Money has already been set aside in trust funds for our highways, our transit systems, our airports and our waterways. We must ensure that sufficient monies are made available from these trust funds to meet the many unmet needs of our nation's infrastructure.

ENVIRONMENT

The Chesapeake Bay's disturbing trends are indicative of the problems facing many of our nation's coastal waters. We must work to stem the tide of coastal pollution problems by providing full funding for the wastewater construction program and providing the necessary funding to get the national non-point source pollution program off the ground.

Any program to solve our environmental problems must include a strategy to reduce acid rain. I am pleased to see your commitment to finding a solution to this problem and I urge you to press for legislation designed to address this problem in the 101st Congress.

I applaud your commitment to work to preserve our parks and our critical lands. I urge you to work to provide adequate resources to support the Land and Water Conservation Fund.

[President George Bush, Jan. 30, 1989, Attachment No. 2]

HUMAN RESOURCES

WELFARE REFORM

We need to bring more people into the economic process, through education, training and employment, to make America more competitive.

Our rapidly changing economy has produced new opportunities and many new jobs. But this welcome news on the jobs front is tempered by the fact that many Americans lack the required skills or need special assistance such as day care to enter the workforce.

For example, in Maryland we have been working for several years to provide welfare recipients the training and education skills they need to get off the welfare rolls and become self sufficient. Developing the productivity of every available worker has always been an important economic and social concern.

In my years as Mayor, I learned that people want to work. If we give them a chance, they'll gladly take a job to get off welfare. That's why we developed the OPTIONS program in Baltimore City. Through OPTIONS, we successfully provided employment and training opportunities for welfare recipients.

In addition, Project Independence, Maryland's nationally recognized welfare-to-work program, is designed to promote self sufficiency through private sector employment to reduce long-term poverty. I am proud that this model was adopted by the Congress last year when it passed legislation to fundamentally reform America's welfare system. The legislation guarantees welfare recipients they can receive the job training, education and support services they need to get jobs. I know the success we have had in Maryland will be realized throughout the rest of the country.

To help ensure this success, however, the federal government should act quickly to give us guidance on how to implement the new welfare reform law and provide us with the funds promised.

CHILD CARE

A related problem is the lack of affordable, quality day care to permit these individuals to accept employment. This is a problem not only for individuals entering the job market from the welfare rolls but also for the growing number of two wage earner families and single parent households.

The lack of good child care is a national problem. We must form a partnership between the federal government and the states to increase the amount of safe, affordable child care.

Consequently, I applaud your decision to devote so much attention and resources to the child care issue. But I believe your proposal does not go far enough. We must take the extra step to ensure the health and safety of children, and improve access to child care for low and middle income families.

To meet the need for safe, affordable child care in my own state, last year I developed a multifaceted child care initiative.

Our first responsibility is to maintain the health and safety of our children. Millions of working parents across America need the piece of mind that comes from knowing their child will be safe at day care. They are depending on us. That is why a cornerstone of my proposal was to continue Maryland's commitment to tough health and safety standards for day care facilities.

To stimulate growth in the private sector, the proposal combines licensing and regulation of child care, and provides money to businesses trying to set up child care facilities. This removed unnecessary red tape that prevented the expansion of child care, but kept our health and safety standards strong.

Child care is expensive, in my state it costs as much as $5,000 a year. In contrast, the median income for a household in Maryland is about $35,000. Poor and middle class families suffer most because they spend a greater portion of their income on day care.

As a result, I have made money available for subsidized child care, so that low and middle income families in Maryland can find care for their children.

EDUCATION AND TRAINING

The overhaul of our nation's welfare system is a major step in our attemps to reduce poverty and break the cycle of dependence. But we must also attack poverty and its causes on other fronts.

It is our children who are the real victims of poverty. One out of every five of our children is born into proverty. We must reverse this trend and provide opportunities for them.

Education is one of the keys to doing this. But too many poor children have no reliable access to quality education. We must plan for the next generation now. How America nurtures its children today will determine our prosperity tomorrow.

I am pleased to hear that you want to be known as the "Education President."

EARLY CHILDHOOD DEVELOPMENT

I am glad you agree with me that full federal support of early intervention programs—such as the Head Start Program and Chapter One—is the best way to solve the problems of teenage pregnancy, school dropouts, and drug and alcohol abuse. If we invest in people when they're young we will reap economic and social rewards when they're older. Moreover, we must serve the entire eligible population.

STUDENT AID

Your consistent support for student aid to help all Americans receive a college education is to be commended. As you know, not all families have the money to send their kids to college. Our goal must be to improve access to college for all qualified students. To achieve this, we need full funding of federal grant and loan programs such as the Pell Grant program for financial assistance to low income students.

JOB TRAINING

But a college diploma is not the only way to ensure that tomorrow's workers have the skills to enter the labor force. There are many people 16 to 24 years old who are high school dropouts and many more who have graduated from high school but lack the skills they need to get a job. They face bleak economic prospects unless we help them bridge the gap from school to work.

The Job Training and Partnership Act has been particularly effective in providing young and disadvantaged workers with the training they need to adapt to the work force. However, the JTPA, currently reaches only about five percent of the eligible population because not enough funding is made available. I applaud your commitment to providing full funding for this important program. Your strong support for full funding will be a great help in assuring that this program reaches the people it was designed to serve.

DRUGS AND CRIME—DRUG PREVENTION

I hope that moving these people programs along at full speed will have the long-range effect of reducing drug use in our society. But until that happens, we need to continue to vigorously enforce existing drug laws and make available treatment to drug addicts who seek help.

All of us want safe streets. Unfortunately, violence has escalated dramatically in recent years. Much of the crime in our cities and towns is tied to the problem of drugs.

I applaud your campaign pledge to work for the eradication of drugs in our society. However, as Governor I have too often seen the federal government renege on its promise to work in partnership with the states on drug treatment, prevention and enforcement. We will not solve this terrible problem overnight. What we need most is a consistent federal partner who will give us a long-term commitment to this effort.

A one-year program that encourages the states to increase enforcement personnel and treatment centers, but which is then abandoned the following year, leads to counterproductive dislocations in the states' efforts. In 1986, Congress passed a drug bill just before it adjourned for the elections. In 1987, funding under that program was slashed. In 1988, again just prior to an election. Congress passed another law giving the states additional federal help for treatment and enforcement. Now the most recent budget proposes total elimination of all law enforcement assistance to the states. We cannot fight the drug war every other year. I look to you to bring consistency to the federal/state effort to combat drug use and enforce the drug laws.

GUN CONTROL

The increasing violence attributable to drugs also calls for increased control of the weapons of violence. In Maryland we have a seven-day waiting period for the purchase of handguns. In addition, recently passed legislation, approved by the people of Maryland in a referendum last November, bans the sale of "Saturday Night Specials."

I believe that a federal waiting period would be a useful adjunct to these state efforts. Felons and insane individuals are barred from owning weapons by both state and federal law. But without a uniform waiting period to give police the opportunity to check on prospective purchasers, there is no way to assure that these individuals will not seek and purchase handguns from dealers unaware of their background. I urge you to carefully review federal gun laws to assess the usefulness of such a ban.

HEALTH—HELPING THE UNINSURED

Too often America's workers find themselves destitute because they can't afford to pay their hospital bills. All working Americans should have adequate health insurance. There are approximately 37 million uninsured Americans who face financial ruin if they contract a serious illness or other medical emergency.

In Maryland there are about 630,000 citizens with no health insurance, either public or private. Seventy-eight percent of all uninsured adults are employed and 70 percent work full time. Simply expanding the federal/state health program for the very poor will not solve their health care needs. We need to coordinate the abilities and resources of the government and the private sector. These hard-working Americans must have access to adequate insurance protection.

AIDS

I'm sure you agree that AIDS is the most serious public health threat America has faced in many years. Since 1981, more than 80,000 people have been diagnosed by the Centers for Disease Control as having AIDS. More than 46,000 people have already died. I am frustrated because as a Governor, I cannot solve this problem myself. I am pleased that you believe that the epidemic requires the federal government to develop a national solution. Moreover, I applaud your proposal to provide some $2 billion for AIDS research, education, and treatment programs.

LONG-TERM CARE

We also have to guarantee that the elderly have access to adequate health care. The elderly bear most of the costs of long-term care, by far the leading cause of catastrophic health care costs. In fact, the high costs of nursing home care and other long-term health care are so financially devastating that tens of thousands of older Americans are bankrupted each year by catastrophic illness. The federal government should work with the insurance industry to expand the availability of private coverage. At the same time, it is essential that the government pay the costs of long-term care for those older Americans who cannot afford care or cannot obtain private insurance.

HOUSING

Many of the same people who lack the resources to obtain adequate medical care also lack adequate shelter. In Maryland, as in many other states, we are facing a housing crisis, one that has grown more critical in recent years. The day-to-day problems we face include homelessness, lack of affordable rental housing for poor and moderate income citizens, and declining opportunities for home ownership. The decline in federal housing funds is directly related to the increase in homelessness and the other housing problems we face.

THE HOMELESS

Over my years as Mayor, and now as Governor, I have visited homeless shelters and soup kitchens. People there need our help. We can make a difference in their lives.

The McKinney Act to assist the homeless is an important initiative, although it is, of course, not a complete solution. We are making progress in Maryland in providing a full range of services to our homeless population—not just shelter, but counseling, job training and other programs. I applaud your commitment to full funding for this federal effort. It is essential to continued progress.

AFFORDABLE HOUSING AND HOME OWNERSHIP

I realize that as Governor I have a majority responsibility to assist local governments in developing innovative programs to provide adequate shelter for Marylanders. I have created an interagency approach to Maryland's housing problems with particular emphasis on preventing homelessness. We are committed to building 1,500 new housing units every year for the next five years to help prevent new families from becoming homeless and to provide safe shelter for those who have already lost their homes.

I am encouraged by your commitment to increase home ownership. The transfer of public housing units to tenant ownership, and programs to assist first time homebuyers, are the types of innovative programs that can help people.

I urge you to support federal housing programs that provide flexible federal resources in parnership with state and local funds. I urge you to reaffirm the federal government's historic commitment to decent, affordable housing, and to return it to active involvement in providing resources for housing.

INFRASTRUCTURE

When I was Mayor, we had to deepen the channels of the Baltimore harbor from 42 to 50 feet. This was important to enable bigger ships to enter the harbor, allowing us to export more coal and other commodities. Deeper channels help us compete with nations overseas. The State and federal governments each picked up half the tab. Without federal participation, we would not have been able to undertake this project. As Governor of Maryland, I believe the primary responsibility for attending to our infrastructure rests with state and local governments, and I am happy to carry a major share of the burden to help rebuild America. But the federal government should remain a reliable partner in providing resources.

ROADS, TRANSIT, PUBLIC WORKS

Our infrastructure is the bulwark of our economy. Unfortunately, overall spending on public works has declined in recent years. Daily news reports of crumbling bridges, congested highways and aging sewer systems are a constant reminder of how long we have neglected our nation's public works. If we don't attend to the maintenance and upgrading of these facilities now, the costs will become astronomical and future generations will be left to foot the bill. Our ability to compete in the global economy will be severely hampered if we don't act know.

I recognize that budget constraints make it difficult to spend federal money on costly infrastructure programs. But money has already been set aside in trust funds for our highways, our transit systems, our airports and our waterways. The money in these trust funds comes from targeted taxes and user fees that assure that those who use these facilities and services pay for them. We must ensure that sufficient monies are made available from these trust funds to meet the many unmet needs of our nation's infrastructure.

STATE FINANCING

In addition, I am concerned that recent changes in federal tax law have unnecessarily impeded state and local government financing arrangements for infrastructure improvements. The states must have the flexibility to use tax exempt bonds to finance public activities without unnecessarily costly federal regulations and record keeping requirements, or unwarranted Internal Revenue Service restrictions on the scope of our infrastructure investments.

FEDERAL LAND DISPOSAL

I also want to bring to your attention a matter that is of great importance to local governments. That is the disposition of federal land that will take place when military bases are closed pursuant to the new agreement on base closings. While it is appropriate for the federal government to determine which bases are to be closed, it is important that state and local governments be involved in the decisions on how land released by the federal government will be used. Transitional support and consultation by the federal government with state and local governments is essential if we are to minimize any adverse economic impact of such closings.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AND TRADE—RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Expanding the federal government's Research and Development effort can pay substantial dividends to the U.S. economy. My state is home to many of the federal governments most significant research centers, including the National Institutes of Health and the Goddard Space Flight Center. I know from personal experience the impact these facilities have on business. However, research is only half of the equation.

We need a renewed emphasis on development and production technology. The National Institute of Standards and Technology can play a major role in assisting American business to develop new products and new production methods and I believe its role should be enhanced.

America's future depends on development of our research today. I encourage you to work for added effort not only in space and health but in other fields that will assure America retains a competitive edge in the highly competitive and innovative world economy.

EXPORT PROMOTION

I have spoken a great deal about our competitive position in the world market. As a Governor, I have traveled abroad to try to expand markets for Maryland goods. I have also had the opportunity to meet with businessmen from around the state who have shared with me their concerns about the difficulties of entering many foreign markets.

In Maryland, as in many other states, we are working to increase our export markets in goods and services. We have developed the concept of a "one stop shop" where businesses can go for a full range of services from the state to assist them in developing international markets. The new trade law passed in the last Congress contains some provisions to help states assist small and medium sized businesses. More is needed.

I believe that we could better coordinate our efforts at the federal and state level to assist business, particular small business, to open up opportunities overseas. A coordinated approach between federal commercial attaches overseas and state efforts such as Maryland's could greatly enhance exports without increasing resources. My state is ready to work with you to help American industry enter these markets.

ENVIRONMENT

When I was Mayor of Baltimore, I worked to revitalize the City and meet the needs of people. I was concerned mostly about the problems in my backyard—such as the pollution problems of Baltimore harbor.

CHESAPEAKE BAY

Now as Governor, representing all Maryland, I realize that if the City of Baltimore is ever going to solve the harbor's pollution problems the entire state must help. And if the Chesapeake Bay, our nation's largest and most productive estuary, is going to be restored, the federal government must lend a hand. In my efforts to meet this challenge, I have learned how important the Bay is to the economy of the region and to the quality of life of all our citizens.

We have come far enough in our efforts to clean up the Bay to realize just what mammoth work lies ahead. It will take tremendous resolve and ingenuity to reverse the Bay's decline.

If the Bay clean-up program momentum is sustained, it surely will be one of the most spectacular environmental success stories of our time. If it falls by the wayside, it will surely be one of the most heart-breaking and unforgivable failures.

The Bay's problems are complicated. They do not lend themselves to simple solutions. Hard choices will have to be made among competing interests, and literally hundreds of millions of dollars will have to be poured into the clean-up efforts.

The states bordering the Bay are willing to shoulder most of the burden. But we do not have all the tools to handle the job alone. Environmental problems such as these cut across state borders. They require a national solution.

COASTAL WATERS

The Bay's disturbing trends are indicative of the problems facing many of our nation's coastal waters. We must work to stem the tide of coastal pollution problems before we reach the point of no return.

At the very least, the federal government should meet its obligation to fully fund the wastewater construction program and it should provide the necessary funding to get the national non-point source pollution program off the ground.

But much more needs to be done if we are going to meet our goal of obtaining fishable and swimmable waters. We must explore new ways to reduce pollution. Funding for programs designed to remove nutrients, to eliminate toxics, and to combat diseases that are hurting important wildlife populations should be a top priority.

CLEAN AIR

Any program to solve our environmental problems must include a strategy to reduce acid rain. Acid rain poses a threat to our forests, our wildlife and our fish. It is also responsible for one-fifth of the nutrient pollution entering the Chesapeake Bay. I am pleased to see your commitment to finding a solution to this problem and I urge you to press for legislation designed to address this problem in the 101st Congress.

Maryland and 40 other states have areas that do not meet federal clean air standards. Legislation was introduced in the last Congress to extend the deadline for compliance with the Clean Air Act. In exchange for the extension, states and businesses will face stiffer control measures. I urge you to support legislation that extends the ozone attainment deadline.

LAND PRESERVATION

I applaud your commitment to an outdoor ethic and your pledge to work to preserve our parks and our critical lands. In Maryland, we are setting aside 10 percent of the land along the Bay for public access and to preserve our heritage. Money will come from a variety of sources, but the Land and Water Conservation Fund is an important ingredient in this effort. I urge you to work to provide adequate resources to support the Land and Water Conservation Act.

I am encouraged by your pledge to make environment a top priority. I look forward to working with you to preserve and protect our abundant natural resources, not only for our children but for our children's children.

AGRICULTURE

As we work to improve our natural resources, we should not forget one of our most valuable resources—agriculture. Agriculture is Maryland's number one business. The success of our farmers is key to the progress of my state. We look forward to working with you and our Congressional representatives in crafting a farm bill that will help all of our nation's farmers. However, there is one recruiting problem that needs particular close attention now.

In Maryland, as in many other parts of the country, we have been experiencing severe droughts. The damage caused by last year's drought is a daunting reminder of how devastating and costly such a natural disaster can be for American farmers and for the nation as a whole. The crop insurance program is one important program designed to help farmers recoup the losses incurred in situations like this. However, it does not contain the necessary incentives to encourage farmers to participate. Participation among farmers in Maryland and in many other states is very low. I would like to work with you to change this program so that all farmers may benefit in time of need.●

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, on January 31, I introduced S. 326, a bill to prohibit the conversion of excess campaign contributions to personal use. Although the Senate has instituted a standing rule to prohibit the personal use by any Member or former Member, the rule does not carry the full force of the law. The statute governing this issue allows Members who were in office before January 8, 1980, to take the campaign contributions and use at will. S. 326 removes this grandfather clause and prohibits any personal use of campaign contributions by any candidate.

I would like to submit for the RECORD two editorials which have appeared in Alabama newspapers evidencing public support for this measure. I hope my colleagues will join me in this attempt to close one of the loopholes in our campaign finance law.

I ask that the editorials be printed in the RECORD.

The editorials follow:

[From the Montgomery Advertiser, Feb. 6, 1989]

ROCKING CHAIR FUNDS

One of the beneficial results of the flap over whether Congress will get a 50 percent pay raise is proposed legislation to close an eight-year-old campaign finance loophole.

Part of the price of passing a 1980 campaign bill was a provision which allows members of Congress who were in office before 1980 to convert their campaign warchests to their personal use after they leave office, a sort of "rocking chair fund" to help the lawmakers in retirement.

In short, if a senator or House member elected prior to 1980 wants to retire, there is nothing in the law to keep him or her from walking away from Washington with whatever campaign contributions are on hand. Some House members have in excess of $1 million. Some senators, whose campaigns are more expensive, hold more than $2 million.

Alabama got an example of the loophole when the late U.S. Rep. Bill Nichols, D-Sylacauga, died in December. His campaign account held more than $400,000. Staff members say the bulk of that money will be transferred to the congressman's widow and distributed as part of his estate.

Three members of the Alabama House delegation, including U.S. Rep. Bill Dickinson, R-Montgomery, are eligible for the loophole windfall. Dickinson has $435,996, U.S. Rep. Ronnie Flippo, D-Florence, has socked away $811,380, and U.S. Rep. Tom Bevill, D-Jasper, has $515,438.

Rules of the U.S. Senate forbid personal use of campaign funds, but whether the rule could apply to former senators is uncertain. Both of Alabama's senators could take advantage of the loophole. U.S. Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Tuscumbia, could take $488,911 with him if he retired. U.S. Sen. Richard Shelby, D-Tuscaloosa, has $382,506 in his campaign account.

So Sen. Shelby deserves special commendation for introducing legislation which would bar all eligible members of Congress from taking advantage of the potentially lucrative loophole when they leave office.

At stake is a large amount of money. The 190 House members and 73 senators who were in office before 1980 have reported campaign contributions on hand of more than $61 million. That's an average of $224,000 per House member and $341,000 per Senate member.

Sen. Shelby is absolutely correct when he says that donors do not contribute to a candidate in an attempt to enrich the candidate, but rather to help a specific campaign. To turn campaign contributions into personal income invites a perversion of the process which eventually will allow the wealthy to purchase the best Congress money can buy.

Congress can end the embarrassment by passing the legislation which Sen. Shelby has introduced. It should do so quickly.

[From the Alabama Journal, Feb. 7, 1989]

NOT FOR RETIREMENT

The citizen who gives money to a member of Congress doubtless intends it as a campaign contribution, not a retirement present. Yet many members of Congress have amassed substantial campaign funds which current regulations allow them to keep when they leave office and use as they wish. That's a rotten practice that ought to be stopped.

To his considerable credit, Alabama Sen. Richard Shelby has introduced legislation to end these so-called "rocking chair funds." This is no freebie for Sen. Shelby, no easy-to-offer bill that doesn't touch him. He has $382,506 in his campaign account that he could take with him upon leaving Congress.

Some congressmen are prohibited from using campaign funds for personal purposes, but all should be. The current regulations contain an unconscionable "grandfather clause" that exempts those who were in office on Jan. 8, 1980. Sen. Shelby, for example, was a member of the House of Representatives at that time. Seventy-two other senators and 190 representatives are covered by this indefensible exemption.

A great deal of money is involved here, so much that one must wonder how Sen. Shelby's bill will fare. Affected members may be inclined to vote with their bank books instead of with a clear view of what is right. It is estimated that the now-exempt House members alone have a total of $39.2 million in campaign funds.

Four of Sen. Shelby's Alabama colleagues are covered under the grandfather clause and all have hefty sums banked. Sen. Howell Heflin had $488,911 in his account at last report. Rep. Bill Dickinson of Montgomery had $435,996, Rep. Tom Bevill of Jasper had $515,438 and Rep. Ronnie Flippo of Florence had a whopping $811,380.

In addition, the late Rep. Bill Nichols of Sylacauga had $467,548 in campaign funds when he died in December. Under the current regulations, that money goes to his estate.

"When donors contribute to a political candidate, they do so with the understanding that their money will be used to further the candidate's campaign, not to augment his or her personal wealth," Sen. Shelby said. "Public office is a trusteeship and is not a means to accrue personal wealth." We couldn't agree more.

The grandfather clause allows veteran congressmen with key committee seats and other positions of influence—the type of congressmen who seldom faces serious opposition and so has little need for a huge campaign fund—to simply bank most of their contributions in anticipation of retirement. These contributions become a form of personal financial security, even though that was never the intent of the campaign finance laws.

Sen. Shelby's commendable bill would end this disreputable practice. Congress will disgrace itself if it fails to pass it.●

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

LEGISLATION TO EXPAND WOMEN'S ROLE IN U.S. DEVELOPMENT EFFORTS

HON. MICKEY LELAND
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, 15 years ago, Congress passed into law the Percy amendment to the Foreign Assistance Authorization Act. That amendment directed the Agency for International Development [AID] to assist developing nations to "integrate women into their national economies." In those past 15 years, much has been said and written about integrating women into development, but far too little has been done.

Congress did, however, make important progress last year in advancing the intent of the Percy amendment. The fiscal year 1989 foreign assistance appropriations legislation incorporated critical sections of H.R. 4049, both providing additional funding for women in development programs, and, more importantly, instructing AID to enhance the involvement of women in the design and implementation of development assistance programs and projects.

Today Representatives SCHROEDER, SNOWE, and I are reintroducing the Women in Development [WID] Act to permanently secure the incorporation of strong and clear guidelines on the women in development policies of the U.S. Government. Until women are incorporated fully in our development programs—from participation in the design, implementation and management of programs to the receiving of assistance from those programs—our efforts at promoting development will continue to be inequitable and ineffective in reaching those who most need our assistance.

Several facts about the role of women in the Third World serve to highlight their importance to the development process. Women are the poorest, hardest-working, least educated and most unhealthy people in the developing world. They perform two-thirds of the world's work, receive one-tenth of its income and own only one one-hundredth of its property. Studies have shown that rural women work, on average, 2 to 4 hours more per day than their male counterparts. Worldwide, one-third of all households are headed by women; in Latin America the figure is as high as 50 percent.

Women are the food producers of the developing world. In Africa, women are responsible for 80 to 90 percent of the food grown for home consumption. Women are also major income earners; their earnings provide for the most basic needs of their families: food, schooling, and medicines.

Furthermore, women are vital to the informal economy, the 30 to 60 percent of economic activity and employment which often is not officially recognized. In the Philippines, for example, four-fifths of the street food vendors are women. Most experts believe that the informal sector will be the greatest source of new employment in the coming decades.

Despite realities, women continue to be under-represented in or excluded from development programs. A study of U.N. development assistance efforts showed that in 1982, only 1 percent of all U.N. funds spent for increasing agriculture production were allocated to women.

In a time of reduced foreign aid budgets, we cannot afford to neglect women's role in the development process. AID studies have shown that the failure to integrate women has resulted in failed projects and wasted resources. It is time to include women fully in our assistance programs and to use our foreign aid dollars more wisely.

The legislation we are introducing today calls upon the Administrator of AID to make women participants in the planning, design, implementation, and evaluation of all development activities as well as recipients of assistance through those activities. The legislation directs AID to include women in proportion to their traditional participation in the designated activity or their proportion of the targeted population to the extent possible. These participation targets are not to serve as strict quotas in all of AID's activities, but as benchmarks for the Agency. The legislation calls for the full integration of women by 1995, but allowances are made for the possibility of serious obstacles. Should AID find that it is impossible to meet the benchmarks, they must identify the obstacles and what steps they propose to overcome them in project or program documents.

This bill identifies several other steps that the Agency must take. Wherever possible, economic data must be broken down by gender. Project evaluations must include an assessment of how effectively the project integrated women into the development process. Personnel evaluations must look at the same criteria at the staff level. AID must increase the number of, and the level of responsibility of, women in Washington and in mission-based professional positions in the Agency. AID's training programs must have as many women as men enrolled by 1993. Finally, AID will be required to establish a task force with representatives from its WID Office and from each of the regional and technical bureaus to oversee the implementation of this legislation, to assist mission staff in overcoming the obstacles to integrating women and to establish criteria to measure the Agency's performance in incorporating women in development activities.

In order to fund these increased activities, funding for the WID Office will be changed from the "up to $10 million" earmark that is current law to "not less than $10 million, not less than $8 million of which shall be extended as matching funds to support the efforts of the Agency's field missions to integrate women into their programs." This will allow the Office to provide greater levels of technical assistance to the missions and to maintain a larger staff, while continuing to carry out their current activities.

The legislation also provides modest funding for two U.N. organizations. UNIFEM would be authorized to receive $4 million to carry out its efforts. UNIFEM has been a small but very effective voice working to incorporate women into every aspect of the U.N.'s development programs. The bill also calls for $1 million for INSTRAW, the U.N.'s organization which carries out research on women essential to the efforts of the U.N. and many other development organizations to incorporate women. These modest contributions will have enormous impact when they are used to leverage funds from the UNDP's budget.

The sponsors of the Women in Development Act urge your support of this bill. If we want to spend our foreign aid dollars fairly and wisely, we must ensure that women are fully integrated as participants and recipients of development assistance. This bill is a clear and determined step in that direction. It deserves your support.

The legislation to promote the integration of women in development process in developing countries is reprinted for your information as follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Women in Development Act of 1989."

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds as follows:

(1) Women in developing countries play multiple and vital roles in economic development, but in many development activities their roles have been overlooked, ignored, or displaced.

(2) The full participation of women in, and the full contribution of women to, the development process are essential to achieving growth, a more equitable distribution of resources and services to meet basic needs, a higher quality of life in developing countries, and sustainable development.

(3) In developing countries, the income earned by women is crucial to their individual self-reliance, to raising the standard of living of their families, to the overall development of the community and society, and to strengthening national economies.

(4) Achievement of development goals is being retarded by the failure to effectively integrate women in development activities.

(5) Research shows that when women's participation in development activities is high, project success and sustainability tend to be high; when participation is low, project success and sustainability tend to be moderate or low. Therefore, the cost-effectiveness and efficiency of United States bilateral and multilateral development assistance can be increased by improving the integration of women in all stages of the development process.

(6) In food production, low-resource women farmers provide the critical labor and offer the best hope for increasing food supplies in many developing countries. However, their contributions have been limited by a lack of access to appropriate extension, credit, and marketing services.

(7) Women are a major source of entrepreneurial talent in the informal sectors of developing countries and, with access to training, credit, and other forms of assistance, are expected to account for much of the growth in the private sector employment.

(8) United States and indigenous private and voluntary organizations have demonstrated effectiveness in strengthening women's organizations in developing countries through the development of managerial and analytical capabilities.

(9) The Agency for International Development states that its policy is that there be full involvement of women as participants and beneficiaries in all of the projects, institutions, and development processes supported by the Agency. In actual practice, the integration of women has traditionally received low priority in relation to other mandates. Although the Agency for International Development issued a policy paper in 1982 which provided guidelines for increasing the participation of women in the development process, insufficient steps have been taken to implement those guidelines. During 1988, however, the Agency did make greater efforts to increase the involvement of women in development projects, which is noted with appreciation.

(10) There are no strong accountability or management mechanisms within the Agency for International Development to ensure that the women in development policy is in fact being implemented.

(11) Training the staff of the Agency for International Development, the staff of universities participating in programs under title XII of chapter 2 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, the staff of other agencies of the United States Government, and contractors involved in carrying out programs administered by the Agency, to recognize the essential economic roles of women and to develop strategies to incorporate women in programs, projects, and institutions supported by the Agency is a necessary precondition for improved integration of women in the Agency's development activities.

(12) Training programs held in host countries or the United States for project participants are important components of most development projects and reflect the development objectives and strategies of the Agency for International Development. The low representation of women in these training programs impedes their integration in development, limits performance of their current and future roles, and constrains overall economic development.

(13) Among United Nations organizations, the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) have demonstrated that greater support for the productive activities of women can improve the well-being of communities and societies. The United Nations Development Fund for Women plays a unique and valuable role by developing and replicating projects and ensuring the appropriate involvement of women in mainstream development activities. The International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women serves as a catalytic force within the United Nations to ensure that research and data collection of all United Nations agencies identify women's economic and social roles.

(14) Research has established the value of fully integrating women and the poor in the development process, and especially in designing, implementing, and evaluating development projects. Such agencies as the Inter-American Foundation, the African Development Foundation, and the International Fund for Agricultural Development have carried out programs which have achieved a reasonable measure of success in carrying out these objectives.

SEC. 3. STEPS TO BE TAKEN BY THE AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT.

(a) STRENGTHENING WOMEN IN DEVELOPMENT POLICY.—The Administrator of the Agency for International Development shall take the following steps to strengthen the Agency's women in development policy:

(1) Ensure that the Agency seeks to incorporate the active participation of local women and local women's organizations in its development activities (including their involvement in the planning, design, implementation, management, monitoring, and evaluation of the activities) in approximate proportion to their traditional participation in the targeted activities or their proportion of the population, whichever is higher.

(2) Instruct Agency staff and contractors to collect sex-disaggregated data for, and include such data in, every Country Development Strategy Statement, Project Identification Document, Project Paper, Program Assistance Identification Proposal, Program Assistance Approval Document, and Policy Inventory, as well as all relevant research projects.

(3) Instruct Agency staff and contractors to seek to ensure that country strategies, projects, and programs are designed so that the percentage of women who receive assistance is in approximate proportion to either their traditional participation in the targeted activities or their proportion of the population, whichever is higher.

(4) Instruct Agency staff and contractors that, if a country strategy, program, or project is not designed so that assistance will reach women in the proportion specified in paragraph (3), they must identify in the appropriate document referred to in paragraph (2)—

(A) what the obstacles are to achieving that goal;

(B) what steps are being taken to remove or overcome those obstacles;

(C) to the extent that steps are not being taken to remove or overcome those obstacles, why they are not being taken.

(5) Ensure that project and program evaluations include an assessment of the extent to which the project integrates women in the development process and of the impact of the project or program on women, including both positive and negative implications of the project or program in enhancing the self-reliance of women and improving their incomes.

(6) Instruct Agency staff and contractors to ensure that country strategies, projects, and programs identify and take advantage of opportunities to assist women in activities that are of critical significance to their self-reliance and development, including (A) appropriate extension and related services to low-resource women who are engaged in subsistence or cash crop production, and (B) training, technical assistance, credit, and other services to strengthen the managerial skills and capabilities of women, with special attention to women's institutions and women entrepreneurs.

(7) Develop and implement a plan to provide training for all Washington and mission-based professional staff that provides guidance on strategies for achieving the goal of incorporating women in the planning, design, implementation, management, and evaluation of the Agency's development activities; and require universities participating in programs under title XII of chapter 2 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, other agencies of the United States Government, and contractors involved in carrying out programs administered by the Agency to develop and implement plans to achieve that goal.

(8) Increase the number of, and the level of responsibility assigned to, women who are in Washington and in mission-based professional positions in the Agency or who are employed by Agency contractors; and encourages organizations involved in carrying out programs administered by the Agency to do the same.

(10) In the case of education or training provided in the host country or the United States for project participants, increase training opportunities for women and make every necessary provision for addressing the specific needs of women.

(11) Ensure that the necessary steps are taken so that each of the preceding paragraphs of this subsection will be fully implemented as soon as possible, but no later than by the end of fiscal year 1995, except that the following targets shall be set for implementing paragraph (10): a minimum of 30 percent of the trainees should be women by the year 1991, a minimum of 40 percent of the trainees should be women by the year 1992, and a minimum of 50 percent of the trainees should be women by the year 1993, with approximately equal levels in each region.

(12) Establish within the Agency a task force on women in development. The task force shall consist of the director of the Women in Development office and senior-level staff from each of the regional and technical bureaus who are in decision-making positions regarding the integration of women in the operations of their bureau. The task force shall be responsible for—stitutionalize learning within the Agency on women in development activities.

(b) FUNDING FOR WOMEN IN DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITIES.—Section 113(b)(1) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 is amended—

(1) by striking out "Up to $10,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "Not less than $10,000,000";

(2) by inserting "and section 667(a)" after "this chapter"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following: "Beginning in fiscal year 1990, not less than $8,000,000 of the funds used each fiscal year pursuant to this subsection shall be made available as matching funds to support activities designed to better integrate women into the programs of the missions of the agency primarily responsible for administering this part.".

SOCIAL SECURITY EARNINGS LIMITATION

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to repeal the outside earnings limitation which is currently imposed on Social Security recipients.

As many of my colleagues are aware, the American work force is experiencing major demographic changes. The elderly are the fastest growing age group in the U.S. population. According to the Census Bureau, there are more than 30 million persons in the United States aged 65 and older. This number will continue to rise at a rate of 1.7 percent a year over the next 23 years. As a result, interest has grown for adopting measures which will eliminate penalties on senior citizens who choose to remain in the work force. One of these penalties is the Social Security earnings limitation.

Under current law, Social Security recipients between the ages of 65 and 69 are threatened with a reduction in Social Security benefits if their outside income exceeds $8,400. For those under 65, the earnings limitation is $6,120. For every $2 earned in excess of these limits, Social Security benefits are reduced by $1.

It makes very little sense to penalize Social Security recipients in this fashion. Social Security is a retirement program, not a welfare program. To deny full benefits to those who have paid into the system throughout their working careers is little more than a breach of contract.

The earnings limitation serves as a disincentive to work. In 1986, more than 1 million people had their paychecks reduced because of the earnings limitation, while yet another million lost their benefits entirely.

Many Americans are choosing to work longer, contributing not only to their own economic well-being, but that of the entire economy. The American economy will surely benefit not only from their contribution of labor, but also from their vast experience. The earnings limitation is counterproductive and outdated; it should be eliminated.

LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. LOUISE M. SLAUGHTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I want to include in the RECORD a statement I sent to the Rochester, NY Lithuanian-American community on their commemoration of Lithuanian Independence Day, February 16. I am extremely pleased to have a Lithuanian-American community in my district and am proud to have the opportunity to represent Lithuanian-Americans. They have a unique contribution to make to our society and a past full of heroic figures and dramatic events.

LETTER TO THE ROCHESTER, NY LITHUANIAN-AMERICAN COMMUNITY

Lithuania has a long, proud and eventful history. As early as 1009 Lithuania was an independent principality. For hundreds of years Lithuania played a major role in the politics and culture of Europe. Unfortunately, powerful external enemies divided Lithuanians between themselves for over a hundred years beginning in 1795. This difficult period was marked by numerous uprisings on the part of patriotic Lithuanians who wished to throw off the yoke of foreign rulers. The Lithuanian language was suppressed and persistent attempts to eradicate the unique Lithuanian culture were made.

The perseverance and courage of the Lithuanian people were not in vain. After 120 years of foreign rule, Lithuania declared its independence on February 16, 1918. During the period between the First and Second World Wars, Lithuania and the two other Baltic States maintained their independence bordered by unfriendly neighbors. The Nazi-Soviet pact of 1939 signaled the end of independence for Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia. In June, 1940, Soviet armies occupied Lithuania.

The United States never recognized this illegal occupation and to this day the status of these three nations has been a bone of contention between the Soviet Union and the United States. I fully support the policy we have followed. An invasion as blatantly illegal as that of the Soviet Union's into the Baltic States must never be legitimized.

Despite years of Soviet rule and the adoption of the initiative stifling central planning system, the events of the last 18 months have proven that the peoples of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia have not lost their independent spirits. The wholehearted adoption of reform measures and the calls for autonomy and even independence from the controls of Moscow have been a shining example to all those who love freedom and self-determination.

February 16 symbolizes the undying spirit of the Lithuanian people and their hopes for future independence. It helps to keep alive the spirit of resistance to oppression that is still felt by Lithuanians in their native land. I am sorry I cannot be with you today in person, but I'm with you in spirit. We must not forget the people of Lithuania or of Estonia and Latvia.

UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, just last month Ukrainian-Americans commemorated the 71st anniversary of the Declaration of Ukrainian Independence and the 70th anniversary of the unification of the Western Ukrainian National Republic with the Ukrainian National Republic. While this quest for self-determination did not survive, the Ukrainian quest for freedom like all other such struggles is unquenchable and has endured to the era in which we live. Seventy years of repressive government including Stalinist famine and targeted persecution of Ukrainian intellectuals have not stemmed the desire for freedom within the hearts of the Ukrainian people.

As evidence of this continuing struggle for human dignity the world has witnessed an outpouring by the Ukrainian people demanding greater autonomy, cultural freedom, civil liberties, and press freedom. Despite this positive activity there is also the tragic and continuing reality of repression directed against those in the forefront of the freedom struggle.

Nevertheless, I am confident that this struggle, part of the tapestry of a worldwide struggle for freedom will go on until justice is attained. The rights for which the Ukrainian people are striving are included in a number of international treaties including the concluding document of the Helsinki Final Act.

Mr. Speaker, I want to add my voice to those of my colleagues in support of the efforts of the Ukrainian people for greater autonomy, cultural freedom, civil liberties, and press freedom.

HINDSIGHT ON GRENADA

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I include the text of a letter distributed to all Members of the House on January 31 concerning the intervention by the United States in Grenada:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, January 31, 1989.

HINDSIGHT ON GRENADA

DEAR COLLEAGUE: The success of Grenadan communist propaganda apparently has survived the downfall of its authors. Earlier this month Cong. George Crockett circulated by "Dear Colleague" letter an article that bears this out. Promoting some academically fashionable ideas that can only thrive in the half-light of hindsight, the authors of this article would have us believe some incredible things: that "the Soviet Union was wary of involvement in Grenada and unresponsive to Grenadan appeals for support"; that the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States' invitation to the US to intervene in Grenada was "window dressing" (as if these little nations really had had nothing to fear from Grenada); that little Grenada could in no way ever harm the big United States; and that American medical students on Grenada had little to fear, the US military intervention was a fiasco, and that US economic aid since the intervention has done little for Grenada.

There is so much to criticize about this type of "learned" hindsight that it is hard to know where to start. It is clearly hindsight, however, to state so categorically that American students were never in danger (when Grenadans were being executed in the street); it is hindsight to say that US military actions were inadequately coordinated (without having to experience the many challenges faced by military leadership in such situations); and it is easy to portray present Grenadan economic difficulties out of the context of the overall economic problems of the region and by ignoring the average 5% annual growth in Grenada since the 1983 intervention. Hindsight is equally flawed, however, when it is used to support academic suppositions that there was little Soviet involvement in Grenada and that the US and Grenada's neighbors had little to fear from its activities.

The Soviet leadership has never overlooked any opportunities for expansion. The facts show that the Grenadan communists were just as willing to provide such an opportunity to the Soviets. While the Grenadan Marxists portrayed themselves as populist reformers for the consumption of the American media and liberal American politicians, their communications among themselves showed a clearly different face. They had a clear desire to place their nation at the service of Soviet military expansion. Here are the words of the Grenadan Ambassador to the USSR, as taken from a then-secret report to the Party leadership in July 1983:

By itself, Grenada's distance from the USSR, and its small size, would mean that we figure in a very minute way in the USSR's global relationships * * *. For Grenada to assume a position of increasingly greater importance, we have to be seen as influencing at least regional events. We have to establish ourselves as * * * the sponsor of revolutionary activity. In this region at least * * * the twice per year meetings with the progressive and revolutionary parties in the region is therefore critical * * *.

"We must ensure * * * that we become the principal point of access to the USSR for all these groups even to the point of having our embassy serve as their representative while in the USSR."

The Ambassador then went on to point to the nearby countries of Surinam and Belize as the most vulnerable, whose recruitment or subdivision to the Soviet orbit would enhance Grenada's importance in Soviet eyes.

If armaments are any measure, the Grenadan communists succeeded in their efforts. When the US intervention was over, the tiny nation of 100,000 people was found to have been stockpiled with 10,000 rifles, 4,500 machine guns, 11.5 million rounds of ammunition, 294 portable rocket launchers, 84 82mm mortars, 12 75mm cannon, 15,000 hand grenades, 150 radio transmitters, and 160 field telephones, and had plans for the construction of an army equal to 15-25% of the population.

While it was easy for academicians (resting safely behind the protection afforded by our armed forces) to discount the Grenadan military buildup, it was quite a different matter for Grenada's tiny, unarmed neighbors. Prime Minister Tom Adams of Barbados said this after the intervention by US forces:

"The discovery of a sufficient store of ammunition to kill everyone in the Caribbean * * * will surely raise the question of the past government's intentions. Why did Grenada need motorised rubber landing craft? What would it have done with the 50 armoured personnel carriers it had agreed to obtain from the Soviet Union * * *? Can all these factors be ignored in assessing the threat posed to Eastern Caribbean countries, against which their Treaty entitles them to defend themselves?"

Once again, while it was easy for academicians to ignore the on-going construction of a Grenadan air field capable of handling the largest of Soviet military transports, this was not something responsible US policy makers should have ignored. With the post-intervention discovery of the armaments stockpiles and the many secret agreements the Grenadan communists had with the Soviet Union and its allies, we have to be grateful they didn't.

I want to add one final thought that may put the Grenadan intervention into better perspective for all of us. By itself, any single, small 'Third World' country can appear irrelevant to the grand strategy of defending the Free World. But when we look at the number of such countries affected by Soviet opportunistic expansionism, we can see that it is vital for the United States to respond where and when it is prudent and possible.

Where America has stood up to Soviet expansionism—in Afghanistan, Grenada, Angola and elsewhere—the tide has been turned. No longer is there the communist delusion of an inexorable Marxist march to world victory! Where America has proven irresolute—as in Nicaragua—repression continues, arms stockpiles grow, and plans for communist expansion fester.

Rather than using our hindsight to denigrate American successes, let's use it to learn the lessons that have put communism on the defensive in so many places around the world over the last eight years.

Sincerely,

GERALD B. SOLOMON,
Member of Congress.

DESIGNATING LAKE AMISTAD AS A NATIONAL RECREATION AREA

HON. ALBERT G. BUSTAMANTE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing legislation that would designate the U.S. side of Lake Amistad as a "national recreation area."

Amistad Recreation Area is an immense reservoir area on the Texas-Mexico border near the town of Del Rio in Val Verde County, TX. Lake Amistad is an international reservoir project of the United States-Mexico International Boundary and Waters Commission and was formed by the building of Amistad Dam in 1963-69. Under a memorandum of agreement with the U.S. section of the International Boundary and Waters Commission, the National Park Service has administered the U.S. side of the lake as a unit of the National Park System.

The Texas Historical Commission has documented that the area within Amistad Reservoir contains the highest concentration of prehistoric dry cave sites in the State of Texas. These sites contain cultural remains which record 10,000 years of aboriginal prehistoric occupation along the Rio Grande and its many tributaries. It is a human record unsurpassed in the State of Texas and much of North America. The ancient remains found in this area truly represent the cultural jewels of the Lone Star State.

Because of its unique characteristics, features, and resources, Amistad Recreation Area warrants national recognition and international attention. By elevating the status of this natural and cultural resource to the list of national sites to be preserved and protected, it is hoped that the National Park Service will redouble its efforts to conserve the important geologic, ecologic, ethnographic, archeological, pictographic, historic and recreations features found in Lake Amistad. This bill seeks to achieve that goal.

I would like to add that this bill is a noncontroversial bipartisan issue. It has been endorsed by Gov. William Clements, the National Park Service, the Texas Historical Commission, the Texas Antiquities Commission, the San Antonio Museum Association, and the International Boundary and Waters Commission. The National Park Service, IBWC, and the Texas Historical Commission were involved in drafting this legislation. The bill is consistent with the National Park Service's general management plan for Amistad Recreation Area.

I hope my Texas colleagues will join me in supporting this measure.

BOB MORISON, THE DEAN OF THE MARITIME PRESS

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, last week we said goodbye to an old friend, Bob Morison, who retired as the maritime reporter for the Journal of Commerce.

Bob slipped away so quietly that some might not have noticed.

Especially since his byline is still running on stories.

Bob always had a reputation for producing prodigious amounts of copy, but filing stories from retirement is, I think, above and beyond the call of duty. Perhaps a 31-year habit takes awhile to break.

That's right. Morison, as he was known, spent the last 31 years covering the ups and downs of the maritime industry, and there have been a lot of them.

He knew this industry. Probably better than a lot of people employed in it. Indeed, probably better than a lot of people tasked to regulate or legislate it.

He was fair. He was good. He did his job. He was respected both by his colleagues and by those whose doors he knocked on.

His friends at the paper have suggested that in his retirement he might be named Maritime Administrator. Or perhaps purchase the Washington Redskins and become the first ever owner-player-coach.

As seemingly attractive as either option might be, I believe Morison may pursue yet another path. Rumor has it that he is forming a cable television company that will provide live, national broadcasts of the hearings of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and the meetings of the Federal Maritime Commission.

Once it's in your blood * * *.

THE ANTI-DRUG RESOURCE ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 1989

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, let me be blunt. The Congress shirked its responsibility to the American people when it only partially funded the 1988 drug bill. We delivered only $500 million in new money out of an authorization of $2.7 billion for fiscal year 1989 to combat an industry that grosses 100's of billions of dollars each year. Every day more Americans become addicted to drugs and the costs which the American economy must absorb because of increased health expenses, decreased productivity and soaring crime and violence continue to rise. The very least we can do is fully fund our recently passed drug bill, the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988—Public Law 100-690.

I realize that we are in a time of tight budget constraints but I also believe that an investment in effectively fighting drugs today will help protect the health of our citizens tomorrow and will also be more cost effective than waiting until the problem becomes even more critical.

A reasonable manner to raise this desperately needed funding is through a modest increase in beer, wine, and cigarette Federal excise taxes. Accordingly, today I am introducing legislation to increase Federal excise taxes 1 cent per beer, 2 cents per pack of cigarettes and 3 cents per bottle of wine to raise approximately $1 billion. My proposal would earmark 90 percent of these funds to be used only to combat drug abuse and drug trafficking and the remaining 10 percent for research on alcohol and tobacco related addiction. The 90 percent set aside solely to fight drugs will serve as an additional appropriation to be administered by the recently nominated Federal Drug Czar.

There is significant support for raising sin taxes 10 or even 20 times more than I suggest. Our excise tax proposal is extremely limited, but would provide a very significant chunk of the funds needed to fully fund the new drug bill which passed the Congress with overwhelming support.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support this desperately needed funding measure. Let's show the American people that when we passed the Anti-Drug Act of 1988, we really meant business.

Mr. Speaker, I request that the full text of my proposal be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TRIBUTE TO RICK EGGE

HON. NORMAN D. DICKS

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Rick Egge, who is completing his presidency of the National Utility Contractor's Association [NUCA]. Rick has spent most of his life in Washington studying engineering, raising a family, starting a small business, and volunteering his spare time for many worthwhile national and local causes.

In 1971, Rick and his brother, Jon, formed DYAD Construction based in Woodinville, WA. Rick is president of the contracting firm which has been involved in a variety of work including sewer-related projects, road construction, pumping stations, and treatment plants.

Rick has been very active in utility construction association activities. He was one of the founders of the Utility Contractor's Association of Washington and served a 2-year term as the chapter's first president. He has held a variety of elective positions within the National Utility Contractor's Association, culminating in serving as its president during 1988–89. Rick made a major commitment to worker safety programs during his presidential term. In 1980, he was named NUCA's prestigious "Ditchdigger of the Year," which is presented for dedication and commitment to the utility construction industry.

Despite his busy professional life, Rick also finds time to help out those less fortunate. He serves as a board member on the Little Bit Special Riders Program, which provides equestrian facilities, therapy for paraplegic, and handicapped children and adults.

Mr. Speaker, I join Rick's wife, Jeanie, and his three children, Jordan, Laura, and Ben, in congratulating him on the completion of a successful year as president of NUCA.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL AMENDING THE COASTAL ZONE MANAGEMENT ACT

HON. ROBERT W. DAVIS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, today I introduce a piece of legislation which represents unfinished business for coastal States. The bill is the text of legislation I authored last year to assist coastal States in facing destructive natural forces, and it received favorable testimony before the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. Best yet, given our bleak budget climate, it authorizes no new funds while aiding the fight to protect our ocean and Great Lakes shores.

My bill amends the Coastal Zone Management Act to create a national grant program for States with chronic, nonemergency coastal erosion, and flooding problems. Funds under this program will be made available to those who currently fall between the cracks of existing flood and erosion assistance administered by the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the Army Corps of Engineers. In addition, the bill encourages responsible coastal planning by rewarding States which are directing development away from erosion and flood prone areas.

Under my bill, States with approved coastal zone management programs and States developing such programs are eligible for Federal moneys if the State imposes the equivalent of a 30-year erosion setback for new construction in the coastal zone. States must also meet a 20-percent match requirement which can be satisfied by inkind services, local government funds, or other means.

Funds received by States may be distributed in the form of loans, loan interest subsidies, or grants. States may pass on funds to local governments, homeowners, small businesses, and charities with property threatened or already damaged by erosion of flooding.

States must follow a funding hierarchy. First preference is given to nonstructural erosion and flood prevention measures, such as elevation of buildings, moving endangered property back from the water line, and planting vegetation. The next preference is to purchase the endangered or damaged property for public use consistent with the threat of erosion or flooding. The third preference is for structural solutions, such as groins, breakwaters, and jetties; however, these projects must be consistent with all environmental laws, protect the property for at least 30 years, and not cause erosion or flooding elsewhere. Finally, funds under this program may be used to match other Federal programs consistent with the purposes of the bill.

Dollars for the program will be drawn from the existing Coastal Energy Impact Program [CEIP] fund established under section 308 of the Coastal Zone Management Act. Loan authorization from this fund expired some time ago, and States are continuing to repay the loans made to them from the fund's coffers. These CEIP funds, originally appropriated for coastal use, are now being absorbed into the general operating account of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and could well be used to purchase typewriters, or provide travel funds for the National Weather Service.

It only makes sense to me that moneys authorized and appropriated by the Congress to States for improvements to our much-maligned coastal areas should continue to be used for this purpose. While the funds available under the CEIP are small, they will provide some relief and could serve as seed money for additional assistance from other sources.

My colleagues will remember the attack on our coastal beaches documented by the media last summer. We must act to help preserve these areas from further degradation. My bill is one small, cost-free step in this direction.

WOMEN IN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I affirm my support today, along with my distinguished colleagues, Congressman MICKEY LELAND and Congresswoman PAT SCHROEDER, for the women in international development bill for 1989. I supported this legislation last year and was greatly encouraged by the inclusion of some very significant portions of it in the fiscal year 1989 foreign aid appropriations bill.

Last year saw the approval of key provisions designed to improve the role of women in international development. One required that Agency for International Development [AID] programs be designed so that the percentage of women participants in developing countries be demonstrably increased. A second stipulated that the percentage of women participants be in approximate proportion to their traditional participation in the targeted activities or their proportion of the population, whichever is greater. A third earmarked $5 million for strengthening Women in International Development [WID] Program initiatives—an increase over the previous amount of $2 million—with the provision that $3 million of that amount be used as matching funds. Finally, a fourth provided an increase in funding for the U.N. Development Fund for Women [UNIFEM] from $200,000 to $800,000, and a first-time line item of U.S. funding for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women [INSTRAW] in the amount of $200,000.

Though these funding amounts do not meet the $10 million floor last year's bill recommended, they are higher than prior amounts and represent a partial victory for the legislative intent of the proposal. I am also encouraged by the recent reports indicating that AID has shown improvement in integrating women into its development programs during this past year. Prior to these more praiseworthy reports, the conclusions of experts in development research demonstrated that women were being left out of development programs at all levels: in planning and implementation, in United States and overseas-based agencies, as participants and as recipients. The perpetuation over decades of this oversight resulted almost universally in worsening the survival conditions for women and children in developing countries rather than improving them.

For example, projects intended to increase a country's GNP may have trained men in growing cash crops while ignoring women, who traditionally had played a major role in the agricultural production of the target society. Often, in the aftermath of instituting projects like these, women in the community were left to grow the family's subsistence crops on marginal soils in remote areas farther removed from villages and sources of water.

This kind of policy implementation seems to have been based on incorrect assumptions that have discounted women's and men's interdependent roles in the community. All too often, projects have not accounted for women's pre-existing roles in producing crops, and in raising and tending animals for consumption. In addition, current schemes to encourage privitization of land, while beneficial in some important respects, are not acknowledging indigenous community standards that do not permit women's access to credit, capital, and consequently to land. Women have become locked out of opportunities to farm land that was once community owned.

Practices like these, though perhaps well-intentioned, have resulted in pauperizing women and children, and ultimately, have undercut the success of development projects. The women in international development legislation introduced here today does not just call for the inclusion of women in AID programming; it calls for a reassessment of our approach to development, one that reflects an awareness that to ignore women in development programs is to ignore their vital link to family and community survival.

The reported successes of the past year need to continue and to grow. Unfortunately, incorporating these aims into foreign appropriations legislation on a year-by-year basis will not ensure the fundamental kind of commitment we need. The legislation before us today aims to extend the gains made last year, enlarge upon them, and make them permanent. I urge my colleagues to give careful attention to this issue and join me in support of its passage.

FREEDOM FOR THE BALTIC

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to two special dates approaching in the history of the Baltic States. On February 16, we will remember the undying spirit of freedom shown by the Lithuanian people as they declared themselves free and independent in 1918. We remember a similar spirit of independence that fostered a similar declaration by the people of Estonia on February 23, 1918.

Together with the joyous remembrance of these glorious moments in Baltic history must also come the bitter memory of the subjugation of the Baltic people with the advent of the Russian Army in June 1940. Just as their shortlived freedom focused world attention to the spirit of the Baltic people, so their subsequent subjugation must also focus our attention to the harsh reality of the repression and persecution of the Baltic people that continues to occur.

Even now, in this era of glasnost, signs of that desire for freedom can be seen in Lithuania, in Estonia and in Latvia. And yet, subjugaton and human rights violations of these people will continue. To this day, Russian is taught as a second language to students in the Baltic beginning in elementary school in an effort to replace the language of their native land.

The severe repression of the Catholic Church must also be remembered. Churches and seminaries have been ordered closed and other churches turned into museums. The persecution and harassment of priests and members of the religious orders has been so prevalent over the years that many practice their religion only secretly.

As we remember the declarations of independence by Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia, we must never forget this illegal incorporation of free and sovereign states by the Soviets. We must always work to remember the spirit that gave birth to the declarations of independence in 1918 and to continue to hope for and support the Baltic people as they strive to realize the dreams of their forefathers and once again become independent.

I join with the members of these communities in New Jersey in remembering these important days and in calling upon the Soviet authorities to extend that spirit of glasnost to all their people, including the people of the Baltic States. Only when freedom rings in areas such as the Baltic, can we be assured of an improvement of conditions in the Soviet Union.

CLIFTON CARPENTER—APPOINTED TO U.S. NAVAL ACADEMY

HON. DAVID E. PRICE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, today I want to bring to my colleagues' attention the accomplishments of Clifton Carpenter, an outstanding young man from my district.

Clifton Carpenter was recently offered a full appointment to the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, MD. In addition to this honor, Mr. Carpenter was just named "North Carolina High School Soccer Player of the Year" by Gatorade and Scholastic Coach magazine. This recognition comes at the end of a season when he scored 27 goals and 13 assists, making him Broughton High School's all-time leading scorer with a career total of 63 points. His coach accredits his playing ability to his outstanding skills and his ability to read the game.

Mr. Carpenter's past accomplishments include being named: all-conference, all-State, and leading team scorer. He helped his team win the North Carolina State Championship in the IFC Soccer Classic in 1988 and most recently was chosen to play on the U.S. Olympic Development Team.

I am very proud of Clifton Carpenter's accomplishments. I know that he will represent and serve his country well as part of the U.S. Olympic Development Team as well as in the U.S. Naval Academy.

MISSILE TECHNOLOGY CONTROL ACT OF 1989

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation on behalf of myself and four other Members of this House requiring the President to impose sanctions on United States or foreign businesses helping additional countries acquire ballistic missile equipment and technology.

I am joined in sponsoring this legislation by Mr. SOLOMON and Mr. DOWNEY of New York, Mr. LEVINE of California, and Mr. KASICH of Ohio.

The Missile Technology Control Act addresses the critical need to halt the proliferation of this sophisticated technology. A number of the countries now acquiring ballistic missiles already possess chemical weapons. There is evidence that others in this category are actively pursuing a nuclear capability. To extend the reach of these countries' weapons to points throughout the Middle East, Europe, and, in the case of Argentina, in our own hemisphere, is dangerous and destabilizing. In their irresponsible efforts to make ballistic missile technology available to other countries, participating companies are courting catastrophe.

The evidence of European involvement in this dangerous spread of advanced weaponry is clear and unambiguous. West Germany's largest aerospace firm, Messerschmidt-Boelkow-Blohm [MBB], has played a key role in a joint Argentine, Egyptian, and Iraqi missile program since the early 1980's. SNIA-BPD, a prominent subsidiary of the Italian industry leader, Fiat, has reportedly contributed vital components to this missile system which has a range approaching 1,000 kilometers. A French company is reported to be providing valuable inertial guidance components to this project. There is also reliable evidence that MBB is participating in a separate Iraqi missile project in the northern city of Mosul, the suspected site of Iraqi chemical weapons development.

Mr. Speaker, the United States and its major allies agreed some years ago to stop cold the proliferation of ballistic missiles. It nonetheless continues unabated. Clearly, the enforcement provisions instituted by many countries are utterly ineffective.

According to the provisions of the Missile Technology Control Regime, formally adopted in April 1987, adherent countries have committed themselves to preventing their companies from exporting equipment or technology that could contribute to the acquisition of nuclear capable missiles which can carry a payload of 500 kilograms to a distance of at least 300 kilometers. There is no international organization to monitor exports and each national government is expected to regulate exports from its own country. Where differences arise, resolution is left to the individual country. We encourage the administration to negotiate a more coordinated and efficient arrangement.

Recent developments, including the proven willingness of Iraq to use chemical weapons against civilian populations and the development of a Libyan capacity to produce chemical weapons, underscore the urgent need to put some teeth into efforts to curb the spread of ballistic missile technology.

The Missile Technology Control Act of 1989 is just such an effort. It requires the President to impose at least one of three sanctions on any company he finds in violation of the Missile Technology Control Regime. These sanctions include: First, denial of U.S. export licenses; second, denial of U.S. Government contracts; and third, a ban on imports into the the United States from any such company.

The time has come for the United States to take strong action to put a ban on these reckless business practices. Perhaps our allies have done as much as they politically can. But by enacting this legislation, the United States can do more. Companies engaged in these projects will be forced to forego their business with us if they continue to pursue the profit gained by this extremely risky and ill-advised business.

The text of the bill follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ENFORCEMENT OF MISSILE TECHNOLOGY CONTROL REGIME.

(a) DETERMINATION BY THE PRESIDENT.—Whenever there is reliable evidence, as determined by the President—

App. 2404 or 2405), or any regulations issued under any such provisions,

(B) is conspiring to or attempting to engage in such export, transfer, or trade, or

(C) is knowingly facilitating such export, transfer, or trade by any other person, or

(2) that a foreign person—

(A) is exporting, transferring, or otherwise engaged in the trade of any MTCR item for which an export license would be denied if such export, transfer, or trade were subject to those provisions of law and regulations referred to in paragraph (1)(A),

(B) is conspiring to or attempting to engage in such export, transfer, or trade, or

(C) is knowingly facilitating such export, transfer, or trade by any other person,

App. 2404, 2405) if such foreign person is the designated consignee or end user in the application for such export license or if the President has reason to believe that such foreign person will benefit from the issuance of such export license.

(B) Prohibiting all contracting with, or procurement of any products and services from, such foreign person by any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government.

(C) Prohibiting the importation into the United States of any product or service of such foreign person.

(1) the product or service is essential to the national security of the United States;

(2) such person is a sole source supplier of the product or service, the product or service is not available from any alternative reliable supplier, and the need for the product or service cannot be met in a timely manner by improved manufacturing processes or technological developments; and

(3) the end-user of such product or service is the United States Government.

SEC. 2. REPORTS TO CONGRESS.

(a) REPORTS BEFORE ACTIONS TAKEN.—The President shall, at least 10 days before imposing any sanction, or waiving the imposition of sanctions, under section 1, report such proposed action to Congress.

(b) ANNUAL REPORT.—The President shall include in the annual report submitted under section 14 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2413), a report on the status of any sanctions imposed under section 1, including the status of any waiver of such sanctions.

SEC. 4. REGULATORY AUTHORITY.

The President may issue such regulations, licenses, and orders as are necessary to carry out this Act.

RETIREMENT OF JUNE H. COOK

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor June H. Cook, the director of Storrowton Village Museum in West Springfield, MA. June will retire from her position in February after 13 years of service to this historic New England landmark.

I would like to take this opportunity to recognize June's great strides in improving the educational facilities the historic community. Under her direction, Storrowton Village has grown to a year-round attraction and an integral part of a curriculum designed to enhance our children's understanding of America's history and culture. Visitors to the museum can enjoy a tour of the buildings located on the grounds of the Eastern States Exposition while they observe June and her volunteers, who relive the historic charm of 19th century New England.

One of June's most outstanding achievements was the creation and development of the living history programs designed expressly for students in grades 2 to 6. Because of June's careful and successful management, children from as far away as New York can take advantage of learning about the history of early America. Started in 1975 for local students, the project has grown to a regionwide program including 2,900 students from around New England and New York.

June and her volunteers introduce students to the daily life of 19th century folks by instructing them in the livelihoods, customs, and lifestyles of the era. Youngsters dress in traditional attire and participate in scholastic, religious, and recreational activities of the time period. I can think of no better way to enlighten students than to provide them with this unique, first-hand, educational experience.

June's organizational abilities and historic expertise are drawn from a career devoted to the arts and humanities. In years past, June has displayed her ability and commitment as administrator of the Museum of Fine Arts in Springfield, as director of the Greater Springfield Arts Festival, and as board member of the Academic Artists Association, Inc.

The list of June's achievements is almost too long to recount. She has given endless hours to her community, volunteering her time as a Girl Scout leader for 15 years, and serving as chairwoman of the Town Report Committee and secretary of the Capital Planning Committee for the town of West Springfield.

Surely June's coworkers and 65 volunteers of Storrowton Village will regret the loss of their director. She has worked side by side with her volunteers not only as an administrator, but also as a friend. June's support and inspiration have won her the respect she truly deserves as she steps down from her job as director.

In the coming years, June will be able to pursue her personal interests, such as painting, sketching, and enjoying time with her family. Yet, I am pleased that the community will still benefit from her expertise, since June will continue her lectures on New England customs and traditions, even after her retirement.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to pay tribute to June H. Cook on the event of her retirement from Storrowton Village. The citizens of my district and, indeed, those from all over New England should be extremely proud of June, who has dedicated her career to the cultural and historic enrichment of us all.

"WINNING ON WELLNESS" PROGRAM

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring this House's attention to a very successful drug and alcohol prevention program being conducted in my district. The Severna Park Parent, Teacher, Student Organization is working on a "Winning on Wellness" Program that's been making strong inroads into the drug problem in our community.

Over the last few years, the PTSO has been utilizing different strategies to get the antidrug message across. One method has been to develop a core of student leaders who are educated, motivated, and committed to ridding their own school of drugs. These students are active in school government, athletics, and activities, and represent the leaders of Severna Park High School. As peers, they can work with the fellow students on their own level to convince them of the dangers of drugs. Parents have already seen a change in their youngsters attitude, and the change is spreading to the junior high school and elementary grades as well.

Another strategy is to get parents more involved in counseling their own kids. The PTSO found that parents often feel trapped and unable to do anything to combat drugs in their own home. Our group has established sessions for parents that are educational and supportive—making the parents the first line of defense in our war on drugs. Parents can learn of the signs of a growing drug problem in their children and develop skills to fight that problem. The PTSO has also established the Severna Park High School PRIDE, part of a national network of parents, professionals, and kids which supports students in fulfilling their potential through substance-free living. For another year Severna Park PRIDE will be sending representatives to a national conference to study new techniques for freeing our society of drugs.

Maryland's Anne Arundel County has been looking for a model program for combating drugs in our society and the Severna Park PTSO is on its way to becoming that model. Next week we'll hold an important session in our community with well-known law enforcement officer, David Toma conducting the meeting. This is just the next step for this community's long march to a drug-free school. I know my colleagues will join me in applauding this organization's efforts and share my confidence that with more programs like this one, the scourge on our youth called drugs will soon be a forgotten memory in this Nation's history.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, this month the Nation celebrates Black History Month. All across the country, in churches and schools, young people are learning about black history and the impact of black leaders on American society.

We are at a crossroads in time, Mr. Speaker, looking back at the years of progressive legislation that Congress enacted over 20 years ago with a spirit of fairness and activism, and the stalled interest that typified the years when Ronald Reagan was President.

The last 8 years have been a time of mixed signals and confusion on civil rights progress. The Reagan administration supported a failed policy of constructive engagement in South Africa, and Congress finally had to pass sanctions legislation over the President's veto.

Reagan opposed restoring important civil rights statutes, and Congress again had to override his veto. Reagan opposed an increase in the minimum wage, cut programs for the poor, and now many urban areas have come to resemble war zones, torn by drugs and a lack of Reagan administration support for low-income housing.

Yet beyond the tone of these years lie the accomplishments of many black leaders. Colin Powell, National Security Adviser under Reagan, won universal acclaim for his understanding of international relations. Samuel Pierce, the only black in Reagan's Cabinet, was also the only Cabinet member to serve a full 8 years, as the President's head of Housing and Urban Development. Other leaders including Jesse Jackson and Ron Brown—now chairman of the Democratic National Committee—have made an enormous contribution to the political arena.

Progress goes beyond individual action. On this day in the House, we are focusing on the role of the church in the last 8 years. Black churches have played a large role in shaping the political and social climate of this country. The churches have raised issue awareness and consciousness for both the black and white communities, going beyond the issues of the day to talk about subjects of local and national importance.

I am hopeful, Mr. Speaker, that we can work with President Bush to set the tone for a new beginning for racial progress in our country. I want to give my full encouragement to those students who this month are studying black history. And I want to work with other leaders of this House and leaders in my congressional district to see that these students have every opportunity to reap the fullest economic and social successes possible.

A BILL TO PREVENT CREDIT DISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF MILITARY RANK

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I am reintroducing legislation today which would amend the Consumer Credit Protection Act to ban discrimination by lenders against members of the armed services on the basis of military rank.

It has been brought to my attention that some lenders will not even consider granting credit to members of the armed services below a certain rank. This is obviously unfair. While rank certainly provides some indication of income, it does not necessarily provide a picture of total income, it provides no indication of other resources, and it also does not provide a credit history. Yet some lenders apparently take the view that if an individual has not achieved a certain rank, he or she simply is not likely to be a good credit risk.

Mr. Speaker, this not only makes no sense but also represents an insult to the members of our armed services and their families. And I do not believe it should be allowed.

My bill would simply add military rank or grade to the list of bases upon which credit discrimination is not permitted. As with protential borrowers in other jobs, this measure would not prevent a lender from considering the individual's income, nor would it prevent a lender from considering how long the individual had held a particular job. It would simply prevent lenders from denying credit, or a chance for credit, on the basis of rank alone.

Mr. Speaker, those who volunteer to serve in our Armed Forces make many sacrifices, which frequently include a significant financial burden. Surely, discrimination by lenders should not be added to their problems. I hope my colleagues will join me in sponsoring this bill so that we can eliminate this problem.

Following is the text of my bill:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PROHIBITION ON DISCRIMINATION BY CREDITORS ON THE BASIS OF THE GRADE OF AN APPLICANT WHO IS A MEMBER OF THE ARMED FORCES.

Section 701(a) of the Consumer Credit Protection Act (15 U.S.C. 1691(a)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (4);

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking out "or" the second place such term appears; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) on the basis of the grade of an applicant who is a member of the Armed Forces; or".

"CELEBRATING THEIR DAY IN THE SUN"—DEAF AWARENESS WEEK 1989

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, as a congressional trustee of Gallaudet University, I am reintroducing a commemorative resolution designating March 7 through March 13, 1989, as "Deaf Awareness Week." I am pleased to be joined by more than 115 of my colleagues in recognizing the significant events that occurred at Gallaudet University last March—culminating with the selection of a deaf president for the institution.

Gallaudet University is a liberal arts institution, located in northeast Washington, DC, charged with the unique mission of educating thousands of deaf and hard of hearing students from young preschoolers to Ph.D. candidates.

Last spring, between March 6 and 13, the Gallaudet campus served as the backdrop for major social and civil rights movement for the deaf community, their families, and friends surrounding the selection of Gallaudet's seventh president, who was not deaf or hard of hearing. The primary goal of this movement—deaf leadership at the university—was attained on March 13, 1988, with the selection of Dr. I. King Jordan, Jr., as the eighth president of Gallaudet University—the first deaf president in Gallaudet's distinguished 124-year history.

In introducing this resolution, I salute the many heroes of this special social movement. I am also mindful of the poignantly meaningful remarks and vivid gesture of Gallaudet's seventh president, Dr. Elisabeth Zinser, as she extended her hand and heart in recognition and celebration with deaf persons during this "their day in the sun."

In special recognition of the 24 million deaf Americans and the energizing events of this social movement we witnessed nearly a year ago, Deaf Awareness Week provides us the opportunity to celebrate and reflect upon the significance and importance of this historic social movement for deaf and hard of hearing Americans. It serves to educate and sensitize us all—recognizing deaf and hard of hearing individuals for their unique abilities and qualities.

Mr. Speaker, plans are currently underway at Gallaudet for a series of activities commemorating the important events of March 1988. It is my sincere hope that both the House of Representatives and Senate will promptly adopt this Deaf Awareness Week resolution in national recognition of the significant contribution that this historic social movement had for all Americans, especially those who are deaf and hard of hearing, and I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this resolution.

The following is the text of the Deaf Awareness Week commemorative resolution:

H.J. RES. —

Whereas during the second week of March 1988, a revolutionary sequence of historic social events evolved on the campus of Gallaudet University, the only university in the Nation which teaches exclusively deaf and hard of hearing students;

Whereas the events which occurred at Gallaudet University in the Spring of 1988 had great significance to all Americans, especially those who are deaf or hard of hearing;

Whereas the week long social protest at Gallaudet University awakened the people of nations around the world to the fact that deaf and hard of hearing individuals are able to achieve at the same level as others and need to be recognized as individuals with unique abilities and qualities; and

Whereas the week long social protest at Gallaudet University served to educate and sensitize the American people concerning the hopes and dreams of the 24,000,000 Americans who are deaf or hard of hearing: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That March 7 through March 13, 1989, is designated as "Deaf Awareness Week". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe this week by remembering the significance of the historic social movement, which began in March 1988 at Gallaudet University, through appropriate ceremonies and activities.

EL SALVADOR

HON. DAVID DREIER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of my colleagues to an editorial written by Mr. Allen B. Hazelwood which was printed on January 29, 1989, in the Los Angeles Times. This editorial, "El Salvador: Sleepwalking Into Disaster," represents an important analysis of the current situation in El Salvador.

Having recently traveled to El Salvador with Mr. Hazelwood, I concur with his observations and hope that the evolving U.S. policy toward El Salvador will serve to reverse, rather than secure, the recent gains of the Communist guerrillas there.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Jan. 29, 1989]

EL SALVADOR: SLEEPWALKING INTO DISASTER

(By Allen B. Hazelwood)

By any political-military calculation, domestic and international events now favor the communist guerrillas in El Salvador. Many indicators point to a coming major offensive by the Farabundo Marti Liberation Front (FMLN). The final days of 1988 were highlighted by guerrilla successes including car bombings in the capital, a daring daylight attack on the armed forces headquarters, and the forcing of about 40 rural mayors to resign after the assassination of eight of their colleagues and, just last week, a governor.

Meanwhile, the Socialist/Communist left has entered the political arena with the introduction of the Democratic Convergence party. While the party leadership remains largely that of the FMLN's old political ally, it has candidates legally running for president and vice president in the March election. This "legitimization" is in part responsible for an increase in right-wing activity. A case in point is the birth of ARDE (the Anti-Communist Revolutionary Exterminating Action). This unwanted addition from the far right will further divide the Salvadoran people and fragment a fragile consensus of support in Washington.

Although the U.S. Embassy is optimistic about recent high-level changes in the Salvadoran military, they are unlikely to make much difference in the way the military influences events.

Although their forces are better equipped than in 1981, senior army commanders still do not fully understand all the requirements for fighting guerrillas and advancing the cause of the common people. Nothing is being done to deny the guerrillas their main "safe areas" and operational bases. The army should be moving to establish a battalion-size force near the guerrilla headquarters around the town of Perquin, 105 miles from the San Salvador, thus displacing the guerrillas from the entire Northern Department. Instead, the army has opted for a conservative defense of the safer and more pleasant urban areas.

Some U.S. advisers note that the majority of the Salvadoran people do not support the government, the military or the guerrillas. The people have designed their lives around the conflict. Each person seeks to avoid real participation or commitment. Despite evidence of heavy voting in five prior elections, perhaps 70% of the people are indifferent to the struggle.

In stark contrast, the communist leadership remains successful despite sharp internal differences over operational philosophies. The FMLN has educated the people to a steady theme of rampant social injustice under corrupt civilian and military officials. At the same time, the guerrillas have prevented the government from providing long-promised social and economic changes in the lives of the people who continue to suffer in a sad, sometimes tragic environment. In the rural areas the guerrillas and their "local peoples governments" have effectively blocked the seeds of democracy from taking hold while expanding the areas they control. More recently, a unified FMLN has succeeded in driving the beginning of a wedge between the Christian Democratic government and the increasingly restive military.

The major success of the Salvadoran left results from a remarkable ability to establish an international support mechanism. It has been particularly successful in the United States, following the Vietnamese Communist concept of exploiting the domestic political vulnerabilities of foreign powers.

Diplomatic efforts to settle differences with the guerrillas have gone nowhere. Nearly 11 years of intermittent efforts culminated in the much celebrated Esquipulas II plan, but, as President Jose Napoleon Duarte said to his Cabinet last month, "Esquipulas has only succeeded in killing off the Contras [in Nicaragua]." In recent weeks, the flawed "peace plan" has also been working to increase the flow of equipment and materiel to communist forces in El Salvador.

Despite all the bad news, there is reasonable cause for hope—if long-recommended U.S. initiatives are adopted and fully implemented.

The United States should insist that El Salvador legislate a realistic anti-terrorist law (suspected guerrillas are now freed within 72 hours) and establish an effective protection program for judges and key witnesses. When the military judge presiding over the case of the 1985 killing of four U.S. Marines was assassinated last May, a clear message went out to his colleagues on the bench.

The U.S. Embassy needs to maintain greater personnel continuity in key positions. Since 1981, Washington has sent four ambassadors and six military group commanders to El Salvador. Only one of the latter had the required training and experience in both counterinsurgency and guerrilla warfare.

As the highest priority, El Salvador should establish a nationwide civil defense program. This is the one solution that could turn the reconstruction program around and save the country. Community defense in coordination with Agency for International Development projects is the sure way to roll back guerrilla gains and prevent an otherwise inevitable communist victory. Unless the commanders of the armed forces agree to civil defense, any dream of democracy, peace and stability will be lost—along with almost 70,000 Salvadoran lives, more than a dozen Americans and $4 billion in U.S. aid.

If a predicted offensive occurs, the security of American advisers and trainers will be at serious risk. Some intelligence indicators point to 1989 as the year in which U.S. military personnel will be targeted. This would be a marked change from the FMLN's policy of avoiding confrontation with U.S. personnel.

Currently, the most dangerous area for U.S. military advisers is in the city of San Salvador. The time has come for the U.S. military group to accept recommendations to lower their number in the capital, which has become a war zone, and send home vulnerable dependents. There should be fewer U.S. military theorists and more Special Forces-qualified personnel in contested rural areas. There has long been a serious need for such specialists in low-intensity conflict, which requires multidimensional skills ranging from psychology to economics in addition to military expertise. Changing the balance of advisers, from desks in the capital to the "safer" field, is the best way to have a decisive impact on those Salvadoran commanders reluctant to challenge recent communist gains.

Finally, the United States would be well advised to stay out of the March election—something that we did not do very well in 1984. If we really support the democratic process, we ought to let the Salvadorans choose the leadership for their own future.

(Allen B. Hazelwood served for 21 years with the Marine Corps and Army Special Forces, including seven years as an adviser in El Salvador. Retired, he is a consultant with the National Defense Council Foundation.)

RELIGIOUS PASSIONS RUMBLE IN UKRAINE

HON. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. Mr. Speaker, religious belief is flourishing in the Ukraine despite the persecution Ukrainians have faced. Recently Christianity has experienced a revival that cannot be suppressed. The Chernobyl nuclear disaster, visions of the Virgin Mary, and the millennial anniversary of the establishment of Christianity in the Ukraine have bolstered open expression of religious belief. With the Speaker's permission I insert into the RECORD the following article from the February 9, 1989, issue of the Washington Times.

RELIGIOUS PASSIONS RUMBLE IN UKRAINE

(By Martin Sieff)

Savagely repressed for 70 years, Christianity has surfaced in the Ukraine with dramatic vigor and strength.

Three events over the past three years have fanned religious passions in the Soviet republic, which is larger than France and almost as populous.

First came the Chernobyl nuclear disaster of April 1986, on the weekend of Mikhail Gorbachev's first May Day celebration as party leader. The authorities were slow in taking precautions against the deadly radioactive cloud that covered Kiev and the western Ukraine after the fire in graphite rod reactor No. 4.

Officially, only 31 persons died in the disaster, but dissident sources believe that hundreds, and probably thousands, continue to die from radiation ailments. They claim that deaths attributed to cancer and heart disease, already high, appear to be soaring to cloak the radiation deaths.

A year to the day after the Chernobyl disaster came the second event: Youngsters in the western Ukrainian village of Grushevo began reporting visions of the Virgin Mary.

"What had the most impact on the Soviet officials was not the visions themselves, but the reactions to them," said a leader of the Ukrainian Christian Democratic Front (CDF). "Hundreds of thousands of people came to the site, day and night, not just from all over the Ukraine, but also from Russia, the Crimea, everywhere. People even abandoned their jobs to visit Grushevo.

"Even many Communist Party members came. They risked so much, yet they were not afraid. The communist authorities then realized that after 70 years they had not been able to liquidate the religious feelings that people held."

The reported visions boosted the morale of the Ukrainian Catholic Church, whose priests are still barred from conducting services even in churches that have been reopened. They also strengthened the perception that Chernobyl had been a divine warning, or judgment, on the communist regime.

The belief became widespread that the very name was a reference to the plague of "wormwood" in Revelation 8:10-11, wherein a great star falls burning from heaven and poisons the waters. "Wormwood" is translated in the Ukainian language as "chernobyl."

"The disaster has been widely taken as symbolizing the end of 1,000 years of terror, and we are now at the beginning of the millenium, and of a just, spiritual life on earth—the new millenium of justice," the CDF leader said. "Even Gorbachev's birthmark"—on his forehead—"has inspired jokes about the beast of Revelation."

After Chernobyl and Grushevo, the third great event was the millenial anniversary of the establishment of Christianity in the Ukraine by King Yaroslav the Wise in 988 AD.

Moscow had gone to great lengths to "hijack" the event by proclaiming it as the anniversary of Russian, as opposed to Ukrainian, Christianity. But under the dramatic shadows of Chernobyl and Grushevo, these efforts backfired.

The Russian Orthodox Church has been politically tolerated since the Russian nationalist revival of the Great Patriotic War of 1941-45. Russian Orthodoxy has a history of submission and accommodation to political overlords, dating to the early czars, that has enabled it to survive under communist control.

However, in the western Ukraine, the still-outlawed Ukrainian Catholic Church, estimated to be up to 4 million strong, is a far more formidable and independent force. In 1987, it started "coming out from the underground, the catacombs," as one leader put it.

Since then, Ukrainian Catholic priests have celebrated Mass openly—after generations of secrecy—in public places. The Soviet authorities have allowed these religious ceremonies to be performed. But from midsummer 1988, the repressions started again.

"Officials and militiamen would disrupt or stop religious services, causing disturbances at them and fining people for attending them," one religious activist said.

The authorities began reopening Ukrainian Catholic Churches, but as Orthodox churches.

"They literally physically intimidated the people to enter them, forcing them to do so, beating them with sticks and batons," the activist said. "This is still taking place."

"Now, the Komsomols"—young communists—"are no longer punished for entering a church," the CDF leader said. "But in the western Ukraine the majority of the population are Ukrainian Catholics. Since there are only Orthodox churches allowed open, they attend these. People turn to God where they can."

THE THRIFT CRISIS: SALVAGING OUR HEALTHY INSTITUTIONS

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, President Bush has now announced the administration's plan for resolving the S&L crisis. In general, I believe it is a responsible and thoughtful proposal that attempts to balance the various concerns and interests at stake. It merits our most serious and expeditious consideration. There are, however, some serious questions that remain unanswered, and some important issues that remain unaddressed.

A major concern of my own is the inadequate attention given to the plight of our healthier thrift institutions. Much of the debate to date has focused on what to do with the hopelessly insolvent institutions that are continuing to drain our resources and jeopardize the stability of our financial system. Such a focus is inevitable. It is, after all, these institutions that pose the greatest immediate risk.

But other segments of the industry merit equal—perhaps greater—attention. A large proportion of our thrift institutions, while weakened and under great pressure, are fundamentally sound. They are largely victims rather than perpetrators in this thrift crisis. Certainly, the thrift industry should bear its fair share of the burden of resolving this crisis, and that burden will fall inevitably on these healthier institutions. But, if their costs are increased and their current needs are ignored, they will inevitably become part of the problem rather than part of the solution.

As we move to solve the thrift crisis, we must focus some of our attention on checking deteriorating situations before they too are beyond help. With a new infusion of capital and managerial expertise, our healthier institutions can survive and prosper. It is far better to intervene while help is useful than to wait and ultimately be forced to provide FSLIC assistance to even more insolvent institutions.

Today, I am introducing legislation that will provide the resources these institutions need. The Thrift Early Capital Attraction Plan ("TECAP") is a plan to inject capital into thrifts that are below minimum capital standards but that are still solvent. I would hope that this legislation will eventually become part of any comprehensive solution to the thrift crisis. In my view, the concept has the following merits:

(1) New capital is brought into the industry;

(2) The thrift charter is made more attractive;

(3) Responsible capital partners have an incentive to protect their investment and will, in effect, perform oversight functions that protect the insurance fund;

(4) Deteriorating situations can be addressed before they become situations requiring assistance;

(5) Regulators would have an additional option if it appears that a situation is deteriorating;

(6) Transactions between holding companies and their investee thrifts would still be sharply limited.

THE NATURE OF THE PROBLEM

In addition to the approximately 350-400 FSLIC-insured thrifts with negative net worth that have not yet been closed down, there are about a thousand more with total assets of about $800 billion that have some positive net worth but are nonetheless below minimum regulatory capital standards. Many of these institutions face inevitable failure unless they can attract additional capital.

If these institutions sustain additional losses wiping out their remaining capital, the ultimate loss to the insurance fund will increase. Any plan that deals only with thrifts that have no net worth and ignores the hundreds that have some, but inadequate, capital is inherently incomplete. We must provide methods and incentives for attracting additional capital for thrifts that can be salvaged with additional investment.

The massive losses sustained by many thrifts in recent years have left them with inadequate capital to support their operations. While some of these thrifts are insolvent, many more are simply incapacitated by the lack of sufficient capital. Because their investments and deposit growth are restricted, poorly capitalized thrifts face extremely limited business opportunities and, accordingly, have great difficulty returning to profitability.

An inability to shed poorly performing assets and acquire new ones relatively easily often leads management to engage in riskier transactions, in hopes of producing dramatic profits. Furthermore, if the institution's capital is already low, management has little incentive to protect shareholder value, and most of the risk is borne by the insurance fund.

Under current law, however, one important source of new capital and managerial discipline for such thrifts is foreclosed. A well-capitalized thrift holding company is prohibited from purchasing voting shares of thrifts in such situations unless it acquires control of the thrift. If the troubled thrift is declared insolvent, acquisition would be permitted in connection with an assistance transaction. In cases where the institution is not yet insolvent, the acquiror will become a multiple savings and loan holding company [MSLHC]. Because MSLHC's are sharply limited in the types of businesses in which they may be involved, an existing unitary holding company will be discouraged from injecting capital into a thrift that could otherwise circumvent the need for FSLIC assistance.

TECAP would supplement insurance fund resources without additional public expenditures. It would be highly advantageous to the thrift industry and its insurance fund to relax some of the restrictions on holding company investments to give healthy MSLHC's the opportunity to repair ailing thrifts before they become insolvent.

Permitting investment of up to 24.9 percent of the stock of a weakened thrift would provide both additional financial resources and new, constructive and voluntary discipline for the investee thrift without a transfer of control. My legislation would permit injection of additional capital prior to the point at which assistance is required, and permit recapitalized thrifts to operate more profitably without the need for heroic risk-taking.

THE TECAP LEGISLATION

This legislation would thus help infuse capital into institutions that may still have a future and allow us to address deteriorating situations before they are beyond salvage. Specifically, it would:

Amend the Savings and Loan Holding Company Act [SLHCA] to authorize unitary and multiple holding companies to make direct equity investment in newly issued common or preferred stock representing up to 24.9 percent of the investee thrift's total outstanding stock, when the issuing thrift had an equity to liability ratio of 5 percent or less.

Require that the funds be maintained as part of the capital of the investee. In no case could the investing holding company purchase shares held by existing stockholders. Thus the investee would have to agree to dilution voluntarily.

Require that the investing holding company's thrift subsidiary or subsidiaries be in compliance with applicable regulatory capital requirements, and that the investing holding company meet appropriate standards for financial and managerial resources established by regulators.

To permit oversight of the investment and to make additional managerial resources available to the investee thrift, permit management and director interlocks between the investing holding company and the investee thrift.

Require that each acquisition receive prior approval of the appropriate regulatory agency.

CONCLUSION

It is time for us to look forward rather than backward, and move to address problems before they degenerate into crises. I would welcome the support of my colleagues for this important initiative.

REPORT FROM THE INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE ON EXAMINATION AND COMPLIANCE ACTIVITIES IN THE AREA OF TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS INVOLVED IN TELEVISION MINISTRIES

HON. J.J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Ways and Means, Subcommittee on Oversight, which I chair, held a hearing in October 1987 to examine the Federal tax rules applicable to tax-exempt organizations involved in television ministries. In followup to that hearing, I requested that the Internal Revenue Service [IRS] provide quarterly status reports on examination and collection actions involving television ministries. I would like to share with my colleagues the report which summarizes IRS's examination and collection activity in this area during the year following the subcommittee's hearing.

I want to assure my colleagues and the public that I have been told that most organizations involved in television ministries do comply with our tax laws. I believe that IRS enforcement of the tax laws is critical to the protection of the public, who contribute millions of dollars a year to these organizations with the belief that these funds are used for charitable purposes, not for the minister's personal benefit. Enforcement activity is a manner of ensuring compliance with the Tax Code and does not infringe on separation of church and state.

In summary, the IRS reports that some 34 examination projects were conducted in the last year. Six of these examinations have involved prominent television evangelists, and two have involved criminal investigations. According to the report, most of the cases involving prominent television ministries focus on the diversion of income from the tax-exempt organization for the private benefit of the organization's insiders. The IRS notes that, if these funds had been reported by the evangelists involved, these funds would be considered unreasonable and excessive compensation for the services rendered. The full report from Robert I. Brauer, Assistant Commission, Employee Plans and Exempt Organizations, Internal Revenue Service, follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY, INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE,
Washington, DC, December 5, 1988.

Hon. J.J. PICKLE,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Oversight, Committee on Ways and Means, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is in response to your request of November 2, 1988, for a comprehensive summary of Internal Revenue Service activities during the preceding year regarding television ministries. This report is publicly disclosable and covers the twelve month period beginning in October, 1987. A second report, containing information protected from public disclosure, will be provided to you under separate cover. The reports will be in lieu of a separate quarterly status report for the period July through September, 1988.

Service activities during the period centered around a significant number of examinations, including examinations of the returns of tax exempt organizations, related taxable organizations, and individuals. The examinations were, where appropriate, conducted in a coordinated manner and involved exempt organizations' agents, income tax agents, and criminal investigators. Such coordinated examinations involve the simultaneous examination of non-profit and for-profit organizations' returns as well as individuals' returns. Since these examinations began, nearly 100 agents and special agents have been involved in these examinations on a nationwide basis. I have enclosed a chart, edited for public disclosure, that provides additional information on the 29 separate examination projects, some of which involve many individuals and related organizations, that are currently in process or were closed since the last quarterly status report. An additional five examinations that had been reported on earlier quarterly reports have been closed, making a total of 34 examinations conducted and eight closed during the preceding year. Sixteen cases reported at various times were subsequently determined not to involve evangelists broadcasting on radio or television and were, therefore, dropped from later reports.

The 29 examinations described in the enclosed chart, which are also representative of all evangelist cases, include six examination projects involving prominent television evangelists. These individuals broadcast religious programming and solicit contributions on a national and, in some cases, an international basis. Because of (1) the size and complexity of these organizations, (2) the inadequacy of books and records in most cases, (3) a lack of taxpayer cooperation in some cases, necessitating the use of summonses, and (4) the need to observe the procedural safeguards of IRC 7611 and its predecessor (which set forth the special audit procedures applicable to entities that consider themselves to be churches), most of these examinations take several years to complete; a number are still in progress. Cases closed in the shortest time typically involve only minor employment tax issues.

Two of the six examination projects involving prominent television evangelists have involved criminal investigations. An additional three examinations of lesser known evangelists have also involved criminal investigations. Of the five total criminal investigations, three resulted in referrals to the Department of Justice, one is still undergoing preliminary investigation, and one case was closed without referral for prosecution. Civil issues in virtually all the cases involving prominent television evangelists focus on diversion of the tax exempt organization's income for the private benefit of insiders. Typically, the diverted amounts are not reported as income by the evangelist involved and, if reported, would constitute, in the Service's opinion, unreasonable and excessive compensation for the services rendered. Political campaign activity by IRC 501(c)(3) organizations is also an issue in three of the cases. With the exception of employment tax issues, other issues do not occur with any consistency. Two of the cases, both involving prominent evangelists, have been referred to the National Office for technical advice.

While the Service has been cognizant of, and careful to avoid infringing, First Amendment religious freedoms in conducting the 29 examinations, we have moved, in appropriate cases, to revoke income tax exemption and collect taxes after procedural and evidentiary standards have been met.

Sincerely,

ROBERT I. BRAUER.

Enclosure.

3	Unreported income and employment taxes	The examination began in September 1985 after the minister failed to file Forms 1040, 940, and 941. The Collection Division is attempting to secure assets, and is contemplating referral to Examination and/or Criminal Investigation Division.
4	Unreported income on form 1040	Examination of individual resulted in referral to Criminal Investigation Division. The case was subsequently referred to the Department of Justice for prosecution. Information was filed in U.S. district court in October 1988.
5	Political activities, commercial activity, inurement, unreported income	The examination was begun with an affiliated organization. Agents are onsite interviewing 3d parties as well as members of the organization's executive staff. The agents have reviewed the program content of the TV broadcasts and are discussing their findings with the organization, as well as activities that may have been conducted primarily for political purposes. The estimated completion date for the examination phase is March 1989.

EXAMINATIONS OF MEDIA EVANGELISTS AND RELATED ORGANIZATIONS—Continued

[Status as of September 30, 1988]

Taxpayer	Issue	Status
6	Unreported income	The forms 1040 for 1978–84 were examined and "church" income was determined to be personal income. The case is currently in the Collection Division and collection activity is in progress. The estimated completion date is December 1988.
7	Failure to pay taxes	Forms 941 were filed for 3 quarters but no employment payments were made. The organization paid the outstanding interest and has requested abatement of penalties. The estimated closing date is March 1989.
8	Failure to pay employment taxes	Forms 941 were filed but no payments were made. The taxpayer is now current in payments and is arranging a payment agreement for back taxes. The estimated completion date is December 1988.
9	Unsubstantiated deductions	Forms 1040, selected by computer scoring, are under examination. The estimated completion date is December 1988.
10	Political activity, lobbying, inurement	The cases have been assigned to an agent who contacted the taxpayer in June 1988. The form 990–T of an affiliated entity has been selected as part of the EO TCMP program and will be worked accordingly. The agents are collecting additional information on nonexempt activities. Due to the expected complexity of the case the estimated closing date is December 1989.
11	Unreported income	The examination of the form 1040 was begun in December 1985 as a result of computer scoring. The organization's funds were transferred to a 2d organization for the benefit of the minister. The case has been forwarded to the Appeals Division.
12	Employment tax	The Collection Division is attempting to secure delinquent forms 941. The organization is making payments but refuses to provide financial information. The district anticipates that the case will be closed by December 1988.
13	Nonexempt expenditures, inurement	The district has received information that the organization has used funds for nonexempt purposes and for its principal officer. The examination will commence during 1989.
14	Unreported income	The examination of the ministers form 1040 was begun as a result of a newspaper article on the minister. Examination contact has been made; however, the taxpayer has been uncooperative. The EP/EO Division is preparing a church tax inquiry letter on the minister's church and anticipates contact in December 1988. The estimated completion date is March 1989.
15	Unsubstantiated deductions	The form 1040 was selected for examination by computer scoring. The Examination Division is reviewing the information obtained in the examination. The estimated completion date is December 1988. The examination was started October 1987.
16	UBIT; allocation of expenses between commercial and religious programming	The examination of the form 990–T was initiated as part of the EO TCMP program. The district completed the examination with a change in UBI income; however, no additional tax was assessed. The case was completed August 1988.
17	UBIT, relationship between a related IRC 501(c) entity and the church; possible inurement; and, consolidated return issues.	Analysis of form 990–T indicates that the church may be improperly using an affiliated IRC 501(c) entity. The EP/EO Division began an examination of the related entity in March 1988. The examination may expand to include additional related organizations. Any expansion of the examination to include the church will be conducted under IRC 7611, Church Examination Procedures. The district has requested technical advice from the national office on the consolidated return issues. The district continues to examine the primary records of the organization.
18	Inurement	A church examination letter under IRC 7611 has been issued and a conference held. The district continues to gather information and is evaluating the best way to proceed. This is a coordinated examination involving both EP/EO and Examination Divisions.
19	Inurement, private benefit, unreported income, UBIT, church status	The hearing on the IRS proof of claim in the Bankruptcy Court has been postponed until at least Dec. 31, 1988. This deals with the exemption issue. An action has been filed on behalf of a secured creditor to liquidate the assets of the organization. Civil suits and counter suits between the organization and its founders are pending with both sides in the discovery stage.
20	Inurement, private benefit, political activity	An IRC 7611 notice of inquiry was sent August 1987, the notice of examination was sent in October 1987. The onsite phase began in January 1988. The primary issue is inurement to the benefit of the founder and his family. A review of the corporate books and records for 1984, 1985, and 1986 was completed in September 1988. The agents are evaluating the information.
21	Inurement, unreported income	The EP/EO Division has determined that an examination should be conducted as a result of an information gathering project. The case has not yet been assigned to an agent.
22	Inurement	The EP/EO Division has initiated an information gathering project as a result of a referral from the Criminal Investigation Division. Since it is still in the information gathering process we are unable to provide an estimated completion date.
23	Unreported income	This involves the individual's form 1040. The Examination Division's examination resulted in a referral to the Criminal Investigation Division based on unreported income by the taxpayer. The estimated completion date is December 1988.
24	Inurement based on the fact that the minister's retirement fund equals the organization's assets.	The EP/EO Division has completed the examination which was begun based on information from a State attorney general in March 1987. The case was settled. The exemption was terminated and the case closed.
25	Inurement, private benefit, unreported income	The exempt organizations cases are currently in the national office for technical advice. The other cases (individuals and taxable organizations) are pending in the Appeals Division. A tentative agreement on a settlement proposal has been reached. The estimated closing date is December 1988.
26	Inurement; private benefit; allocation of expenses	Examination of form 1040 initiated as a TCMP pickup. Issues involve use of "church" assets by the minister. Estimated completion date is March 1989.
27	Nonpayment of taxes	After making a series of payments toward tax liability on forms 941 and 1120, the organization ceased all further contact with collection personnel. Collection activity is in progress. Taxpayer has reduced its outstanding balance substantially in the last 3 mo. The estimated completion date is March 1989.
28	Nonpayment of employment and income taxes; fraud potential, both individual and corporate.	This case was initiated as a result of nonpayment of taxes due on form 941. It is currently in collection but a referral to Examination Division is pending and informal contact has been made with the Criminal Investigation Division. Collection activity is in progress. The estimated completion date is December 1988.
29	Other income; miscellaneous expenses	This is an Office Examination case of a computer selected 1986 form 1040. The taxpayer was contacted by letter in June 1988. No interview has been conducted as of this time. The estimated completion date is June 1989.

THE POSTAL REORGANIZATION ACT

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I am joined by WILLIAM D. FORD of Michigan, chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service as well as every member of that committee to assure that the intent and the spirit of the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 is fully implemented and beyond compromise. The bill I am introducing amends the act to provide that the financial transactions of the U.S. Postal Service shall not be included within either the President's budget or the Congressional budget and shall not be counted in calculating the Federal deficit.

The effect of this bill will be to move the U.S. Postal Service or, more specifically, the Postal Service Fund, off budget, a status which it held for most of the fiscal years between 1974 and 1985.

This bill is similar to H.R. 4150 which WILLIAM D. FORD of Michigan, chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service introduced in the 100th Congress. The primary difference is that this bill does not provide for an increase in the statutory borrowing authority of the U.S. Postal Service. That the legislative measure I propose has deep and broad bipartisan support is aptly demonstrated by the overwhelming 390 to 16 margin by which H.R. 4150 passed the House.

This legislation is absolutely essential. Congress established the U.S. Postal Service as a break-even, self-sustaining, and fee-for-service entity to be operated in a businesslike manner under the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970. In so doing, Congress conferred upon the U.S. Postal Service certain management authority. Included within the scope of this management authority is the authority to allocate its revenues and arrange its spending priorities so that it can effectively and efficiently fulfill the postal mandate set forth in article I, section 8, clause 7 of the U.S. Constitution.

The management authority granted by Congress was, in effect, infringed in 1985, when the Office of Management and Budget [OMB] unilaterally placed the Postal Service Fund on budget through some form of administrative action. As a direct result of being on budget and therefore subject to the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, the U.S. Postal Service was forced to severely reduce its spending without regard or reference to business considerations such as the effect on patron services and plans for modernization and building. Postal management was prevented from "managing."

To those who argue that the U.S. Postal Service must be included in the President's budget and the Congressional budget because the Federal budget must be unified and accurately reflect the overall operations of the Federal Government, I respond that including the Postal Service Fund in the Federal budget actually distorts the overall picture. This distortion derives from the fact that, in connection with funds for capital improvement, the U.S. Postal Service operates on an accrual accounting basis while the Federal budget is designed on a cash accounting basis. Consequently, dollars spent for capital improvements are deemed by the U.S. Postal Service to be dollars invested for a longer term business objective or benefit. Under the Federal budget, however, these same dollars are deemed to be operating losses and, therefore, deemed to contribute to the Federal deficit.

To those who argue that there are other Government entities which would also have a claim to being off budget, I respond that most of those entities are Federal credit instrumentalities which provide funding for certain legislatively mandated activities. However, the budgets of these entities do not involve significant capital investment activities, such as large-scale construction and high technology automation, similar to those of the U.S. Postal Service.

I emphasize that the amendment proposed in this bill is neither new or revolutionary. This proposal will simply give practical effect to the intent of the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 and assure that the U.S. Postal Service functions in the manner which is consistent with the will of Congress rather than in a manner set by Executive fiat.

The text of the bill is as follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Postal Reorganization Act Amendments of 1989".

SEC. 2. BUDGETARY TREATMENT OF THE POSTAL SERVICE FUND.

(a) TREATMENT OF THE POSTAL SERVICE FUND.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 20 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 2009 the following:

"§ 2009a. Budgetary treatment of the Postal Service Fund

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the receipts and disbursements of the Postal Service Fund, including disbursements for administrative expenses incurred in connection with the Fund—

"(1) shall not be included in the totals of—

"(A) the budget of the United States Government as submitted by the President, or

"(B) the congressional budget (including allocations of budget authority and outlays provided therein);

"(2) shall be exempt from any general budget limitation imposed by statute on expenditures and net lending (budget outlays) of the United States Government; and

"(3) shall be exempt from any order issued under part C of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, ans shall not be counted for purposes of calculating the deficit under section 3(6) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 for purposes of comparison with the maximum deficit amount under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 nor counted in calculating the excess deficit for purposes of sections 251 and 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, for any fiscal year.".

(2) CHAPTER ANALYSIS.—The analysis for chapter 20 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 2009 the following:

"2009a. Budgetary treatment of the Postal Service Fund.".

(b) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in any amendment made by subsection (a) shall be considered to diminish the oversight responsibilities of the Congress under law, rule, or regulation with resepct to the budget of the United States Postal Service.

(c) APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to budgets for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1989.

WE SHOULD RESTORE THE TAX DEDUCTION FOR IRA'S

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, to restore the deduction for contributions to individual retirement accounts [IRA's].

When Congress established the IRA incentive for retirement savings in 1981, it was taking an important step to encourage Americans to provide for their own security. The IRA concept leads us away from reliance on Government-sponsored Social Security. It also fills an important role by providing Americans with the flexibility to establish funds which respond to their own particular needs. Americans have made it clear that they like the idea of maintaining individual plans, and that they have confidence in their abilities to provide for the future.

Not only do IRA's benefit individual Americans—they also benefit the national economy. By encouraging long-term savings, IRA's help form the underpinnings of our economy in providing for needed capital formation. Indeed, incentives for savings should be expanded, not further restricted.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986, which I did not support in its final form, reduced or eliminated tax deferrals for contributions to IRA's for any employee who is an active participant—or who has a spouse who is an active participant—in an employer-sponsored retirement plan unless the tax filing unit's AGI falls below a specific limit. My bill would restore the tax treatment accorded to IRA's prior to enactment of tax reform.

Like many of my colleagues, my office has been flooded with mail from constituents appealing for this restoration of IRA deductability. I strongly urge my colleagues to join with me in sponsoring this measure.

WILEY A BRANTON, CIVIL RIGHTS LEADER, ATTORNEY, LAW SCHOOL DEAN

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to the life and work of Wiley A. Branton, civil rights leader, attorney, and former dean of the Howard University School of Law, who died on December 18, 1988, in the District of Columbia.

A native of Pine Bluff, AR, Wiley Branton completed Arkansas AM&N College before becoming one of the first black graduates of the University of Arkansas School of Law.

Wiley Branton served this country's civil rights movement in numerous ways, including as defense counsel for southern blacks accused of crimes in Pine Bluff, director of the Atlanta-based voter education project that was designed to increase voter registration of blacks, and executive secretary to President Johnson's Council on Equal Opportunities.

It was in 1957 that Wiley A. Branton served as the principal attorney that represented the nine children who integrated Central High School in Little Rock. AK. Wiley A. Branton served as special assistant under two U.S. Attorneys General from 1965 to 1967, those important years of change. In 1967, Wiley Branton was appointed executive director of the United Planning Organization in the District of Columbia.

His life has contributed to the growth and development of those around him in many ways. In 1977, Wiley Branton become the eighth dean of Howard University School of Law, where he served until 1983. And in 1983, he joined the Washington office of Sidley and Austin, a Chicago-based law firm in which he was a partner at the time of his death.

Over the years Wiley A. Branton received numerous honors, including the C. Francis Stratford Award from the National Bar Association, 1958; the Henry W. Edgerton Civil Liberties Award from the Civil Liberties Union, 1977; the Charles H. Houston Medallion of Merit from the Washington Bar Association, 1978; the Lawyer of the Year Award from the Bar Association of the District of Columbia, 1986; the Whitney North Seymour Award from the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under the Law, 1987; and the Martin Luther King, Jr., Leadership Award from the District of Columbia Public Library, 1988.

To his wife, Lucille, and his five children, we extend our condolences but also our gratitude for sharing this great humanitarian with all of us for these many years.

Wiley A. Branton has earned the respect, admiration and lasting friendship of all for his courageous, resolute dedication and unselfish efforts in forging new paths in our society. We shall miss him but we will never forget him.

NEWMAN E. WAIT, WORLD WAR I DRIVER, CELEBRATES 97TH BIRTHDAY

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in inviting members of this House to join me in paying tribute to Newman E. Wait of Gansevoort, NY, a great American.

As we approach the end of the 20th century, there are fewer and fewer surviving witnesses to that first tragic, brutal war that consumed the entire world in its fury and changed western civilization forever. Mr. Wait, a World War I veteran and outstanding citizen in my district, is such a witness.

Logistics play an important role in modern warfare, and Mr. Wait played an important part in that role. Even before America's formal entry in World War I, Mr. Wait made his way to France to volunteer his services. When America finally entered the war in 1917, Mr. Wait enlisted and served as a driver with "Groupe Robinson, Reserve Mallet" during some of the bloodiest battles of the war, including the Aisne and Marne Defensives, and the Somme Offenses. He came home with eight bronze stars on his Victory Medal.

Service to his country was quickly followed by service to his community. For 47 years he was president of Adirondack Trust Bank in Saratoga Springs, making that institution a pillar of integrity and trust, an institution still led by his heir, Charles V. Wait.

On March 7, Mr. Wait will celebrate his 97th birthday. On Saturday, March 4, family and friends gathered in his hometown of Gansevoort to celebrate with him. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and other Members to join me in saluting Mr. Newman E. Wait, American patriot, community leader, and beloved family man.

THE MONRONEY AMENDMENT RESTORATION ACT OF 1989

HON. ALBERT G. BUSTAMANTE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, again I am introducing in this first session of the 101st Congress legislation that will restore full coverage of the Monroney amendment prevailing wage system for Federal employees.

The Monroney amendment Restoration Act of 1989 is similar to legislation I introduced last year (H.R. 4145), which was approved by this Chamber as an amendment to the fiscal year 1989 Defense Department authorization bill. Mr. Speaker, you will recall unanimously approved the amendment when the Defense authorization bill received floor consideration. However, the measure failed to survive a conference with the Senate because of that Chamber's objections to so-called labor legislation in a Defense Department bill. Seldom does the other body object to legislation on the grounds of germaneness, but the Senate's objections prevailed when this provision in the Defense Department authorization bill was debated in conference.

What this bill does is to correct an inequity contained in the fiscal year 1986 Defense authorization bill which exempted prevailing wages to DOD civilian employees under the wage compensation system established by what is known as the Monroney amendment.

The Monroney amendment was enacted under Public Law 90–560 in 1968. The purpose of this legislation is to provide a fair basis for fixing and adjusting the pay of Federal blue-collar workers assigned to specialized positions. It recognized that the Federal Government has an obligation to "make fair and relevant wage comparisons for Federal blue-collar employees whose skills and training do not compare with private enterprise jobs in the locality where they are working."

Under the Monroney amendment, Federal agencies are required to "determine whether there exists in the local wage area a number of comparable positions in private industry sufficient to establish wage schedules and rates for principal types of positions for which the survey is made * * *." If Federal agencies find that the number of comparable positions are insufficient, they must set wages on the basis of both local private sector rates and rates paid for comparable positions in the nearest wage area with similar employment and industrial characteristics. In certain cases, it is necessary to import wage data from outside the local wage area in order to make a fair and relevant wage comparison for a Federal blue-collar employee whose skills, training, and competence do not compare with a private enterprise job in the same locality.

Monroney amendment prevailing wage determinations applied to all Federal civilian employees through 1985. In that year Congress adopted a Defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1986 containing language that exempted all Department of Defense blue-collar workers from the Monroney amendment. The proposal to exempt DOD employees was introduced as an amendment to the 1986 DOD Authorization Act during its consideration by the Senate Armed Services Committee. There was no debate on the repeal. No justification was provided to explain why DOD should be the only agency exempt from the provisions of the Monroney amendment.

This unfair discrimination of DOD civilian employees has had a negative impact on the civilian employees at Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio, part of which I represent. As of last year, blue-collar employees at Kelly Air Force Base lost, on average, 55 cents per hour in their pay. Yet, just across town, employees at the Audie Murphy Veterans Hospital receive full wages established under the Monroney amendment prevailing rate determination system.

The Monroney amendment will correct the present inequity. DOD civilian employees are no better and no worse than employees in other Federal agencies. They deserve to be treated under the same basic wage determination system used by non-DOD agencies.

This bill restores fairness to the wage determination system for all classes of Federal employees working in the Department of Defense, and I invite my colleagues who share my concerns for equity and fairness to join me in supporting this bill.

THE GLOBAL ENVIRONMENT RESEARCH AND POLICY ACT OF 1989

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, along with nine cosponsors, the Global Environment Research and Policy Act of 1989. This bill will improve our understanding of the significant global environmental changes we are now witnessing by providing for a national global change research plan. Furthermore, this bill will encourage development of a coordinated national policy to abate, mitigate, and adapt to the effects of these changes through the creation of Council on Global Environmental Policy [CGEP]. Finally, this bill will amend the National Environmental Policy Act [NEPA] to take into consideration the impact of major Federal actions on the global environment.

Title I of the bill directs all Federal agencies involved to coordinate their scientific research activities. By developing a coordinated research plan, we will enhance our understanding of the Earth system on a global scale, improve our capability to predict natural or human induced changes and, most importantly, provide the best scientific information on which we can develop necessary and responsible policy decisions.

Title I is similar in concept to S. 169, a bill recently introduced by Sentor HOLLINGS, the chairman of the Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee and one of the Senate leaders, along with Senators GORE and WIRTH, on the issue of global climate change.

Title II establishes the CGEP which shall initiate, coordinate, and recommend domestic and international global environmental programs, studies, and policies taking into consideration the findings and recommendations of the national global change research plan.

Title III amends NEPA to clarify its application to major Federal actions affecting the global environment including the impact on the oceans, the atmosphere, and other aspects of the global environment.

Last summer, a severe drought devastated the Midwest resulting in an estimated $13 billion in lost farm production alone. Last September, hurricane Gilbert ravaged the Caribbean. Human casualties were estimated in the hundreds. Estimates for economic loss for all nations affected by hurricane Gilbert range between $10 and $12 billion.

These events are stark and current reminders of our need to understand the Earth system and the impact humankind has on its delicate dynamic. Separating natural variability from changes induced by human activities presents a great challenge to science. My bill meets this challenge by facilitiating the coordination of the best scientific capabilities of the U.S. Government in a 10-year research plan.

There is a consensus in the international scientific community that humanity, in the next generations, will face potentially severe problems of adaptation to global warming and sea level rise.

Evidence of systematic increases in greenhouse gases such as carbon dioxide, methane, nitrous oxide, and the chloroflourocarbons [CFC's] is well documented. Observational evidence of a rise in the height of sea levels is also a well accepted fact.

The greenhouse effect as a contributing mechanism to global warming has long been understood by the scientific community. The so-called greenhouse gases absorb radiation from the Sun and the Earth, blocking the escape of energy into space, and hence, warming the lower layers of the atmosphere. The steady input of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere, recorded for the last 30 years, will double sometime before the middle of the next century. The effect of other greenhouse gases such as methane, nitrous oxide, and CFC's has proven to be cumulative, furthering the greenhouse effect. Methane input continues to rise by 1 percent a year. The recent Montreal protocol, addressing the ozone depletion problem, succeeded in restricting—but by no means eliminating—the input of CFC's into the atmosphere.

The oceans are a very important component of the integrated Earth climate system. The oceans' unique role results from their ability to store heat and to take up carbon dioxide from the atmosphere. Scientific attention should continue to focus on the interaction of the ocean and other components of the system. An effective national program in global environmental change must include a strong focus on the interaction of the oceans and other components of the system. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Fleet Modernization Act of 1989, which I introduced on February 7, 1989, provides for the fleet capability and the scientific equipment needed in carrying out the objectives of the national global research plan mandated in this act.

The global mean temperature is now as high as it has been since the last glaciation, about 18,000 years ago. Although we cannot ascertain that the greenhouse effect is responsible for the current warming trend, some scientists are ready to state with a large degree of confidence that current temperatures represent a real warming rather than a natural fluctuation. However, scientific consensus has not been reached over whether we are in fact witnessing global warming due to the human-induced greenhouse effect or to natural variability. Furthering scientific consensus on climate change is the foremost reason for pursuing this Federal research effort.

As chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I am particularly concerned about the profound effects global warming will have on marine living resources. Biological production and distribution of fisheries will be notably altered with uncertain implications for the economies of both coastal and inland regions. In addition, the rise of sea levels will bring flooding to many coastal areas. Even small increases in sea level pose a considerable threat to low-lying communities and ecosystems including the barrier islands of North Carolina, the coasts of Florida, and the Mississippi delta. Beach erosion, wetland destruction, and flooding of coastal structures are problems which will require adequate solutions, based on sound scientific knowledge.

Since the beginning of the industrial revolution, human activities such as fossil fuel burning, industrial practices, agriculture, and land use patterns must be regarded as active elements in the global environment. However, the cumulative effect of these activities is not fully understood. Responsible policy decisions addressing the consequences of global change can only be formulated with reliable scientific information. The questions that need to be addressed are not simple. They require the understanding of the whole Earth as one integrated and dynamic system. This formidable scientific challenge will require the concerted effort of some of our Nation's most innovative scientific capabilities.

Collaboration among scientists from diverse disciplines is essential if we are to understand the complex interactions of ocean, atmosphere, ice, solid earth, and biological systems. Research will require the use of the most advanced technology in ocean-going vessels, supercomputers satellites, and remote sensing instruments. Data management systems capable of processing, storing, and distributing the information collected will be of central importance. International collaboration will be necessary to collect the essential global observations. Cooperative efforts are currently underway. Attention has centered on two scientific research programs: The International Geosphere Biosphere Program [IGBP] developed by the International Council of Scientific Unions [ICSU] and the World Climate Research Program sponsored jointly by the World Meteorological Organization [WMO], the United Nation's Environment Program [UNEP], and ICSU.

The United Nations has moved from addressing the scientific issues to examining the wider policy implications of global change. Last year UNEP and WMO set up the intergovernmental panel on climate change [IPCC]. The IPCC set up three working groups to explore the: First, scientific issues, second, potential impacts, and third, response strategies of global environmental change. Last week the working group on response strategies, chaired by the United States, met in Washington, DC.

The Federal Government in recent years has spent millions of dollars on global change research. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the National Science Foundation, the National Aeronautic and Space Administration, the Environmental Protection Agency, the U.S. Geological Survey, and the Departments of Agriculture, Defense, and Energy conduct research in different global climate areas within their respective missions. As this Nation's realization of the imperative need for global change research continues to grow, so will the appropriations for these programs. Institutional coordination and budgetary efficiency are essential if this array of research efforts is to be pooled together to solve one of humanity's most compelling scientific challenges.

Title I of my bill directs the Federal Coordinating Council for Science, Engineering, and Technology [FCCSET] to develop a 10-year plan to coordinate scientific efforts and budgetary resources of numerous Federal agencies into a unified global science program. In addition, title I requires FCCSET, in carrying out its reponsibilities to:

Develop goals and priorities which will advance scientific understanding and provide a basis for policy decisions;

Define the role of each Federal agency and department in implementing the plan;

Describe the levels of Federal funding, and specific activities required to achieve the goals and priorities of the plan;

Review, prior to the President's budget submission, each agency budget in the context of the plan and make the results available to each agency and to the Office of Management and Budget;

Coordinate the Federal effort with the National Research Council and with other national and international research initiatives; and Submit progress reports periodically to Congress on the implementation of the plan.

The plan is to be implemented by the Federal agencies and shall include national global change research policy recommendations and proposals for the implementation of that research policy through legislative and regulatory changes.

Title II establishes the CGEP as an Executive Office of the President to be chaired by the Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality [CEQ] and composed of members from different Federal agencies and the Chairman of FCCSET. This Council shall analyze and recommend national policies to abate, mitigate and adapt to the impacts of global environmental change. In addition, CGEP shall:

Coordinate and initiate Federal studies on economic and social impacts of global environmental change;

Incorporate in its policy decisions the findings of the national global change research plan;

Provide recommendations to FCCSET on policy goals and objectives which most effectively provide a basis for global environmental policy decisions;

Collect and analyze data and information on social, economic, and environmental impacts of global environmental change and related policy; and,

Submit to Congress, after 5 years, and periodically thereafter, a comprehensive national program in response to the impacts of global environmental change;

On January 9, 1989, the Washington Post reported that the Council on Environmental Quality was prevented by the Reagan White House from issuing a regulation calling for consideration of the greenhouse effect when Federal agencies assess the environmental impact of their actions. Title III of my bill makes it clear that federal agencies must assess the effects of their action on the global environment.

In view of the present uncertainties in our knowledge of global climate change, scientific understanding of the whole Earth system should be a national priority. Furthermore, the result of this formidable research effort should be incorporated into a comprehensive national global enviromental policy. The success of the global climate change research program lies in a concerted effort at the national and international level. Our challenge will not stop with the scientific understanding of the problems that lie ahead. We must develop the institutional capacity to effectively incorporate scientific discoveries into national policy at all levels. My bill is an attempt to develop a coordinated Federal research program and institute a central policy coordinating body sensitive to the findings of the research plan and to emerging needs of different agencies and sectors of our society.

Any of my colleagues who wish to obtain a copy of the Global Environment Research and Policy Act of 1989 or to cosponsor it should contact the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries at 226–2460.

IN SUPPORT OF THE PUYALLUP INDIAN SETTLEMENT

HON. NORMAN D. DICKS

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, today, I take great pride in joining my colleagues from the State of Washington in introducing the Puyallup Indian settlement bill. This legislation culminates over 4 years of persevering efforts by dedicated participants from a variety of interests. The introduction of the Puyallup bill marks a historic moment for the citizens of my congressional district and the State of Washington, and symbolizes the triumphs that are possible when individuals and communities join together to build bridges of cooperation and mutual interest.

I wish to commend the tireless efforts of both the Indian and non-Indian negotiating teams who crafted the settlement agreement and steered it through many difficult moments to reach finality. Particularly, I join the citizens of Tacoma and Pierce County, WA, in offering my gratitude to Puyallup Tribal Chairman Bill Sterud and the members of the tribal council, Jim Waldo, Harry Sachse, Mayor Sutherland, Chris Smith, Ray Corpus, Randy Harrison, Larry Killeen, John Terpstra, John Ladenberg, Lynn Anderson, and several others who have been unwavering in their commitment to this process. I am especially pleased to have had the strong support of Governor Gardner throughout the negotiating process, and am deeply indebted to Senator INOUYE for his active and visible support in encouraging a settlement agreement.

Mr. Speaker, on August 27, 1988, following a two-thirds majority vote of acceptance of the proposed settlement package, a new chapter began between the Puyallup Indian Nation and non-Indian local governments and private interests. Rather than a continuing relationship characterized by division and mistrust, the settlement agreement laid the cornerstone for a relationship to be based on cooperation and mutual benefit.

The history preceding the present settlement is not an easy one for any of the parties. It is a history characterized by a long series of disputes over land and jurisdictional claims relating to such matters as: Ownership of the Commencement Bay tidelands and areas of the former Puyallup riverbed, the perceived or intended boundaries of the the treaty reservation, control of railroad and other rights-of-way, control of the fisheries resource and habitat, jurisdiction over law enforcement, environment, navigation, and authority and control in the areas of land use, and business regulation and zoning.

While one must clearly recognize that the historical grievances that are felt by the tribe and the non-Indian community are of such magnitude and deep-felt nature that parties feel that no agreement can completely redress all perceived injustices from the past. However, what is important is that the various parties have freely through their own will and efforts, chosen to fashion a settlement of tribal claims that holds the promise of a better and brighter tomorrow for all involved. The agreement ensures the avoidance of lengthy and divisive litigation, which would be costly and damaging to the community.

The Puyallup settlement bill that I am introducing today, is the next critical stage in ensuring that the terms laid out in the Puyallup settlement are implemented, and that the Federal share of the package is made available. Through participation in significant historical acts that have given rise to the present circumstances, the Federal Government is a responsible party to all matters that have been disputed between the Puyallup Tribe and non-Indians, and should rightfully contribute to the resources necessary to implement the settlement agreement. However, the Federal share of the settlement is under 50 percent, as set forth in its cost-sharing arrangements.

As indicated in the provisions of both the bill and the settlement, both the Indian and non-Indian recipients will receive immediate and long-term tangible benefits from the agreement. Overall, the package contains $111 million in direct benefits to the membership of the Puyallup Tribe. Within the benefit package, the tribe is slated to receive approximately 900 acres of land, including forest land, fisheries enhancement, open space lands and commercial properties to produce future income. Additionally, the tribe will receive funds to buy land and pursue economic opportunities aimed at establishing a stable future income.

The direct acquisition of land and financial benefits means that the Puyallup Tribe will be able to enter the 1990's on a firm economic foundation that will promote prosperity and ensure a promising future for its children. The settlement further reinforces the benefits of lands awarded by making allowances for new lands to be placed into trust under the tribe's jurisdiction, thus guaranteeing that the tribe will have an opportunity to expand its land base. Furthermore, the agreement acknowledges and preserves tribal trust ownership of the current bed of the Puyallup River within the 1873 boundaries.

In recognition of the many crucial needs facing the tribal membership, the new agreement includes important provisions aimed at meeting critical social service needs and better protecting the well-being of the members of the Puyallup Nation. Central to this goal of the agreement, a permanent trust fund is established to address the needs of the tribal membership, including: health care, tribal elders care, housing rehabilitation, burial and cemetery maintenance, education and scholarship loans, day care for the tribe's children, and cultural preservation activities.

Because this settlement is one that skillfully balances the concerns of all affected parties, the non-Indian participating entities will also receive many positive benefits from its implementation that will manifest into the 1990's and beyond. Most importantly, non-Indian participants in the agreement will be relieved of any burden caused by lands and properties in dispute. Under the terms of the settlement agreement, the Puyallup Tribe agrees to release its claims to tidelands, former riverbeds, initial reservation, and other land claims. Through another provision of the package, the tribe agrees not to assert governmental control over non-Indian lands, businesses on non-Indian lands, and non-Indian homeowners.

One impact of the settlement that I believe is a truly significant ramification for the future is that it provides for a greater degree of cooperation between the tribe and non-Indian governmental entities on matters that have far-reaching importance to the community. The agreement establishes a cooperative approach for governmental authority and responsibility, including: A system for consultation and dispute resolution for land use matters and environmental concerns, a resolution of navigational conflicts, and an agreement on how future governmental services are to be provided.

Perhaps the most important ramification to emerge from this settlement agreement, is that its implementation will foster a more positive state of relations and knit together more closely the Indian and non-Indian communities. Because of this important settlement, I see in the 1990's a more positive situation, of a community working together, forging ahead, for the good of all concerned.

I urge my colleagues to give their full support toward the passage of this legislation.

A UNIFORM DEFINITION OF GREAT LAKES

HON. ROBERT W. DAVIS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, today I introduce a bill which will provide a single definition for the term "Great Lakes" as used throughout the United States Code, and especially for maritime matters.

Various laws have passed which highlight the role of the Great Lakes. However, the references to the lakes are not uniform, creating some confusion over the coverage of the laws, especially in regard to the important connecting channels. The bill I have authored will clarify the waters encompassed by most references to the Great Lakes. However, I must stress that the intent behind this bill is mainly housekeeping: I do not intend to substantially alter any statutory jurisdiction.

Accordingly, certain violations or departures from this standard definition may be required due to the peculiar circumstances of a given situation or law. For example, there are some legal references to the Great Lakes which are based on treaty provisions or other special agreements. These particular limits, such as those found under the Convention on Great Lakes Fisheries between the United States and Canada (16 U.S.C. chapter 15A), the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea 1972 (33 U.S.C. 2001 et seq.), the Great Lakes Commodities Marketing Board (33 U.S.C. 2309), Great Lakes Pilotage (46 U.S.C. chapter 93), the International Convention on Tonnage Measurement of Ships (46 U.S.C. 14101), are to be preserved.

Although I believe we have exhausted the United States Code for references to the Great Lakes, there may be some instances where additional adjustments may need to be made. I look forward to working with the affected Federal agencies and other interested parties to correct these omissions or errors.

DEPENDENT CARE TAX CREDIT

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today, along with my distinguished colleague, Hon. SILVIO CONTE, that will expand the dependent care tax credit, make it applicable for respite care expense, and make the credit refundable to those whose tax liability does not exceed the credit to which they are otherwise entitled.

The circumstances which have prompted me to offer this legislation since 1983 have not improved. Indeed, the national focus on family needs in recent months has dramatically exposed the critical work and caregiving dilemmas families are facing today. This concern is shared by President Bush, whose dependent care proposal, which I applaud, recommends the same concepts offered in this bill. Both plans seek to provide assistance through the use of an expanded tax credit that is indexed and refundable. I am offering this legislation for passage in the 101st Congress because it is time that we adjust the dependent care tax credit to better assist families as they try to balance competing work and caregiving demands.

Dependent care expenses fall most heavily on working persons, especially working mothers, who must provide for the care of dependent children while having to devote primary portions of their day to earning a living. Studies show that 53 percent of women with children under the age of 6 are working outside the home. Of the women who are heads of household with children under 6 years old, 57.6 percent are working outside the home.

Providing adequate care for elderly dependents is an equally important concern. Often women who are responsible for their children also face the responsibility of caring for their aging parents. In a study done by the Geriatric Center of Philadelphia, 28 percent of nonworking caregivers had quit their jobs in order to meet caregiving responsibilities while 26 percent of working caregivers had contemplated having to quit for the same reason. One out of ten middle-aged women—45–65 years—is responsible for the care of an older relative. It is clear that respite care is an extremely vital service, the use of which can help caregivers avoid the dilemma of having to choose between giving up their careers or institutionalizing an elder family member at great financial expense.

The current dependent care tax credit is available to taxpayers who incur work-related expenses for the care of a child under age 15, a disabled spouse, or any other dependent who is physically or mentally incapable of caring for him or herself. In 1981, Congress replaced the previous flat rate credit for dependent care with a sliding scale that focused the maximum benefit of the credit on lower income households. The scale currently allows a 30-percent credit for work related dependent care expenditures up to $2,400 for taxpayers with incomes of $10,000 or less; the credit is reduced by 1 percentage point for each $2,000 of income between $10,000 and $28,000 to a minimum of 20 percent. Currently a family earning $10,000 a year would have to pay $2,400 a year, nearly one-fourth of its income, to receive the maximum credit of the $720. It should be noted that under present tax laws, a 1988 family with an income at $10,000 or less would probably not have the tax liability necessary to claim the credit, and therefore, would not receive the benefit.

The dependent care tax credit expansion I propose addresses the increased needs and costs relative to dependent care and respite care by expanding the credit to more realistically reflect present tax liability levels. The tax liability threshold for a head of household with one dependent is $12,380; the threshold for a married couple with one dependent is $13,914. Under my proposal, the sliding scale would be raised to 50 percent of work related dependent care expenditures for families earning $15,000 or less. The scale would be reduced by 1 percentage point for each full $1,000 of income, with persons earning $45,000 or more receiving a credit of 20 percent. In addition, the dependent care tax credit would be indexed to the cost of living and be made refundable so that those families with incomes too low to have a tax liability or whose credit exceeds their tax liability would have access to the credit. Currently, 91 percent of all claims are made by families with incomes greater than $10,000 a year. A refundable tax credit that is indexed to the cost of living will ensure that lower income families have the same access to the credit that middle and higher income families do, and who now derive considerable benefit from the credit.

Finally, this legislation offers relief from the expense of respite care. This legislation would allow a credit on up to $1,200 for one qualifying dependent and $2,400 for two qualifying dependents for respite care expense. A caregiver would be able to either hire someone to come to the home to care for the elderly dependent for a few hours a day or week, or could bring that dependent to an adult day care center. My proposal would also permit up to a 2-week stay in an institution in order for the caregiver to tend to other personal or family affairs. A credit on expenses incurred for respite care would be available without regard to the caregiver's employment status.

Respite care credit is a part of this legislation that should be highlighted. Studies show that 80 to 90 percent of all medically related care, personal care, household maintenance, transportation, and shopping needs required by elderly persons is provided by their families. The role of the primary caregiver is often a female family member, who gets caught between meeting the needs of her children and her aging parents, causing this woman and others in similar situations to be viewed as part of the "sandwich generation." The magnitude of the strain that can develop in circumstances like these is both physical and financial. The dilemma of balancing work and caregiving needs has become so widespread a condition of family life that it requires national attention in the form of some assistance. A respite care credit will offer assistance to care-givers that will save dollars for both families and for the Government through postponement or avoidance of expensive institutionalizations. Further, it is an important way to address the needs of elderly citizens, the fastest growing and increasingly vulnerable segment of our Nation's population.

The dependent care and respite care tax credit provisions of this bill offer a thoughtful, prudent, and compassionate approach to helping families provide for their loved ones. I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort by supporting this important piece of legislation.

UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleagues to join with me in commemorating the 71st anniversary of Ukrainian Independence Day. On January 22, Ukrainians around the world remembered their moment of freedom in 1918 when the Ukraine declared its independence and its right to self-determination.

The formation of the Ukrainian National Republic 71 years ago signified an important step in the history of the Ukrainian people as they have struggled to assert their identity and their beliefs while under foreign domination. Although many years have passed since this declaration, the memory of this day still lives in the hearts of all Ukrainians. From the first, the new nation struggled to hold onto its newfound freedom, battered by armies from the east and west. Despite a valiant effort, the Ukrainian National Republic was crushed by the Communist Russians in the summer of 1920.

Several years later, in 1932–33, the Ukrainian people would experience yet another setback—a tragedy that must not be forgotten. Over 7 million Ukrainians were starved to death because of the Stalin policy of collectivization—a policy designed to suppress the nationalistic dreams of the Ukrainian people. I was pleased to have authored, with Senator BRADLEY, the law that created the Congressional Commission on the Ukraine Famine. Last summer, I joined Senator BRADLEY in working to pass the legislation to extend the life of this important Commission so that its work could be completed.

Although some of us are aware of this great tragedy inflicted on the Ukrainian people, this has been, for the most part, a silent chapter in the history books. The Congressional Commission hopes to change this by their report on the famine. The report issued last summer draws from the many months of research and the many hearings conducted by the Ukraine Famine Commission. I am hopeful that this report will be circulated widely and that soon, our schools will ensure that students learn about this tragedy as they learn about so many other similar tragedies. It is only with knowledge that we can combat the ignorance that produces crimes against humanity.

Despite famines and persecutions, despite the curtailment of their civil liberties, and despite the injustices they have been subjected to, the Ukrainian people continue to display courage and perseverance and have not given up the hope that, one day, they too will breathe the air of freedom. In this period of glasnost, I hope that this new thinking will also include the people of the Ukraine. It is important that we, in Congress, continue to stress the need for addressing the valid concerns of this brave community.

As the famous Ukrainian poet Taras Schevchenko said, "Our souls will never perish, freedom knows no dying." May the hope of freedom for the Ukrainian people never die and may their quest for independence be successful.

ESTHER M. DUNNEGAN—A SALUTE TO EXCELLENCE IN EDUCATION

HON. DAVID E. PRICE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Esther M. Dunnegan of Morrisville who has recently been named North Carolina's National Endowment for the Humanities/Reader's Digest Teacher-Scholar for 1989.

Ms. Dunnegan, a social studies teacher at Athens Drive High School in Raleigh, is one of 53 teachers chosen by the NEH and Reader's Digest for a year of independent study in the humanities. She will study the historical and modern influence of Islam on the cultures of Nigeria, Pakistan, Malaysia, Trinidad, and Egypt.

Too often, good teachers must struggle to devote adequate time to explore the disciplines they teach. I am pleased to see the National Endowment for the Humanities provide teachers the opportunity to expand their knowledge in a given discipline by supporting a full year of self-directed academic study in the humanities. This program is a fine example of the public-private partnerships actively working to improve public education. NEH is to be commended for its continuing commitment to improving the quality of teaching and research in the humanities.

We in the Fourth District of North Carolina are proud of Ms. Dunnegan. This honor is not only a reflection of her dedication to learning, but a reflection of the high standards of teaching in the Wake County school system. I wish her the best of luck and continued success in her endeavors.

A SALUTE TO LT. MONTEL B. WILLIAMS AND "REACH"—THE AMERICAN DREAM

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, as you know, during the month of February our Nation celebrates Black History Month. Programs and events are being held throughout the country to commemorate the occasion. In my congressional district, the Cleveland Public School System will sponsor a number of programs featuring Navy Lt. Montel Williams. This dynamic black leader has a power-packed message for our Nation's young people. It is a distinct honor and privilege for me to join the 21st Congressional District in welcoming Lieutenant Williams to Cleveland.

In just a few days, schoolchildren, teachers, parents and business leaders will hear this young man deliver motivating speeches and challenge youth to achieve. Lieutenant Williams, a special-duty intelligence officer, is on a mission to motivate children to stay in school. His message is simple: "Stay in school. Go to college. Stay off drugs. And most important, you can be a success."

It all began in January 1988 when Williams was tapped by the Navy's Minority Officer Recruitment Efforts [MORE] to serve as a recruiter. He agreed on the condition that he be given an opportunity to speak to the college-age audience about education and obstacles. The response to Lieutenant Williams' presentations has been overwhelming. He has spoken to more than 250,000 schoolchildren and 10,000 teachers, business and civic leaders from Los Angeles to Washington, DC. He has a unique gift for inspiring and motivating people of all ages and interests, and his message transcends race and socioeconomic backgrounds.

Lieutenant Williams doesn't stop at speaking engagements, however. He has designed an entire nonprofit organization around the notion of inspiring children and reversing the negative trends that affect youth. REACH the American dream seeks to encourage children to reach for their highest potential, to inspire family and community members to reach out to one another in a spirit of caring cooperation; and to challenge corporate citizens toward greater levels of commitment and involvement with schools and local programs. The nonprofit organization is enjoying great success.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to share highlights of Lieutenant Williams' distinguished career with my colleagues. He grew up in the suburb of Glen Burnie, MD, and was elected president of his class at Andover High School. Upon graduation, Williams enlisted in the U.S. Marine Corps where in 6 months he was meritoriously promoted twice and selected to attend the Naval Academy Prep School in Newport, RI. Lieutenant Williams was the first black marine selected to attend the Naval Academy Prep School and entered as one of 40 marines in 1976. Of those 40 original marines, Lieutenant Williams was one of four who graduated.

Upon commissioning in 1980, Lieutenant Williams was stationed on Guam where he served as a communications officer and direct support division officer. From 1982–83, Williams studied and obtained a degree in the Russian language at the Defense Language Institute in Monterey, CA. He was then stationed at Fort George G. Mead, MD, and served onboard the U.S.S. Sampson during the United States invasion of Grenada. While ashore, he served as the operations officer for the fleet support division, and also as the director of a special operations division which supports U.S. operations in the Persian Gulf. Lieutenant Williams is currently assigned to the Commander in Chief, U.S. Atlantic Fleet Staff, and works for the director of cryptology.

Since commissioning, Lieutenant Williams has been the recipient of numerous awards for his dedication and hard work. He has been awarded the Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal, two Navy Expeditionary Medals, one Humanitarian Service Medal, one Navy Achievement Medal, two Navy Commendations Medals, a Meritorious Service Medal and several other unit and service awards.

Lieutenant Montel Williams is fond of saying, while pointing to his audience, that education is the key to their success. And success, he notes, wears a number of uniforms, from military threads to Polo pinstripes. "The more role models we can identify and draw the kids attention to," he says, "the more options they see for themselves."

Mr. Speaker, Lieutenant Williams is an excellent role model, a charismatic speaker and a very personable young man. We are delighted to have him participate in our Black History Month celebration and welcome him to the 21st Congressional District.

A SALUTE TO LYNNE GOLDMAN WEINGARTEN

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my affection and admiration for a dear friend who will celebrate her 50th birthday on Valentine's Day. Lynne Goldman Weingarten has a host of fans who love her for her generous and compassionate nature, for her wonderful sense of humor and for her steadfast devotion and loyalty. I am proud to count myself among her friends.

Throughout her outstanding career as an educator and family therapist, Lynne has distinguished herself for her devoted service to humanity. As a counselor at Beverly Hills High, she has been a steadfast presence to help her young charges with their problems and their plans.

Her service with the Wellness Community of Santa Monica has helped countless families to deal with the joy of life and the determination to live it to its fullest. All of those fortunate enough to know Lynne have been personally enriched by her ability to communicate the great lessons she has learned in this selfless service.

In addition to the demands of her career, Lynne has volunteered countless hours of work for Hebrew University, the Maple Center for families in crisis, Planned Parenthood and One Voice. Her efforts for these organizations are yet another demonstration of her tireless gifts of time and energy to improve the well-being of her community. She has opened her home to help the poor, the disadvantaged, the homeless and the traumatized.

Lynne is the beloved daughter of two of Los Angeles' most distinguished citizens, Harvey and Lillian Silbert. She is the attentive and devoted mother of two beautiful daughters, Jill and Gina.

I am personally grateful to Lynne, not only for her shining example of how life ought to be lived, but for her gracious generosity in hosting a most special occasion in my life. My wife, Janis, and I were married in Lynne's home, and will forever remember the love and joy that she brought to that wonderful day.

I speak today for a legion of friends and family in paying tribute to Lynne Goldman Weingarten and ask my colleagues to join me in saluting this remarkable woman. Happy birthday, Lynne, and many, many happy returns of this joyous day.

COMMEMORATING NATIONAL VISITING NURSES ASSOCIATION WEEK

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the Visiting Nurses Associations of western Massachusetts. During the week of February 19–25, the Visiting Nurses Association will be celebrating National Visiting Nurses Association Week in recognition of their outstanding service to our communities.

For more than 100 years, the Visiting Nurses Association has provided quality home health care to all needy persons requiring their specialized services. By coming into the home to care for ill and disabled individuals, visiting nurses provide assistance on a variety of problems created by a family member's illness.

These dedicated nurses allow the infirm to seek comfort in their own homes. They provide tremendous services that include home health care, homemaking, meal preparation, shopping, and other domestic duties. Without them, those recovering in their homes would be unable to carry out normal daily activities.

Above all, Mr. Speaker, it's not just the tasks the nurses do for those taken ill, but it's the joy they give to the people they help. A visit often brightens each individual's day and lets them know someone really does care.

I am proud to honor the Visiting Nurses Association on this week commemorating its outstanding service. Its dedication to the needs of ailing people across the Nation deserves our heartfelt appreciation and gratitude.

REMOVING A DISINCENTIVE TO VOTING

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to amend title 28 of the United States Code to provide for an alternative way of selecting jurors for grand and petit juries in each U.S. district court. Under current law, which is basically the Jury Selection and Service Act of 1968, Federal juries are composed of men and women whose names have been culled from voter registration lists or the lists of the actual voters of the political subdivisions within each judicial district or division.

It is essential, in a democracy, that juries be composed of people who represent a cross section of the community. This is an issue of fairness and of individual rights under our constitutional form of government.

At the same time, it is inappropriate that only those citizens who are registered to vote or who actually vote are selected to serve on juries. Service on a jury should be viewed as an essential component of responsible citizenship.

Further, it is fundamentally important for citizens to participate in a democratic form of government. The way for citizens in a democracy to participate is with their votes. Unfortunately, our most recent election marked a new low in the level of voter participation.

Our Nation is the greatest democracy in history. At the same time, the level of voter registration and participation in the United States is nothing short of abysmal, particularly when compared to other western, industrialized democracies.

I am convinced—based not so much on findings explained in volumes of studies and reports, but on my own, often casual conversations with local elected officials, elections and voter registration officials, and ordinary, everyday people—that many Americans do not register to vote because they do not want to serve on juries. In this country, people who have not registered to vote because of a fear of jury service have articulated concerns about inconvenience, including the actual time involved and lost work, expense, and a general reluctance to become involved.

It is clear that people who do not want to serve on juries, do not register to vote. By not voting, these people are not exercising an important right denied to so many others in the world.

Again—and this is a point that deserves to be stressed—in a democratic system of government, it is imperative that juries are a representative cross section of the community. If the possibility of serving on juries is a disincentive to people who want to vote and participate in our elections, we should remove this disincentive.

The legislation I am introducing today will amend the way that the clerks of the Federal district courts develop rolls of those eligible for jury duty. My bill will require the use of substitutes, specifically information compiled by the Social Security Administration and the Internal Revenue Service, for voter registration lists or the lists of actual voters.

In addition, my bill recommends that the States develop their own lists of prospective jurors that are not based on voter registration lists or lists of actual voters. The States should use other sources for compiling names of those to serve on State juries, including records of motor vehicle licenses and registrations, lists of utility customers, and State or local income tax returns.

All citizens, age 18 or older, should be eligible for jury service. We all benefit from the freedoms and rights of American citizens. Thus, all citizens shall contribute to those freedoms and rights by serving on juries, if called. The selection process should not be dependent on identifying prospective jurors based on whether or not a person has exercised his or her right to vote.

I hope you will support this legislation. By eliminating this disincentive to voting, I hope that many more of our fellow citizens will take the time to study the candidates and the issues and then exercise that most precious of rights: the right to vote.

PROFAMILY VALUES

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, on January 23, 16 years after the U.S. Supreme Court overturned Roe versus Wade, thousands of people marched in Washington, DC, to voice their support for the prolife movement in our country and to call for the reversal of the Court's decision.

I met with several people who traveled to the Nation's Capital from the 21st Congressional District in my office, and was encouraged by their commitment to ending the tragic number of abortions that happen every year.

I am hopeful that the statements made by President Bush during the "March for Life" on January 23 will help to continue the ever-growing antiabortion sentiment in this country.

I am also confident that in the coming years the message of a "kinder, gentler nation" will be that of the caring family and adoption for those children who are born unwanted.

I want to thank those people who made their voice heard during this important time, and to lend my support to those who will continue to speak about profamily values in our community.

GEOGRAPHY AWARENESS WEEK

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a resolution which would designate the week of November 12–18, 1989, as "Geography Awareness Week." I am proud to be introducing this legislation along with my esteemed friends and colleagues, Representatives BILL GREEN and DALE KILDEE. This resolution, which was first introduced in the last Congress, is another expression of my strong belief in the importance of foreign language and international education.

During Geography Awareness Week, last year, there were literally thousands of activities across the country focusing on geography and its importance. At this time, I would like to commend the National Geographic Society and its president, Gilbert Grosvenor, for their strong interest in this resolution. The society is again planning many activities this year in connection with Geography Awareness Week, and interest should be even greater this year than last.

Although some progress is being made, there is still considerable evidence for the need to increase our attention to this fundamental subject. The Gallup organization recently released a survey, commissioned by National Geographic, of nearly 11,000 adults in nine countries that was the largest international study of its kind to date. Overall, the survey found that Americans unfortunately ranked below all but two other countries, Italy and Mexico, that participated. Among the specific findings, even with all of our involvement in the Persian Gulf, 75 percent of Americans could not locate that body of water on an unmarked map of the world. Even with our very extensive involvement in Central America and with its proximity to the United States, 45 percent could not locate this region on the map. Also related to Central America, less than half knew in which country the Sandinistas and Contras are struggling for control, with many naming Lebanon, Afghanistan, or Iran. Regarding Africa, only 55 percent could identify South Africa as the nation in which apartheid is official government policy. One particularly disturbing result of the survey was that American young adults fared worse than those of any other participating country and than their post-World War II peers.

This news is not only shocking; it is frightening. We depend on a well-informed populace to maintain the democratic ideals which have made and kept this country great. When 95 percent of some of our brightest college students cannot locate Vietnam on a world map, even after our extensive involvement in that country, we must sound the alarm. When only 25 percent could name four countries that acknowledge having nuclear weapons, we must acknowledge that we are failing to sufficiently educate our citizens to work and live in an increasingly interdependent world. This is especially true when our young people, our future, are even less knowledgeable in geography than are adults.

This ignorance of geography, along with a comparable lack of knowledge of foreign languages and cultures, places the United States at a significant disadvantage with other nations economically, politically, and strategically. We cannot expect to remain a world leader if our populace does not even know who the rest of the world is.

In 1980, a Presidential Commission found that U.S. companies fare poorly against foreign competitors partly because Americans are often ignorant of things beyond our borders. As Gov. Gerald Baliles said in a Southern Governors Association report, "Americans have not responded to a basic fact: the best jobs, largest markets, and greatest profits belong to those who understand the country with which they are doing business."

One of the key themes and tasks for this Congress has been restoring America's competitiveness in a highly complex, rapidly changing world. Improving our knowledge of the geography, language, and culture of other lands is a concrete, attainable, and important goal in the context of international trade and our place in the world economy. It is a substantial way to give content to the "buzzword" of competitiveness.

The understanding necessary to accomplish this, as I have said, can come only from knowledge of the peoples, cultures, resources, and languages of other nations. This is the sort of knowledge that the study of geography seeks to impart. Alarmingly, in spite of this, the discipline of geography has become seriously endangered in this country. Departments of geography are being eliminated from many institutions of higher learning, and less than 10 percent of elementary and secondary school geography teachers have even a minor in the subject.

However, in the midst of these negative indicators, I feel it is very important to note some hopeful signs that geography education is beginning to experience a long-awaited and badly needed resurgence. Among these:

The National Geographic Society has instituted a pilot school program in which schools in different parts of the country establish innovative geography education programs to test their effectiveness.

Two of the schools, Alice Deal Junior High here in Washington and Audubon Junior High in Los Angeles, have won recognition for their programs in national competitions.

At the college level, the University of Tennessee is instituting a requirement that incoming students there have a certain level of knowledge of geography. This is going to cause elementary and secondary schools throughout the State to beef up their geography education programs.

In addition to the declaration of a National Geography Awareness Week, a number of States, including Oregon, Colorado, Alabama, North Carolina, Virginia, and Utah have all instituted such weeks at the State level. These are all important occasions to promote geography education and awareness in each State.

In California, the State Board of Education, after finding that students were sorely lacking in their knowledge of geography, adopted a new, statewide history-social studies framework in which geography will be studied in specific relation to the history and culture of each country, region, and period studied at each level. This is considered a potential landmark step, one that will hopefully initiate a broad movement for improving geography education throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, we are a nation with worldwide involvements. Our global influence and responsibilities demand an understanding of the lands, languages, and cultures of the world. It is for this reason that I strongly urge my colleagues to support this resolution focusing national attention on the integral role that the knowledge of world geography plays in preparing our citizens for the future of our increasingly interdependent, interconnected world. It is my hope that again passing this resolution will be just one more step in a revitalization of the study of geography in this country. All of our citizens should have access to the type of education that will help them appreciate the great beauty and diversity of this Nation, and its place in an even more diverse world.

H.J. RES. —

Whereas geography is the study of people, their environments, and their resources;

Whereas the United States of America is a truly unique nation with diverse landscapes, bountiful resources, a distinctive multiethnic population, and a rich cultural heritage, all of which contribute to the status of the United States as a world power;

Whereas, historically, geography has aided Americans in understanding the wholeness of their vast nation and the great abundance of its natural resources;

Whereas geography today offers perspectives and information in understanding ourselves, our relationship to the Earth, and our interdependence with other peoples of the world;

Whereas statistics illustrate that a significant number of American students could not find the United States on a world map, could not identify Alaska and Texas as the Nation's largest States, and could not name the New England States;

Whereas according to a recent Gallup poll, Americans ranked among the bottom third on an international test of geography knowledge, and those age eighteen to twenty-four came in last;

Whereas geography has been offered to fewer than one in ten United States secondary school students as part of the curriculum;

Whereas departments of geography are being eliminated from American institutes of higher learning, thus endangering the discipline of geography in the United States;

Whereas traditional geography has virtually disappeared from the curricula of American schools while still being taught as a basic subject in other countries, including the United Kingdom, Canada, Japan, and the Soviet Union;

Whereas an ignorance of geography, foreign languages, and cultures places the United States at a disadvantage with other countries in matters of business, politics, and the environment;

Whereas the United States is a nation of worldwide involvements and global influence, the responsibilities of which demand an understanding of the lands, languages, and cultures of the world; and

Whereas one-third of adult Americans can not name four of the sixteen N.A.T.O. member nations, and another one-third can not name any;

Whereas national attention must be focused on the integral role that knowledge of world geography plays in preparing citizens of the United States for the future of an increasing interdependent and interconnected world; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the period commencing November 12, 1989, and ending November 18, 1989, is designated as "Geography Awareness Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

CELEBRATE PRESIDENT'S WASHINGTON AND LINCOLN BY WORKING

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the third Monday in February, the Federal observation of President's Day, would no longer be considered a legal Federal holiday, if a bill I am reintroducing today is enacted.

This legislation is being reintroduced in the 101st Congress for two reasons. First, we need to return to the true meaning of commemorative days, such as President's Day and Columbus Day, by remembering and honoring these Americans for what they contributed and meant to our country and not lessen that emphasis by giving Federal employees an extra day off. Let's face it, the true purpose behind such holidays has become a commercial heyday for retail businesses, in addition to providing 3-day weekends for Federal employees at an enormous cost to our Nation's taxpayers.

Second, the Federal Government could save at least a minimum of $43 million if just the Federal employees in Washington, DC would work on President's Day, instead of having an extra day off. The savings to the Federal Government more than doubles if all Federal employees across the United States would work on this day. These figures do not begin to take into consideration employee productivity and service to the general public.

Mr. Speaker, realizing that this will not be very popular legislation among Federal public employees, I am reminded of the thousands of State and local community employees in my home State of Wisconsin that do not have the luxury of this holiday. Let's join these other public employees, and our counterparts in the private sector that honor our Presidents by working on the third Monday in February.

The following is the text of the bill:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. REMOVAL OF HOLIDAY DESIGNATION.

Section 6103(a) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking the item relating to Washington's Birthday, the third Monday in February.

SEC. 2. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.

(a) REMOVAL OF WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY FROM LIST OF DAYS CONSIDERED LEGAL HOLIDAYS FOR THE PURPOSE OF EXTENDING FILING DEADLINES IN CONTESTED CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.—Section 15(a) of the Federal Contested Election Act (2 U.S.C. 394(a)) is amended by striking "Washington's Birthday,".

(b) RULES OF FEDERAL COURTS AND AGENCIES.—Any provision in the rules of any Federal agency, the Bankruptcy Rules, the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the Rules of the United States Tax Court, the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Rules of the United States Claims Court, or the Rules of the Court of International Trade which treats Washington's Birthday as a legal public holiday shall be of no force or effect whatever.

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the first January 1 that occurs after the 1-year period following the date of the enactment of this Act.

AN OPENING IN THE CYPRUS DISPUTE

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it has been said in recent months that peace seems to be breaking out all over. That may be something of an exaggeration, but there is no doubt that events of the last year or so demonstrate that many world leaders sense a greater urgency about resolving longstanding problems.

The Soviet pullout from Afghanistan and the recent accords in southern Africa are two examples that come readily to mind. There are other areas where peace is being given a chance, and I'd like to think that one of them is on the island of Cyprus.

On January 30, Mr. George Vassiliou, President of the Republic of Cyprus, offered Mr. Rauf Denktash, leader of the Turkish Cypriots, a number of proposals that I hope will create an opening in the search for peace. For his part, Mr. Denktash has submitted proposals from the Turkish Cypriot community.

It is hard for any American, even one versed in the history of Cypriot politics, to appreciate the complexities involved in the search for peace on that island. Today's divisions are permeated by the memory of events that took place over a period of 3,000 years.

During this period, Cyprus has been dominated by a succession of peoples: Greeks, Assyrians, Egyptians, Persians, Franks, Turks, and British. It is not hard to see why—Cyprus is situated in a crucial location between Europe and the Middle East.

Today its importance lies not only in its geographical location but in its role as a source of division between two important NATO members—both of whom are crucial to preserving NATO's southern flank. Anything that serves to divide Greece and Turkey should be of concern to all of us in the free world.

The mere fact that President Vassiliou has offered this comprehensive series of proposals speaks well of his seriousness about the importance of the peace process. It shows that he is willing to cooperate with the United Nations peace initiatives and that he is committed to a negotiated settlement of this issue.

Three specific things stand out. First, he appears to be willing to leave open the possibility of a rotating presidency. Second, he has reaffirmed a prior commitment that each province—the Greek zone and the Turkish zone—will have equal status vis-a-vis the other province. Third is his proposal to demilitarize the island. From a personal point of view, I think this would be an appropriate first step to bring about negotiations in a peaceful environment.

I am well aware that any proposals, from either side, will generate suspicion in those with a long memory and a desire to settle old scores. But I believe that the latest round of proposals offer the possibility that men of good will can find common ground, and perhaps develop the disposition to trust each other.

For too long, our Government has placed this issue on the backburner. The issue deserves far greater attention than it is getting—if only to restore to Cypriots of all persuasions the human rights and common decencies all men and women should expect. But Cyprus also has a crucial strategic importance for NATO and its defense of the western world.

This issue should not be allowed to fester. The latest round of proposals has given the issue new momentum; I urge the Bush administration to do what it can to keep the ball rolling.

IN COMMEMORATION OF SUSAN B. ANTHONY'S BIRTHDAY

HON. LOUISE M. SLAUGHTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the February 15 birthday of Susan Brownell Anthony, a pioneer in the cause of women's rights and civil rights, who is most renowned for her efforts in securing women's right to vote. Though most people have heard of Susan B. Anthony, few know the extent of her tireless and unselfish efforts in pursuing the right to vote. I am very proud to represent the area where she resided most of her adult life, and I would like to share with you some of her great history.

Susan B. Anthony's efforts to promote women's rights began early in her life and never ceased. Susan, her parents and her sister attended the first women's rights conference in Seneca Falls in 1848, where she heard Elizabeth Cady Stanton speak. In 1850, she met and was influenced by Stanton, with whom she would work closely in many endeavors in the years to come. In 1852, Susan was denied the right to speak at a meeting by the Sons of Temperance in Albany, NY. As a result of this treatment, she organized the women's New York State Temperance Society, the first of its kind ever formed. In 1853, she assisted a group of Rochester, New York seamstresses in drafting a code of fair wages for women workers. Later, in New York City, she organized a working women's association which encouraged employed women to form unions to win higher wages and shorter hours.

In addition, Susan published a suffrage paper called the Revolution which advocated an "educated suffrage irrespective of sex and color" as well as equal pay for equal work, practical education for girls, the opening of new occupations for women, and more liberal divorce laws. In 1870, she began a 30-year period of almost ceaseless travel throughout the country, working for a Federal suffrage amendment. From 1892 until her retirement in 1900, she served as president of the National American Woman Suffrage Association which she helped found.

Susan B. Anthony devoted her entire life to securing the right to vote for all, and especially for women. More than any other suffrage leader, she was the victim of ridicule, often in the form of harsh and abusive newspaper attacks. Susan endured arrest and a trial in 1872 for casting a ballot in a national election. She was, however, sustained by an unshakable belief in her cause and did not stop in pursuit of her goal. As she neared the end of her life, she gained the popular respect of many, and upon her death newspapers, political leaders, and colleagues paid her high and long overdue tribute.

The 19th amendment to the Constitution securing women's right to vote was ratified in 1920, 14 years after Susan B. Anthony's death, proving her statement true that "failure is impossible." I think it is only fitting that we honor the woman who made lifelong sacrifices in order to gain the right to vote for the majority of our people.

THE RETIREMENT OF THOMAS F. COFFEY

HON. ROBERT LINDSAY THOMAS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. THOMAS of Georiga. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to bring to the attention of the House today a special event in the life of a very special man, the Honorable Thomas F. Coffey, Jr.

Tom is the editor of the Savannah Morning News and Savannah Evening Press, the dean of the Savannah, GA, newsmen, and one of the most respected journalists in our State and region. Effective March 1 of this year, he will retire as editor of the paper after a career of more than five decades.

I bring this to the attention of the Congress in recognition of Tom's extraordinary career and also because his life as a journalist has itself been a statement about the best qualities of citizenship in the United States.

Those of us in public life are privileged to move about in many communities in our Nation, and I know that one of the things that we notice is how much better a city can be if it has the good fortune of having a fine newspaper. A newspaper can be more than a source of news, it can be a community's conscience, its watchdog, and its institutional memory. In Savannah, GA, we are privileged to have two such papers in the Savannah Morning News and Savannah Evening Press.

But a newspaper is not ink on paper. A newspaper is the men and women who give it life. A newspaper is only as good as those men and women, and it is only as strong as they are strong.

That is why the retirement of Tom Coffey is an event worthy of special notice in our Nation's Capital.

Tom entered the news business as a copy boy when he graduated from Savannah High School in 1940. He has remained in the city as a journalist since that time with the exception of distinguished service in the Army in World War II. As a combat infantryman, he was wounded in the Philippines, and after his service, he chose to come back to the city he loves, Savannah.

Tom is a man of supreme professionalism, and he could have chosen to move through the corridors of print or broadcast journalism anywhere in the Nation. But he chose to stay in Savannah and devote himself to his hometown and his people. In that role as a citizen and a journalist, he has enriched the quality of life of generations of Georgians.

Tom's pen can be a sharp one, and he has turned it on me every now and then when he thought I needed a little advice. But he has always been fair. Most of all, everything he has done in his career has reflected his fundamental love for his city and his dedication to helping make it great.

Mr. Speaker, Tom's retirement has a silver lining. He will continue to write a regular column and will devote his considerable talents to writing a book and working on community projects such as helping to compile a written history about St. Michael and All the Angels Episcopal Church, where has has long served as a lay leader.

So on behalf of all of the people of the First Congressional District, I would like to take this moment to salute a time of passage in the career of a man who has distinguished himself as a citizen-journalist in the highest traditions of our Nation.

We are grateful for Tom's service. We are proud that he will continue to be an active part in the life of our communities in Georgia.

Most of all, we thank him for having devoted himself to his hometown. His work has made life better for a great many people. That is a testament and an achievement that we all aspire to, but few of us attain.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that we include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point an article that appeared recently in the Savannah Morning News regarding Tom Coffey's retirement.

PAPERS' EDITOR COFFEY ANNOUNCES RETIREMENT AFTER 5-DECADE CAREER

Thomas F. Coffey Jr., editor of the Savannah Morning News and Savannah Evening Press and dean of the city's newsmen, will retire March 1.

Coffey, 65, has won numerous awards and honors for his reporting, editorials and personal columns in both print and broadcast news in Savannah during a career that has spanned five decades—including nine mayors, 10 presidents and 12 governors.

He will continue to write a column for the Morning News and Sunday News-Press.

"I've decided that it's time to move on to other pursuits," Coffey said. he said the pursuits would include travel and writing.

"I've enjoyed the opportunity I've had working here. I've said this before, but I've had a front-row seat on the passing parade of life in this part of our world."

"Tom will be sorely missed," said Don Harwood, News-Press general manager. "He has been a giant at our papers. There is no way we can replace him. We will just have to struggle on without him."

"We will indeed miss Tom," said Executive Editor Wallace M Davis Jr. "We will miss his experience and his wisdom. He has been a part of these papers for so long that it is hard to imagine them without him. He has served journalism and his community well. No newsman is more respected."

Davis said he was delighted Coffey had agreed to continue his column. The columns will resume in March, after a February vacation.

Coffey, a native of Walthourville, was named editor of the two newspapers in 1987, more than a half-century after he started out in the trade as a carrier boy for the Evening Press as an eighth-grader.

After he graduated from Savannah High School in 1940, he got a job as a Press copy boy. A year later, he moved into the newsroom as a cub reporter, hammering out obits and rewrites under the direction of then-editor John Sutlive.

During the succeeding years, he worked as sports editor for both newspapers, Press city editor and managing editor for the News and Press. He was named associate editor in 1974, a post he held until he was promoted to editor.

Coffey has been away from the papers only three times. During World War II he served in the Army as a combat infantryman and was wounded in the Philippines. In the mid-1950s, he spent 18 months in television news and sports with WSAV-TV. From 1969 until 1974, he worked in city government, including two stints as acting city manager.

He has been active in veterans, patriotic and cultural organizations in the community and is a popular public speaker at civic and fraternal events.

His first project after he steps down as editor will be to help compile a written history about St. Michael and All the Angels Episcopal Church, where he is a longtime communicant and lay reader.

He said his second writing effort will be a book "that has never been written" about Savannah, including its politics and people.

"It's not going to be a kiss-and-tell book, but it will go into some detail about what actually took place behind the scenes," he said. "I've already got a title that my good friend Arthur Gordon suggested—'Only in Savannah.'"

Among the many honors Coffey has received are Best Editorial and Best Personal Column awards from the Georgia Press Association and a citation from the Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge for a series of columns on American Freedom in the Bicentennial Year.

He was married to the former Mary Corley, who died last July. His daughter, Mrs. Loran D. Smith Jr., and his two grandsons, live in Pooler.

A GENTLE REMINDER TO US ALL

HON. JOHN G. ROWLAND

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, as I travel through the 25 cities and towns in the Fifth Congressional District, every so often an old-timer will stop me and recant a long-remembered anecdote about former Congressman Jim Patterson. During my tenure over the last 5 years throughout the Waterbury area and the valley, story after story is told of Jim Patterson; the dignified, respected Congressman who served our district with honor and distinction. "I remember Jim Patterson * * * he helped my family with a military problem," said one. "Jim Patterson never said no to anyone, he was always there to help when the chips were down," said another.

About 1 year ago, I decided to pay a visit to Jim and Jeanne Patterson. When I arrived at their home I was met by a most friendly and cordial couple. We had planned to meet here for a short period, but ended up talking for hours and could have gone into late evening. So many questions raced through my mind. "What was Congress like 30 years ago? What were the key issues, who were the legislative leaders, et cetera?" These questions certainly did not dominate our discussion. As a matter of fact we barely discussed politics. So what did we talk about? Well, here was a tremendously successful businessman, veteran, community leader, Congressman, former drug enforcement official, and scholar-athlete who could have spent the time bragging about his own personal accomplishments. But Jim and Jeanne Patterson wanted to talk about their family, their children, their grandchildren, where they lived, what they were doing. As I recall there were at least four doctors in the family. A happy crowd of grandchildren that liked to visit and a lot of traveling by grandma and grandpa to see the kids. I watched Jim and Jeanne Patterson as their eyes swelled with pride. What a gentle reminder, at age 80, with success after success behind him, at a time when others would reflect upon their own deeds in business and government, this gentle man felt his greatest accomplishment was a good, loving family, a loving wife of many years.

Yes. A gentle reminder to us all.

Following is an editorial which appeared in the Waterbury, CN, Republican-American on February 9, 1989:

JAMES T. PATTERSON

James T. Patterson of Bethlehem escaped public notice during the past decade or more, but it was because he did not want to remain in the limelight after serving in Congress. His latest public recognition was when Republicans honored him last year for his service to the old 5th Congressional District that covered all of Litchfield County as well as Waterbury and lower valley towns.

Mr. Patterson, who died at the age of 80, was elected to Congress in 1946 and re-elected five more times. He went down to defeat at the hands of Democrat John S. Monagan in the 1958 landslide in which former Gov. Abraham A. Ribicoff was elected by a massive plurality of more than 240,000 votes. Mr. Patterson was unsuccessful two years later in a come-back attempt.

Unlike others in Congress, Representative Patterson did not become a major lobbyist but lived a quiet family life in Litchfield County.

He was never a boisterous congressman, but that didn't diminish his worth to his constituents. Whether it was solving the industrial problems of the major brass and copper manufacturers of the Naugatuck Valley or those of an individual constituent, Representative Patterson was known for his concern and service.

He won the nickname "Copper Jim" because he fought long and hard to provide adequate copper supplies at realistic prices so crucial to the industries of the valley. He was the author of the Patterson Copper Act.

His appeal cut across party lines because of his attention to the needs of so many people. As a Marine Corps veteran, he fought for benefits for all veterans. Some said there were few churches in the district that he did not visit at one time or another.

Representative Patterson served in Congress at a time when it was a much more gentlemanly career. He fit the mold of the times.

THE FUTURE OF UNITED STATES-JAPAN RELATIONS

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, the relationship between the United States and Japan is extraordinarily important to the peoples of both countries and to Asia and the world. Despite constant communication between the two governments and numerous meetings between private citizens, there is a disturbing edge to the rhetoric hurled across the ocean in reaction to economic disputes. As the world enters a new era in which a greater sharing of responsibilities among Japan, Western Europe, the United States, and Canada will be essential, there is an urgent need to explore not only the divisive issues but those that can reinvigorate the relationship.

In August 1988, distinguished leaders from both countries candidly probed the most difficult aspects of the relationship, exploring the risks and the opportunities. They found that the crux of today's frictions—both power and burdens—presents a new challenge thus far not adequately addressed by either party. The conferees proposed a series of recommendations to head off failure in the proper management of the crucial issues, a failure that would put at risk not only United States-Japan relations, but also economic prosperity, political stability, and strategic security in Asia and in the world. The following are the conclusions of the report of the Conference co-convened by the Council on Foreign Relations and the Asia Pacific Association written by Ambassador Francis McNeil and Professor Seizaburo Sato entitled "The Future of United States-Japan Relations":

CONCLUSIONS

Neither Japan nor the United States has a viable alternative to managing our differences. Otherwise, the cost to both societies would be incalculable and produce disastrous effects upon the world economy and regional as well as global security. The optimists judge that we will have the wisdom to coordinate policies and economies. The pessimists fear we may not be up to the task. All concur in the importance of political leadership to guide us through adjustments that will take time and stress the patience of our societies.

The restoration of economic equilibrium through reduction of America's chronic budget deficit and Japan's chronic capital surplus largely depends on macroeconomic measures. These would include fiscal and monetary policies that stimulate consumption in Japan and savings in the United States, complemented by a greater opening of Japan and the enhancement of American competitiveness. Such measures, and the change of attitudes that must accompany them, will take time. In the meantime, the most urgent tasks lie in ensuring that the narrowing trend in the trade imbalance continues and in finding appropriate ways to share responsibilities and power. Just as Japan must put its capital surplus to constructive uses in the international arena (the ecnomic sinews for shared responsibilities), so must the United States support a growing leadership role for Japan in the world. Shrinking the trade gap and shifting some of the "burden" would not only spur economic progress but would reduce contention, providing a less harsh political environment for the process of adjustment to work its way through the two societies.

Essentially we agree on the need for:

More coordination of macroeconomic policies among the United States, Japan and Western Europe.

Common understandings on how to narrow the trade gap most quickly.

Common understandings with respect to trade regimes—multilateral, regional, bilateral, or some mix thereof.

More effective integration into the world economy of the rapidly developing Asian NIEs.

Workable mechanisms to reduce the burden of Third World debt and coordinated policies for economic aid—bilateral and multilateral.

Combating stereotypes (racial and otherwise) among the public and the mass media to achieve greater understanding of each other's societies, their strengths and diversities as well as their flaws.

Expansion of privately sponsored dialogue between Americans and Japanese.

We recommend in particular that the two countries:

Jointly examine priorities for sharing responsibilities and decision-making power in the world arena—economic, political and (within international and Japanese domestic constraints) security.

Expand or initiate mutual efforts with respect to the problems of aging in our societies, cancer and AIDS research and treatment, environmental protection and reduction of pollution, civil and military research and development, and narcotics suppression, particularly demand reduction and treatment of addicts.

Undertake cooperative studies on:

Reducing the trade deficit and alternative trade regimes.

Third World debt and growth.

International regulation of the securities markets.

Increase exchanges, particularly among working media and the next leadership generation, a sine qua non for intelligent management of the relationship in the years ahead. Among other things, exchanges should fostert Japanese understanding of the role of minorities in American culture (e.g., recent discussions with Japanese business sponsored by Congressional Black Caucus members) and American understanding of Japan's growing contribution to Third World development.

Consider possibilities for a long-term, joint public interest effort to charter research and sponsor dialogue about significant issues, global as well as bilateral, in the coming decade.

A TRIBUTE TO ASSEMBLYWOMAN TERESA P. HUGHES OF LOS ANGELES, CA

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, November 21, 1988, the Los Angeles Unified School District unanimously approved the renaming of Bell New Elementary School No. 1, of Cudahy, CA, the "Teresa Hughes Elementary School." Although most elementary schools are named after their location, this action was taken to honor Assemblywoman Hughes for her years of hard work and dedication in the field of education.

I would like to point out that Assemblywoman Hughes' accomplishments include, but are not limited to, her instrumental role as a fierce advocate on behalf of education. Dr. Teresa P. Hughes was first elected to the assembly in a special election in 1975. She represents the 47th Assembly District which includes south central Los Angeles, and the cities of Bell, Cudahy, and Huntington Park.

As a former legislative and education consultant to the State commission on teacher credentialing and professor of education at California State University, Los Angeles, Assemblywoman Hughes' previous professional experience as a social worker, teacher, school administrator, and professor has enhanced her reputation as a pragmatic and devoted legislator. I would like to highlight just a few of her legislative accomplishments.

Assemblywoman Hughes is the successful author of legislation mandating affirmative acton reporting for California's universities, and authorizing $800 million in bond money to construct school classrooms. She was instrumental in gaining passage of the Hughes Earthquake Safety Act of 1987, which allocates State funds for the reconstruction of nonconforming school buildings; as well as legislation to create a State school of the arts. Her efforts also included work on the Hughes-Hart Education Reform Act of 1983 which funded education proposals to upgrade California's scholastic programs.

In the field of health, Assemblywoman Hughes led the fight to provide research grants for lupus disease and high blood pressure. She introduced legislation to protect physicians from civil and criminal liabilities for informing the spouse of a patient of a positive test result for the AIDS antibodies, in addition to several provisions which would finance displaced homemaker centers, and provide adequate compensation for related development disabilities work-activity programs.

In the area of public safety, Assemblywoman Hughes authored laws establishing a gang and drug prevention program in public schools, and worked toward increasing the prison terms for gang-related drive-by shootings. She provided leadership on instituting a training program for prosecutors on gang-related crimes and developing a pilot program for burglary prevention.

During her successful tenure as an elected official, she was responsible for laws to provide $100 million to construct or rehabilitate low- and moderate-income housing. Her legislative efforts included proposals to establish antiredlining home loan laws; provide adequate notices before a person loses their home due to foreclosure; and institute a replacement housing program for development agencies established before 1975.

In addition, Assemblywoman Hughes authored legislation protecting consumer interests and creating the California Museum of Afro-American History and Culture in Los Angeles, a major center of culture. She continues to serve on the board of directors of the Afro-American Museum and is on the foundation board of the Museum of Science and Industry.

Dr. Hughes is very actively involved in local, State, and community organizations. Her accomplishments include founder of Aware Women, and membership in numerous organizations which include the California State Employees Association, the California Teachers Association, the Coalition of Labor Union Women, the Democratic Women's Caucus, and Delta Sigma Theta, Inc., a public service sorority. She is on the board of directors for the local Coalition of One Hundred Black Women, the Black Agenda, and on the corporate board of Blue Shield. She serves as a member of Los Angeles Mayor Bradley's Education Committee, the board of trustees of the Los Angeles County High School for the Arts; and the Education Council of the Music Center of Los Angeles County.

As a credit to her legislative leadership role, she has been the chairwoman of the assembly Committees on Human Services and Housing and Community Development; the Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education; the California Legislative Black Caucus; and the California Women Legislators Caucus. She presently sits on the assembly Committees on Public Employees and Retirement, Housing and Community Development, and Local Government. She is chair of the assembly Committee on Education and is also a member of the State Allocation Board.

Indeed, Assemblywoman Hughes deserves our recognition and many thanks for her vigorous role as a skillful legislator whose work has benefited the people of her community, and the citizens of California. I urge my colleagues to join me in expressing our thanks and appreciation to Assemblywoman Hughes for her strong commitment and dedication to public service.

MAX ROBINSON, TELEVISION PIONEER

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to the life and work of Max Robinson, who died in the District of Columbia on December 20, 1988, at the age of 49.

Max Robinson, after growing up in Richmond, VA, attended Oberlin College in Ohio and Virginia Union University in Richmond, before moving to Washington to launch his television career as a floor director trainee at WTOP-TV—now WUSA-TV—in 1965.

Following a move to WRC-TV, where he became that station's first black reporter, Max Robinson began reporting the local news segment on the "Today Show."

Max Robinson returned to WTOP-TV in 1971 to join Gordon Peterson as the most respected news anchor team in the District of Columbia. In 1978, Max Robinson became the Chicago-based member of a three-man ABC network news team.

In addition to the distinguished contributions he made to television journalism and by leading the way as a popular, respected anchorman, Max Robinson found time—out of his concern for and commitment to blacks—to participate in numerous organizations, including two that he helped found: the National Association of Black Journalists and TransAfrica. Max Robinson was honored numerous occasions for his outstanding achievements as a broadcaster, including the award of an emmy in 1966 for a documentary on life in Anacostia. He also gained fame and recognition for the work he did as the key coverage person during the Hanafi hostage crisis at three buildings in Washington, DC, in 1977.

This expression of appreciation for a life that has made many contributions to the betterment of his fellowmen is but a small gesture in comparison to the achievements in his all too brief life span. As a pioneer in the television news profession, and for his many other efforts, Max Robinson has earned the lasting respect and admiration of all of us.

JEWISH HERITAGE WEEK

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased once again to be the sponsor of legislation designating May 7-14, 1989 as "Jewish Heritage Week." House Joint Resolution 136, acknowledges the Jewish contribution to our Nation's heritage and culture over the years. This measure takes specific note of Israel Independence Day, which will be celebrated for the 41st time on May 10, 1989.

The months of April, May, and June mark dates of importance to the American Jewish community, among them, Passover, Holocaust Memorial Day, Jerusalem Day, and the anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising. It is a time of particular reflection for the Jewish community, which notes the redemption from slavery under the Egyptian pharoahs, the immense suffering and horrors of the Holocaust, and the birth of the modern State of Israel only a few short decades ago. Jewish Heritage Week allows our Nation to acknowledge the uniqueness of Jewish culture and heritage, and those aspects which have become a part of daily life in this country.

This Nation prides itself on the rich diversity of its ethnic heritage. House Joint Resolution 136 is an important component in celebrating this rich fabric of our culture, and accordingly, I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsorship. Adding their support as original cosponsors are Representatives SCHUMER, MORELLA, and HOYER. And, Mr. Speaker, to assist my colleagues in better understanding House Joint Resolution 136, I ask that the text of the resolution be printed at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I look forward to the House considering this measure in the near future, so that we can acknowledge as a body the many contributions made to society by the American Jewish community.

H.J. RES. 136

Whereas May 10, 1989 marks the forty-first anniversary of the founding of the State of Israel;

Whereas the months of April, May and June contain events of major significance in the Jewish calendar—Passover, the anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, Holocaust Memorial Day, and Jerusalem Day.

Whereas the Congress recognizes that an understanding of the heritage of all American ethnic groups contributes to the unity of our country; and

Whereas intergroup understanding can be further fostered through an appreciation of the culture, history and traditions of the Jewish community and the contributions of Jews to our country and society; Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of May 7, 1989 through May 14, 1989, is designated as "Jewish Heritage Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States, State and local government agencies, and interested organizations to observe the week with appropriate ceremonies, activities and programs.

THE INTERGENERATIONAL LIBRARY LITERACY ACT

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Intergenerational Library Literacy Act, that will assist libraries in addressing the problem of the growing numbers of latchkey children who are increasingly being left in libraries because of the lack of adequate day care.

As you know, many working families are struggling to find adequate, affordable day care for their children. With the average cost of care totaling $3,000 per child, in addition to the fact that there are not enough day care slots, finding quality care can be an impossible task. Currently, 2.1 million children, ages 5 to 13 years, regularly spend some period of time without adult supervision after school.

Libraries, since the turn of the century, have made a commitment to serving the needs of children. Nothing, however, has prepared libraries to deal with the deluge of unsupervised children who, on a regular basis, are spending extended periods of time in the library because of a lack of day care.

A study conducted by the American Library Association in May 1988, indicates that what to do with and about library latchkey children has become one of the most rapidly developing public library policy arenas. For example, the Brooklyn Public Library has 100 or more unattended children a day; and in Los Angeles County a 1985 survey found about 2,000 children a day whose parents used the libraries as an after school center. In places as disparate as Illinois, Texas, and Oregon, librarians are trying to cope with a problem that is really a community problem—how shall we care for our children and who shall be responsible.

The Intergenerational Library Literacy act will amend title VI of the Library Services and Construction Act to permit libraries to apply for grant of up to $40,000 when establishing these intergenerational programs. This is larger than the amount currently available to libraries applying for title VI funds. These funds will be spent to establish demonstration programs that will match older volunteers with libraries interested in developing after school literacy and reading skills programs for latchkey children. Additionally, older volunteers, through program and example, will stress positive images of aging.

In order to provide a core of volunteers upon which libraries may rely, this bill will also amend the Domestic Service Volunteer Act to establish intergenerational library literacy programs as "programs of national significance." This will permit the Retired Service Volunteer Program to better target its resources at intergenerational library programs.

At present, library staff time is increasingly being spent in ensuring that latchkey children are not disturbing other patrons or damaging library property, leaving staff less time to devote toward normal duties. With the advent of the Intergenerational Library Literacy Act, libraries will be able to address this problem while joining the two generations in innovative programs which combine a variety of community resources.

Today, both Federal agencies and nonprofit organizations sponsor older volunteer programs. ACTION programs such as the Retired Senior Volunteer Program [RSVP] and organizations such as the American Association of Retired Persons [AARP] provide volunteers in a variety of settings.

As the population ages, there will continue to be an increasingly large number of older adults who seek meaningful opportunities for contributing to society outside of paid employment. Older volunteers bring with them a lifetime of experience which many are eager to share. The natural affinity between the oldest and the youngest generations, as described by researchers, provides a supportive environment in which both groups thrive. Older adults find fulfillment in sharing their skills and many young children have the opportunity to relate to a surrogate grandparent who embodies the positive aspects of aging.

This intergenerational approach to latchkey children in libraries will permit these older adults to contribute their vast knowledge in assisting a new generation of citizens grow and develop as literate, informed adults.

The text of the Intergenerational Library Literacy Act follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

SALUTE TO JOSEPH AND RACHAEL PIETRUSZKA

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to rise today and ask my colleagues to join me in saluting a special and highly respected couple, Joseph and Rachael Pietruszka, who will be recognized by Chabad of the Valley for their dedicated leadership in the Jewish community.

Joseph and Rachael were both born, raised, and educated in Poland and are survivors of the Holocaust. In the early 1940's, the young couple emigrated with their son to the United States. They presently reside in New York where they enjoy a full and productive life and are an inspiration to all those privileged to know them.

Joseph and Rachael Pietruszka are well known for their kind and thoughtful ways. Their exemplary leadership in humanitarian endeavors are characterized by a strong sense of idealism. Their religious commitment, visionary judgment, and selflessness are an example to all those around them. Throughout their lives, Joseph and Rachael have always given freely of their time and energy to a multitude of worthy endeavors.

Joseph and Rachael are hard-working members of the community. They have witnessed history unfold and have never lost sight of the ideals and values for which this Nation stands. Their pleasant personalities and ready willingness to be helpful to others has endeared them to both family and friends.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS REMEMBERED ON 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will mark the historic 25th anniversary of passage of the Civil Rights Act. I want to take this opportunity to honor a very special Michigan legislator who was instrumental in bringing women's rights into the language of the Civil Rights Act, and to the forefront of our national consciousness.

Michigan's Lt. Gov. Martha W. Griffiths, and I first served together in the State legislature in the early fifties and then in the House of Representatives from 1955 until 1974. Through her tireless work and perseverance she was responsible for the adoption of an amendment to the Civil Rights Act which included women under its many provisions.

We often take the guarantees of this act for granted. However, this was not the case in 1964. The battle for passage was long and difficult and met with fierce opposition. Today, the act enriches the lives of all Americans, its sense of fair play and equality of opportunity reinforces the freedom this country was founded upon. Through her insistence, women's rights were made a part of the Civil Rights Act.

Mr. Speaker, her leadership and vision earned the respect of her colleagues on both sides of the aisle. Today Martha continues to serve the citizens of Michigan with this same kind of dedication.

Congratulations to you Martha and to all Americans on the first 25 years of protection under the Civil Rights Act.

ADEQUATE FUNDING FOR THE NEW DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS

HON. CLYDE C. HOLLOWAY

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of more money for the budget for the new Department of Veterans' Affairs. Without additional funds, we will not be able to provide for adequate health care and other essential services for this Nation's 27.3 million veterans.

There are 432,000 veterans living in the State of Louisiana, 157,000 are older veterans and another 61,000 are in their midfifties. It is critical that these faithful and loyal Americans be recognized, appreciated and assisted in their time of advanced age and infirmities. As a grateful and understanding nation, we must be sure to provide truly sufficient health care and services to these veterans.

There are other factors that this grossly inadequate budget will affect: the regional offices operations, shortages in manpower are causing claim backlogs. The construction of VA medical facilities will also be affected; there is not enough money to staff and equip newly built facilities. Facilities over 35 years old need renovations and repairs. All in all, we need to provide more money to provide needed services. It is not too much to ask that a grateful nation provide decent and safe facilities for the brave Americans who left behind their families and risked their lives to serve their Nation.

The price of freedom is not cheap. The cost of veterans' benefits is the direct result of the cost of war and the cost of defense in peacetime. Our Nation must be willing to recognize the needs of our older and infirm veterans who fought so long and valiantly to keep peace in America. I am in support of increased funding for our new Department of Veterans' Affairs and I am glad to speak in behalf of legislative efforts to that end.

BAN NUCLEAR POWER IN EARTH ORBIT ACT

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation aimed at achieving a United States-Soviet ban on the use of nuclear power in Earth orbit. For environmental and national security reasons, I believe the time has come to curb all notions of surrounding our globe with nuclear reactors.

Although I support the continued use of nuclear power for deep space science missions, nuclear reactors in Earth orbit are a different matter. Military missions of dubious merit are the driving force behind proposals to use nuclear-powered satellites. The Strategic Defense Initiative Program, for instance, could involve as many as 100 nuclear reactors in orbit. Curbing the power source for provocative military spacecraft would play an important role in helping prevent a United States-Soviet arms race in space.

There are strong environmental and safety reasons for blocking the use of nuclear reactors in Earth orbit. Nuclear-power spacecraft have had a deeply troubled history, with nearly 15 percent of all missions suffering accidents or failures of some form. For example, a Soviet nuclear-powered spacecraft reentered the Earth's atmosphere in 1978, spreading radioactive debris across 40,000 square miles of tundra in northern Canada. My legislation would help make sure that such an accident never be repeated.

Some Pentagon officials claim that nuclear power is essential for their space activities. For example, Richard Verga, who is in charge of developing power sources for the SDI Program, recently said that space nuclear reactors would be "survivable, compact, lightweight and affordable," making them "an ideal technology" for space weapons and advanced military satellites. An article in today's New York Times, however, casts doubts on these claims. According to the story, a recent internal audit of the principal U.S. space nuclear reactor program found that the design of that system has an "extremely high risk" of failure, that its weight is "out of control," that it has little chance of being survivable against attack, and could cost as much as $1.8 billion. For the interest of my colleagues, I recommend that they read the article in today's New York Times.

For a full description of my arguments in support of a ban on nuclear reactors in Earth orbit, I am providing below the text of a speech I delivered last month before an audience of space nuclear reactor scientists in Albuquerque, NM.

Joining me today as original cosponsors of the Ban Nuclear Power in Earth Orbit Act are my colleagues: MORRIS UDALL, JAMES SCHEUER, LES AUCOIN, JAMES OLIN, EDWARD MARKEY, DOUG WALGREN, THOMAS FOGLIETTA, and GEORGE HOCHBRUECKNER. I encourage others to cosponsor this important legislation.

AUDIT CITES FLAWS IN PROGRAM FOR NUCLEAR REACTOR IN SPACE

(By William J. Broad)

The Federal Government's main program to fashion a nuclear reactor for use in outer space is seriously flawed and in danger of failing, according to a Government audit made public yesterday.

The audit found that the current design for the spaced reactor lacks key data on its technical feasibility and would produce a device too heavy to easily be lifted into space and too fragile for use by the military.

The current design has an "extremely high risk" of failure, the auditors found, concluding that "this power plant will not achieve its objectives."

The audit was the first sign of technical questions about the program, which has long been publicly criticized as threatening to rain nuclear debris on the Earth.

RELEASED BY ADVOCACY GROUP

The report, completed last year, was made public by the Committee to Bridge the Gap, a private group based in Los Angeles that opposes the placing of nuclear reactors in orbit. The group's director, Steven Aftergood, said he obtained the report from sources in the reactor program.

Reactor program officials responded that some of the criticisms were well-founded and that some corrective actions had been taken.

The prototype space reactor, known as the SP-100, is meant to generate 100 kilowatts of electricity and to be small enough to fit in the space shuttle.

According to the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, the project could cost as much as $1.8 billion. Under joint development by National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the Department of Energy and the Department of Defense, the reactor is to be built by the General Electric Company and first launched into orbit in the mid-1990's.

Although no Federal agency has yet said it wants to use the reactor, its designers say it could have a variety of civilian and military functions, including powering bases on the Moon and Mars as well as space sensors and weapons.

The audit was conducted by 10 reactor experts from the Air Force, the Los Alamos and Oak Ridge National Laboratories and other research establishments. The team was headed by Glenn E. Cunningham of the NASA Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif.

On June 28 last year, a 37-page report of the audit was sent to Dr. Vincent C. Truscello of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, who directs technical aspects of the reactor project.

The audit team said engineers were extrapolating far beyond available data and as a result, "the entire program has extremely high risk."

VULNERABILITY CITED

In addition, the team called the reactor's weight "out of control," estimating it at six tons rather than the 3.3 tons in the original specifications.

Finally, the team said the reactor's use by the military "has been precluded" since the device has little built-in protection from attack.

Dr. Truscello said in a telephone interview that his design group had acted on most of the important criticisms. He said he strongly disagreed that the design was flawed because of lack of data. He agreed, however, that the reactor was too heavy and said that the audit triggered a re-evaluation that brought the weight down to 4.2 tons.

NUCLEAR POWER IN SPACE: BALANCING THE RISKS AND BENEFITS

(By Congressman George E. Brown, Jr.)

Good morning, and thank you for inviting me to speak at your annual conference on space nuclear power systems. I note that most of your deliberations during the next few days will be extremely technical in nature. Discussions on power conversion systems, advanced materials, and reactor shielding requirements would seem to be the tough topics to be addressed at this conference, while this morning's remarks from politicians would appear to most observers to be the easy agenda items. But let me remind you of Albert Einstein's quote that "Politics is harder than physics." In the field of space nuclear power, this may well turn out to be the case. Solving the policy issues relating to the future uses of nuclear power in space could well be a more difficult task than actually developing a new nuclear reactor for space applications.

As some of you may know, my academic background was in engineering. As a result, I have a reasonable degree of insight into the challenges that each of you face in the course of your work to design, develop and operate space nuclear power systems. The obstacles before you are difficult ones, but they are tangible. You know the specifications of what you are working on. You can measure concrete parameters during experimentation. Your path is a clear one of formulas and persistence.

The political context of your work, however, is much murkier. The debate that has surfaced concerning future applications of space nuclear power is based on varying perceptions of acceptable risk, on differing opinions about federal spending priorities, and on personal views concerning U.S.-Soviet relations. Such factors cannot be easily quantified. But in some fashion, the differing views on this topic—and all other topics within the political realm—must be weighed. Our instruments for doing so may seem crude at times—we rarely use carefully calibrated balances of micrometers to measure political views in the Halls of Congress—but such is the nature of representative democracy.

I am glad to have this opportunity to provide my general views on space nuclear power, and to discuss the specific reasons why I introduced legislation last September to ban the use of nuclear reactors in Earth orbit.

As a starting point, let me share my whole-hearted enthusiasm for the tremendous accomplishments that have been made as a result of space nuclear power. During the past 20 years, radioisotope thermoelectric generators (RTGs) have served as invaluable keys to the engine of our space science and exploration program. The Apollo effort could not have been the smashing success that it was without the use of RTGs as power sources on the surface of the Moon.

Similarly, without RTGs, we may never have seen the likes of the incredible images sent back from the Viking rovers on Mars, or from Voyager 2 as it made its closest approach to Uranus in January 1986, nearly 1.8 billion miles away. Those surprising photos have revolutionized our understanding of those planets, and yet there is more to come. Voyager 2 will capture the world's attention once again later this year, with its expected rendezvous with Neptune.

The Pioneer-10 and -11 probes, each with RTGs aboard, have now left the Solar System and are serving as our emissaries in the Universe beyond. We have sent these spacecraft on an incredible voyage, the true significance of which we may never know. And we could not have accomplished this task without the use of the nuclear power systems engineered by you and your colleagues. From the present vantage of these distant space probes, our Sun appears as but a faint star, far too weak to generate a photovoltaic current.

With the launch of the Galileo spacecraft later this year, and the Ulysses probe next year, you will have further reason to celebrate. I am confident that these missions will contribute greatly to our understanding of the planet Jupiter and the Sun.

Space nuclear power has enabled us to go where no man has gone before. It has revealed sights that Galileo, Copernicus, or Ptolemy could never have imagined. This is the essence of science. This is the lure of space.

Having heralded the benefits of space nuclear power, let me now discuss my reservations about space nuclear power—specifically, my concerns about its use in Earth orbit. These concerns have led me, with a host of my colleagues, to introduce legislation to ban the use of nuclear power in Earth orbit.

History has shown how difficult it is to launch and maintain nuclear-powered satellites in Earth orbit. Over the past 30 years, the United States and the Soviet Union have launched more than 60 spacecraft with nuclear power sources on board. Approximately 15 percent of these missions have suffered some form of failure or accident, some of which have resulted in significant releases of radioactivity into the environment.

Since most of you are familiar with these accidents, I will review them only briefly. In April 1964, a U.S. navigation satellite fueled with a plutonium power source failed to reach orbit and blew apart, releasing 17,000 Curies of plutonium-238 into the atmosphere. In January 1978, a Soviet spacecraft with a nuclear reactor on board reentered the Earth's atmosphere, spreading radioactive debris across nearly 40,000 square miles of northwest Canada. In 1983, and again last summer, the Soviet Union lost control of a nuclear-powered satellite. Fortunately, these two failures ended without incident.

Following the 1978 accidental reentry and crash landing in Canada, then-Secretary of Energy James Schlesinger pointed to the "serious risks" of space nuclear power and said that it was "inappropriate to have nuclear reactors orbiting the Earth." That same year, President Carter sought an international ban on nuclear power sources in Earth orbit.

In my opinion, there should be a ban on the use of nuclear power sources in Earth orbit, not only for environmental and safety reasons, but also for national security reasons.

At the present time, the Soviet Union is the only nation actively using nuclear reactors in Earth orbit. It does so to power radar ocean reconnaissance satellites (RORSATs), used to target naval vessels. Many U.S. military officials have argued that the U.S. needs to launch a multi-billion dollar antisatellite (ASAT) weapons program with the potential to shoot down these RORSATs. A better approach, in my mind, would be to reduce the RORSAT threat by getting the Soviets to abandon that program.

Soviet scientists, including Dr. Roald Sagdeev, and advisor to General Secretary Gorbachev, have endorsed a ban on nuclear power sources in Earth orbit. My legislation, which I will discuss in a moment, would help determine whether the Soviets are really serious about abandoning RORSATs.

I have long been a critic of anti-satellite weapons development. I am convinced that U.S. national security would suffer in the event of a U.S.-Soviet ASAT arms race. The United States is enormously dependent on military satellites for communications, early warning, navigation, and intelligence gathering. We are far more dependent upon military satellites than the Soviet Union is—in part due to geography, since likely points of U.S.-Soviet conflict are on the Soviet Union's periphery, and in part due to technology, since we have done a better job of exploiting the military opportunities afforded by satellites.

At the present time, neither the United States nor the Soviet Union has a sophisticated and reliable means of disabling military satellites. And that is as it should be. It would make all the sense in the world to negotiate an ASAT Limitation Treaty to preserve this situation. But instead, the Pentagon is expected to announce sometime soon the initiation of a new U.S. ASAT program, which it will argue is critical in order to shoot down RORSATs. And efforts by the U.S. to put weapons into space will provide a similar stimulus to Soviet ASAT efforts.

From what I have seen, in briefings by industry and in presentations by NASA, the Department of Energy, and the Department of Defense, the vast majority of proposed missions for nuclear power in Earth orbit are military ones—and provocative ones at that. The concentrated power provided by the controlled fission of uranium is viewed as an "enabling technology," one that could make it possible to operate large-scale weapons in orbit around the Earth, in addition to powering other components of a space-based missile defense system.

I'll tell you right up front that I am opposed to the deployment of weapons in space. At a time when the world is faced with unprecedented human suffering and the prospect of global environmental crises, when our nation is overwhelmed with the crime and corruption caused by illegal drugs, and when we have mounted up enough debt to bankrupt the nation's economy for generations to come, I can think of no greater folly than a dangerous and costly U.S.-Soviet competition in space weaponry.

According to the American Physical Society's 1987 report on directed energy weapons, the Strategic Defense Initiative program could require "perhaps a hundred or more" nuclear reactors in space. These reactors would be used initially for targeting and tracking, battle station "housekeeping," and orbital maneuvering. More advanced reactors would provide the megawatts of burst power needed for lasers and other futuristic weapons.

Such a proposal would increase by many orders of magnitude the risks associated with space nuclear power. A single SP-100 reactor—the type being eyed by the SDI program—could have several hundred times the quantity of long-lived radioisotopes as does a single RORSAT. A deployed space-based defense could increase by tens of thousands, to hundreds of thousands, the amount of radioactive, bomb-grade uranium circling the globe. Add to this a deployed Soviet space-based defense, fueled as well with nuclear reactors, and I shudder to think of the consequences of an accident.

Chernobyls in space. You may not like to hear this phrase, but it is one that comes to the minds of many who cannot erase thoughts of Chernobyl, the Challenger Accident, Three Mile Island, or Bhophal. None of these accidents were supposed to happen, yet all of them did. Assurances about putting space nuclear reactors into "safe orbits" can only go so far. Accidents do happen.

But my concern about a space-based defense goes further, to the impact it would have on the character of near-Earth space. If the United States deploys hundreds of weapons in space, including 100 or more nuclear reactors to power them, you can be sure that the Soviets will eventually do something similar. As a result, the envelope of space surrounding our planet would be transformed into a battleground for military conflict. This would be a travesty. Space should be explored for the common good of all mankind, and not turned into yet another stage for nationalistic rivalry.

One of the conclusions of the Office of Technology Assessment's report last year on the SDI was that, "in the absence of arms control agreements to the contrary, we should expect from the beginning of [missile defense] space deployments an intense competition between the superpowers for control of near-Earth space."

Each U.S. deployment would invite a Soviet response; each Soviet response would prompt a U.S. counter. This measure-for-measure competition would bring a host of risks. Space would become a hostile arena. The weapons would be targeted against each other, as well as against military satellites of all kinds. Our nation's command, control, and intelligence satellites would become vulnerable to attack as never before. And for what purpose? so that we can further "complicate Soviet attack plans"? That is the avowed goal of the SDI these days. But let's be realistic. We don't need hundreds of space-based battle stations to further deter the Soviet Union from initiating World War III. We're just saying that we do, for lack of any other justification for a space-based defense.

Now, I am sure there are some in this room who are convinced that we could outsmart the Soviets at each turn as we proceeded with the proposed Phase I of a Strategic Defense System, and with each subsequent phase. Our satellites would be made more survivable, our lasers quicker to the draw, our kinetic kill vehicles faster out of the chute, our sensor systems better at tracking and assessing the ongoing space battle. And with this edge, some would argue, we would be prepared to fight—and to win—any conflict that might develop.

What I am telling you is that the world is tired of this sort of thinking. The Cold War has raged for too long. It has drained the coffers of the Soviet Union, leaving their economy in a shambles. And it has diverted our own energy and resources from major problems that are corroding our quality of life—problems such as environmental decay, foreign economic competition, illegal drug use, and inadequate schools. Secretary General Gorbachev has taken some important steps toward reducing the military tensions between the United States and the Soviet Union. Cautiously, but aggressively, we should keep pushing him to take further steps.

My proposed ban on nuclear power in Earth orbit is designed to move the Soviets a bit further down this new path they have chosen. The central provision of the bill is aimed at establishing a U.S.-Soviet moratorium on the use of nuclear power in Earth orbit, and would only take place if the Soviet Union took the first step by ending its RORSAT program. Specifically, the bill calls on the President of the United States to urge the Soviet Union to end the use of nuclear power in Earth orbit. If the Soviet Union responds with an announcement that it will abandon the use of nuclear power in Earth orbit, then the United States would be prohibited from launching spacecraft into orbit with nuclear power sources on board. This prohibition would cease if the President certified to Congress that the Soviet Union had violated its declared policy to halt the use of nuclear powered satellites.

To promote an enduring and permanent prohibition, the bill calls upon the United States to initiate negotiations with the Soviet Union on the subject of space nuclear power. The goal of these talks would be an agreement specifying what, if any, exemptions might be made for short-duration orbital tests of nuclear power sources for civilian applications. It seems prudent to me that any agreement should have a 15-year duration, at which time it would be subject to review.

Such a ban could be easily verified, given the strong gamma and infrared signals emitted by space reactors. Earth-based sensors can also detect with ease the distinctive physical design of space nuclear reactors, comprised of radiator panels and a shielding system to protect on-board electronic systems.

The final section of my legislation states that nothing in the bill shall prohibit the use of nuclear power sources for deep space scientific and exploration missions or for a Moon base. As I said earlier, the use of RTGs for unmanned probes and for lunar missions has provided a marvelous contribution to space science. The Voyager, Viking and Pioneer probes stand out as some of the true scientific accomplishments of this century.

In last year's version of the bill, I included a provision aimed at encouraging a transition away from plutonium-fueled RTGs for deep space science, and toward uranium-fueled reactors for such missions. In this year's legislation, however, I intend to drop that provision. It is clear to me now that the benefits of RTGs far outweigh their risks, and that extraordinary precautions have been taken to ensure their safe use.

If adopted, this legislation could lead to the end of the RORSAT program, which would diminish current concerns about the military and environmental risks of those satellites. This would help reduce the perceived need in some U.S. military circles to embark on a multi-billion dollar anti-satellite weapons program. The bill could eliminate the prospect of an accident involving the reentry of a nuclear-powered satellite. And, it would further erode momentum to build an array of gold-plated space weapons that would add nothing to our sense of national security.

Some have viewed my bill as an attempt to kill the SP-100 program. It is not. I support continued work on the SP-100. However, I think its schedule for development should be paced to meet specific civilian applications, and should not be artificially propelled by unwarranted enthusiasm to build a space-based defense.

I feel that there would be no harmful impact on the nation's civilian space program if my bill were adopted, since it would do nothing to impede the use of nuclear power for a Moon base or for assisting with a manned mission to Mars, and because proposals for the civilian use of nuclear power in Earth orbit are either too speculative to be of interest to me or not worth having if the only way to get them is through a Faustian bargain that includes space weapons.

I want this nation to have the best civilian space program possible. I will be working to ensure funding this year for the Comet Rendezvous and Asteroid Flyby/Cassini mission. During the coming decades, we should send landers, rovers, and sample return missions to all of the major planetary bodies in the Solar System. We should use the Hubble Telescope as simply the beginning of a series of great orbiting observatories, looking to the farthest reaches of the universe. We should also provide full funding for Mission to Planet Earth, to study the changes humans are making on the climate and resources of our beautiful, yet vulnerable planet. A planet that, in my humble opinion, should not be enveloped with radioactive satellites or with orbiting battle stations.

THE HANDGUN VIOLENCE PREVENTION ACT

HON. SIDNEY R. YATES

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, cheap, easily obtained, dangerous handguns are a serious and unncessary threat to everyone. The Handgun Violence Prevention Act, which I am delighted to cosponsor, is a reasonable and practical way to help end the spread of these Saturday night specials. These are the guns that community leaders and police officials recognize as the easily concealed, portable menaces that produce death and tragedy on a daily basis all across this country. Reason and common sense tell us that we must stop the acquisition of the new Saturday night specials and the legal transfer of these killers. This legislation will accomplish that and I hope that my colleagues will support the effort to make this bill law during this session. It would be one of the best things we could do for the country and our constituents.

STRENGTHENING THE NATION'S SCIENTIFIC BASE: CONGRESSIONAL SCHOLARSHIPS FOR SCIENCE, MATH, AND ENGINEERING

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of a bipartisan group of 27 members of the Science, Space, and Technology Committee including Chairman ROE, I am introducing the Congressional Scholarships for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering Act.

We all know our science education system is critical to all our future—and that it is in real trouble. There is good reason that blue-ribbon national commissions title their reports on the U.S. educational system as "A Nation at Risk." Just last month, tests comparing American science students with students abroad confirmed any doubt about where we are. As the headline from the Washington Post said: "Survey of Math, Science Skills Puts U.S. Students at Bottom." This survey, funded by our National Science Foundation and the U.S. Department of Education shows American 13-year-olds scoring at the bottom, behind Spain and South Korea.

INTEREST IN SCIENCE DECLINING

We cannot take our supply of scientific talent for granted. Fewer students are choosing to study science and math. From 1966 to 1987, college freshmen planning to major in biological sciences, engineering, physical sciences, and mathematics fell from 21 to 14 percent. Interest in mathematics dropped by more than four-fifths, from 4.5 to 0.6 percent. Freshmen selecting engineering careers dropped by more than one-fourth, from 12 to 8.5 percent between 1982 and 1987. Although degrees in computer sciences are on the increase, baccalaureate degrees in math, science, physics, and biology are declining.

At the same time, foreign nations are succeeding dramatically in science education. The Soviet Union is presently training four times as many engineers each year as America. For each 100 students in their population, Japan is now training twice as many engineers as the United States.

It is particularly important to develop more role models for women. Women now receive 38 percent of the total science-related undergraduate degrees. But these are concentrated largely in the social and life sciences. In recent years, the share of undergraduate science and engineering degrees obtained by women has shown no increase. And in engineering, computer, physical, and sciences, the number of women receiving degrees is actually declining. We cannot succeed in fulfilling our national requirements for scientists and engineers if we fail to attract half the available talent pool.

THE CONGRESSIONAL SCHOLARSHIPS BILL

Under this bill, the National Science Foundation would establish an annual merit-based competition for selecting one young man and young woman from each congressional district to receive a 4-year scholarship to pursue undergraduate education in science, mathematics, or engineering. NSF would establish broad-based, local committees of educators, scientists, mathematicians, and engineers to submit nominees for these national awards. Students would be selected on the basis of their potential to excel and their motivation to pursue a career in science, math, or engineering fields. Scholarships would be up to $5,000 per year and be used for tuition, fees, and room and board expenses.

Because of their broad geographic distribution, CASE scholarships would serve as highly visible role models for all high school students and symbolize the national stake in science and engineering.

The text of the bill follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Congressional Scholarships for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering Act".

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to strengthen the United States science, mathematics, and engineering base by offering opportunities to pursue postsecondary education in science, mathematics, and engineering;

(2) to encourage role models in scientific, mathematics, and engineering fields for young people; and

(3) to strengthen the United States scientific, mathematics, and engineering potential by encouraging equal participation of women with men in scientific, mathematics, and engineering fields.

SEC. 3. CONGRESSIONAL SCHOLARSHIPS FOR SCIENCE, MATHEMATICS, AND ENGINEERING.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—The Director of the National Science Foundation (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Director") shall establish and implement a competitive, merit-based program for selecting one male and one female from each congressional district of the United States each year to receive a four-year Congressional Scholarship for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering.

(b) NOTIFICATION OF SECONDARY SCHOOLS.—The Director shall notify all public and private secondary schools and all institutions of higher education in the United States annually of the availability of scholarships under this Act.

(c) NOMINATING COMMITTEES.—The Director shall establish for each congressional district, or, to the extent a contiguous group of congressional districts reflects a geographic region similar in demographics, geography, and economic status and activity, for each such group of congressional districts, a broad-based committee of educators, scientists, mathematicians, and engineers who shall submit to the Director nominations of one male and one female from each congressional district for scholarships under this Act. The membership of each committee shall reflect geographic distribution within its area.

(d) ELIGIBILITY.—Only individuals who are citizens or nationals of the United States, or who are aliens lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence shall be eligible for scholarships under this Act. In addition, prior to receiving a scholarship, an individual must have been accepted for admission to an institution of higher education in the United States that is currently accredited by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or association.

(e) CRITERIA FOR NOMINATION AND SELECTION.—Individuals shall be nominated and selected for scholarships under this Act on the basis of potential to successfully complete a postsecondary program in science, mathematics, or engineering, and on the basis of motivation to pursue a career in science, mathematics, or engineering. After consultation with educators with expertise in the field of educational testing and measurement, the Director shall determine the criteria for measuring the potential and motivation of nominees.

(f) NATURE AND AMOUNT OF SCHOLARSHIPS.—Scholarships awarded under this Act may be used only for tuition, fees, and room and board expenses. Such scholarships shall be limited to a maximum of $5,000 per year, except as necessary to accommodate a recipient completing a four-year academic program in less than four years.

(g) MAINTAINING ELIGIBILITY.—(1) In order to maintain eligibility to receive funds pursuant to a scholarship awarded under this Act, a student must—

(A) be enrolled at an institution of higher education in the United States that is currently accredited by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or association;

(B) major in any field of science, mathematics, or engineering;

(C) maintain academic performance in good standing, as determined by such institution; and

(D) except as provided in paragraph (2), carry a full-time academic work load, as determined by the institution in which the student is enrolled under standards applicable to all students enrolled in that student's program.

(2) The Director shall make exceptions to the requirement under paragraph (1)(D) in the case of—

(A) active duty as a member of the armed services;

(B) disability certified by a qualified physician; or

(C) exceptional personal circumstances or emergencies, as determined by the Director.

(h) NOTIFICATION OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.—The Director shall notify each Member of Congress in writing of selections made from such Member's district at least one week before public announcement of such selections is made.

(i) MONITORING IMPLEMENTATION AND COMPLIANCE.—The Director shall monitor the implementation of and compliance of the nominating committees with this Act.

SEC. 4. NONDISCRIMINATION.

(a) SOLICITATION, NOMINATION, AND SELECTION OF STUDENTS.—The Director shall ensure that the solicitation, nomination, and selection of students for the program established by this Act shall be carried out without discrimination on the basis of race, age, handicap, religion, ethnic background, economic status, marital status, parental status, or sexual preference.

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Science Foundation for the purpose of carrying out this Act $5,500,000 for the fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993.

NATIONAL SALUTE TO HOSPITALIZED VETERANS WEEK

HON. JIM JONTZ

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. JONTZ. Mr. Speaker, this coming week, February 12 through 18, is National Salute to Hospitalized Veterans Week. On this occasion, I would like to recognize the outstanding health care which the Department of Veterans' Affairs Medical Center provides in Marion, IN, and the dedicated VA employees who make it all possible.

This center was opened in 1889 as a soldiers' home for disabled volunteer soldiers. In 1921 it became a psychiatric facility which today has 99 buildings on a 151-acre campus.

Marion is a referral center that provides acute psychiatric care for veterans in northern Indiana, for the care of subacute psychiatric patients for whom care cannot be provided at the Indianapolis VA Medical Center, as well as for chronic psychiatric and extended care patients from throughout Indiana. In fiscal year 1987 it served over 3,000 inpatients, and had more than 60,000 outpatient visits.

I have toured this facility many times, and have been impressed by the care and commitment which the staff, consisting of approximately 1,000 full-time-equivalent employees, provides these veterans. Particularly impressive is the manner in which the staff has been able to cope with continuing budget cuts in light of an ever-increasing workload.

There is reason to be very concerned about the kind of care that will be offered at the Marion Medical Center, as well as every other VA medical facility, under the current and proposed budget. It is going to be increasingly difficult to retain existing staff, and hire new staff, unless the budget for the Department of Veterans' Affairs is increased. Staff shortages will eventually lead to the closing of beds, and the turning away of patients. Our Nation's veterans, to whom so much is owed, will no longer be able to rely on this facility, and other VA facilities, to provide essential services. If this is allowed to happen, our commitment to this Nation's veterans will not have been kept.

The hospitals and other medical units of the Department of Veterans' Affairs are an integral part of this Nation's health care delivery system. There is still time to reverse the effect of budget cuts on our VA health care program.

There is much that our Nation owes to the hospitalized veterans that are being honored. As we pause next week to honor our Nation's hospitalized veterans, let us remember that it will require more than our good will to provide these individuals with the care that they need. It will require the strong financial commitment of this Congress to provide veterans medical care that our Nation can be proud of.

PUGWASH

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, during the debate on the Federal pay proposal, Mrs. BOXER raised an incident that deserves the attention of our colleagues and the public.

Last week, in a periodical press gallery election, four reporters were purged from the executive committee over the issue of disclosure.

Ousted were journalists who tried to enforce a 50-year rule—ignored by their colleagues—which says the outside income of gallery reporters must be made public.

So, while the latter-day Lord Actons wrote that "honoraria corrupt Congress and paid travel corrupts absolutely," they voted to continue collecting speech fees and enjoying travel to plush resorts—without disclosure—as if their objectivity could never be questioned.

Well, hogwash—or, as the Post might say, "pugwash." I guess under their system you can't kill the messenger but it's OK to bribe him in secret.

IN RECOGNITION OF BLACK HISTORY MONTH

HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to pay tribute to black America. Black history, from slavery to civil rights, has been wrought with struggle and conflict. The first black Americans were brought to this country in the 1600's as indentured servants. Eventually, the evil of slavery became incorporated in American society and by the early 1800's, one-third of the Southern population was enslaved, and those blacks who were not, suffered harsh discrimination. But they did not give up. Staunch opponents and victims of slavery took steps to rid society of this disgrace. Harriet Tubman is one black leader who should be admired for her role in instituting the underground railroad which led slaves to freedom.

With the declaration of the Emancipation Proclamation in 1863, it would seem that the pathway to black freedom had been cleared. But this was only the first step. This liberty only put fear into the white population. Restrictions were put on activities of black citizens. There were "whites only" restaurants, theaters, schools, and even water fountains. Extremist groups such as the Ku Klux Klan began to gain recognition. Yet another widespread movement had to be implemented in order for blacks to obtain their inherent rights. The civil rights movement was the response.

The civil rights movement is our most recent and most widely familiar period of black struggle. From this period arose great black leaders like Rosa Parks, who refused to give up her seat on a Montgomery bus and, subsequently, ignited the movement; and Adam Clayton Powell who took steps to personally desegregate this very Congress. Most noted, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., has been granted a day of recognition so that his courage will be remembered and followed by those blacks still suffering from discrimination.

Those notable black leaders, and the many unnamed black freedom fighters, should be gratefully acknowledged. From slavery, to discrimination, to the relative equality that blacks exercise today, they have come a long way and they deserve utmost respect. Black History Week is the appropriate time to congratulate black Americans on their accomplishments.

EDUCATION OF THE HANDICAPPED ACT

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, there are over 4 million children and youth with handicaps in America being served under the Education of the Handicapped Act [EHA]. This act constitutes the principal mechanism through which the Federal Government assists States and local agencies to meet the special education needs of handicapped children. Central to the act are discretionary grant programs (Parts C–G) aimed at: first, supporting and improving the direct services provided under EHA; second, identifying and solving persistent problems in providing services; and third, assisting individuals with handicaps to make the transition to postsecondary education, vocational training, and competitive and supported employment. The programs support a variety of essential research, technical assistance, demonstration, information dissemination, personnel training, and model projects and activities. This program, as revised in the landmark Public Law 99–457, is intended to assist States and local agencies toward achieving special education and related services for all infants, children and youth with handicaps.

The discretionary programs, which need to be reauthorized by September 30, 1989, provide critical funds of approximately $180 million to State and local education agencies, other public agencies, private nonprofit organizations, and institutions of higher education. The main and common goal is the improvement of the educational and related services provided to infants, children and youth with handicaps. Over the years, the discretionary grant programs have supported a variety of successful program endeavors, such as:

Regional Resource and Federal Centers Programs in Vermont, Kentucky, Florida, Ohio, Utah, and Oregon;

Services for Deaf-Blind Children and Youth Program resulting in funding for 41 single State and multistate projects;

Early Education for Handicapped Children including, strategies of services for birth to 5 year olds, inservice training for infant personnel, mainstreaming models, service delivery for medically fragile infants, as well as a number of outreach, experimental and research projects, and three research institutes;

Severely Handicapped Program, which provides funding for a series of projects on social and communication skills, as well as a number of projects to develop statewide system change in services to the severely handicapped;

Postsecondary Programs, which focus on regional programs for deaf students, projects to adapt existing postsecondary programs to allow participation of the persons with handicaps with their nonhandicapped peers, research and model programs to improve the access to postsecondary opportunities;

Secondary Education and Transition Services for Handicapped Youth which focuses on cooperative models for the implementation of transition services, job related training projects for mildly and moderately handicapped and supported employment model programs for students with severe handicaps;

Special Education Personnel Development, in the areas of preservice, inservice, model training approaches, and parent training programs throughout the country;

Information and Recruitment Clearinghouses, including three national clearinghouses on education of the handicapped, postsecondary education, and personnel recruitment;

Innovation and Development programs which foster implementation and demonstration of research findings, and support field and student initiated research;

Media Services and Captioned Films which include such programs as the Loan Service for Captioned Films and Recordings for the Blind;

Special Education Technology which assures that new technological advances such as videodiscs, personal computers, and new communications devices be applied to the education of the handicapped; and

Special Studies

The reauthorization of the discretionary programs of EHA will assure that all infants, children and youth with handicaps, and their families, will be able to take full advantage of the services provided at the State and local level. Promoting the widespread availability of these services has enabled children and youth with handicaps to participate fully and independently in their educational environment to reach their full educational potential. The discretionary programs have empowered parents with vital information and training, facilitated the availability of trained personnel to serve all children and youth with handicaps, and expanded the knowledge base of best practices through research and the development of instructional media. If infants, children, and youth with handicaps are to benefit equally from educational opportunities they must be afforded the means for doing so. This bill will complement the Federal assistance to States under EHA part B and part H, to implement free and appropriate educational programs for all infants, children and youth with handicaps, by supporting the technical assistance, information, training, technological, and research activities necessary to assure that services are provided at the State and local level.

For the reasons described above, I would urge my colleagues to support this legislation which is critical to assuring the equal educational opportunity of all infants, children, and youth with handicaps.

The text of the bill follows:

SALUTE TO AMERICAN FLORAL INDUSTRY

HON. E de la GARZA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to recognize the men and women in America's floral industry for their help in making last month's bicentennial inaugural activities a visual pleasure for the thousands of visitors who came to Washington.

Credit goes to the Society of American Florists which coordinated the procurement, design, and delivery of over 300,000 floral arrangements to all the official bicentennial inaugural events. More than 200 SAF members from around the country came to the Nation's Capital, at their own expense, to help. I know of at least 10 volunteers who were from my own State of Texas.

Flowers are not often thought of as agricultural products, but they are. And like food, flowers provide nourishment. Food nourishes the body. Flowers help nourish meaning in our lives. It's not surprising that studies have shown flowers actually improve and benefit an individual's mental well-being.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Society of American Florists for helping enhance the festive spirit of the Bicentennial Inaugural. And I salute the entire floral industry for its ongoing efforts to make our world a much more pleasant place to live and work.

LEGISLATION TO ASSIST SMALL COMMUNITIES WITH GROUND WATER RADIUM CONTAMINATION

HON. J. DENNIS HASTERT

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. HASTERT. Mr. Speaker, last year I was pleased to see the Radium Grant Removal Program incorporated and passed by both Chambers in H.R. 791, a ground water research bill. While efforts were made in the final days of the last session to resolve differences between the House and Senate versions of the legislation, the job proved too complicated to complete before adjournment.

Both House and Senate versions established this grant program to provide assistance to small communities experiencing problems in their drinking water because of naturally occurring radium contamination.

I am today introducing a separate bill which will provide communities across the country some relief in financing the installation of expensive technology that is needed to remove the radium and bring those affected water systems into compliance with stringent standards set by EPA.

A conservative estimate of the total capital costs for installation of technology for communities nationwide with populations under 25,000 is $1 billion. While we cannot begin to allocate this level of assistance, the $20 million this bill authorizes over 3 years will allow local communities with populations under 20,000 to use the money to provide insurance and to prepay interest for local obligations. By reducing the overall financial burden on municipalities, each Federal dollar used will maximize what a local government can afford to pay. In a time of scarce budget dollars, this seems a judicious allocation of our resources.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that you and the other Members of the House will join me in this effort to help small communities enable themselves to obtain safe drinking water.

INTRODUCTION OF TOY SAFETY AND CHILD PROTECTION ACT

HON. SAM GEJDENSON
OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Toy Safety and Child Protection Act. As you may recall, I first introduced this legislation in the 100th Congress. The intention of this bill is to address a growingly serious problem: The need to increase the safety of toys sold in the United States. This legislation would require toy manufacturers to place warning labels on an especially dangerous class of toys: Those containing small parts which can cause injury and death of children by choking. This legislation would also require warning labels to state the potential hazards of the toy to young children.

In 1986, at least 133,000 children were treated in hospital emergency rooms for toy-related injuries. There were also at least 35 reported fatalities in 1986. The second largest category of toy-related injuries involved the ingestion or aspiration of small toys or parts of toys, or insertions of these objects in the nose or ears. In 1985 alone, small toys or toy parts were responsible for 18 deaths, and over 12,000 injuries.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission, which sets safety standards for certain toys and other children's articles, recognized the danger of toys with small parts when it prohibited toy manufacturers from making toys with small parts designed for children under the age of 3. If a toy intended for under age 3 fits within a test cylinder 1.25 inches in diameter, it may not be marketed to that child.

Toy manufacturers, however, still produce thousands of toys for children over 3 with small parts. The Consumer Product Safety Commission does not require these toys to have informative labels which warn parents not to buy them for kids under 3.

Warning labels currently found on some toys are entirely voluntary, and are in some cases inadequate and confusing. There are thousands more toys on the market with small parts designed for children over the age of 3 that do not contain any warning label at all.

The CPSC recommends that parents "select toys to suit the age, skills, abilities, and interests of the individual child." The CPSC acknowledges, however, that "not all toys are age labeled or provide adequate explanations of why certain toys may be inappropriate or even hazardous for children who are younger or older than the recommended ages." The CPSC has unfortunately failed to take regulatory action to require toy manufacturers to place informative labeling on their products.

Those toy manufactuers that include warning labels on their products, furthermore, may not adequately phrase the warning, or give sufficient information, to allow the parents to make an informed decision. A recent informal poll of parental toy buyers done by the Toy Group of the Americans for Democratic Action demonstrated that most parents think that toy warning labels have to do with educational level rather than safety. Many parents indicated a willingness to buy toys marked "recommended for age 3 and up" for their child who was under 3 years of age because they believed that their child was smarter than average and could "grow into" the toy.

When parents were informed that the warning label actually referred to the safety of the toy, not a single parent was willing to purchase the toy for their child.

The Toy Safety and Child Protection Act will resolve this problem not only be requiring all toys with small parts to have warning labels, but requires the warning label to include the word "warning" in capital letters and by containing a description of the hazardous consequences which can result from use of the toy by a child under 3. While minimum standards for the new label would be determined by the Consumer Product Safety Commission, a likely possibility would be "warning: this toy contains small parts—use of this toy by a child under 3 years of age may cause choking."

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues with young children and grandchildren, on their next trip to the toy store, to take a close look at the toys with small parts. They may see a paint set, currently available at toy stores and manufactured by Knobler—H.K., which includes a minute paint brush which fails the small parts test and could easily be swallowed. The toy has no label. My colleagues may also find a "little mommy" diaper and bottle set, which contains a descriptive label stating "ages 3 and up," but which does not state that it contains small parts which would also fail the cylinder test.

This legislation is especially important as there is a growing realization that current regulations to protect children under the age of 3 from toys with small parts are inadequate. The CPSC voted on February 5, 1988, to seek information on the merits of increasing the dimensions of the test cylinder used to enforce the current standard. This decision came after a formal petition filed by the Consumer Federation of America and the New York State Attorney General charging that the current standard does not adequately protect children from exposure to toys with parts that may cause choking. Statistics gathered by the CPSC indicated that 37 deaths were caused between 1973 and 1983 by small toy parts larger than the current CPSC standard.

Requiring manufacturers to place warning labels on toys with small parts would be a perfect complement to a stricter CPSC standard on small parts. More dangerous toys would come under regulation and more parents would know of the danger of the toys they see in the toy store.

Parents have a right to know which toys contain small parts and what small parts can do to young children. Deaths due to small parts in toys are preventable. Congress must intervene where the Consumer Product Safety Commission has failed. If the life of one child is saved by a proper warning label, it will be worth the effort.

CONGRESSMAN TOM LANTOS HONORED FOR HIS CONTRIBUTION TO WORKER SAFETY

HON. NANCY PELOSI
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues in the House a special honor that has been given our colleague TOM LANTOS. In recognition of his contributions to workplace safety and health, TOM has been honored with the "1988 Commitment of Life" award by the National Safe Workplace Institute [NSWI]. The awards are made annually to a small number of individuals nationally by the National Safe Workplace Institute, a private nonprofit organization founded to investigate workplace safety and health issues, to intervene on behalf of individuals to assure worker health and safety, and to acknowledge individuals who have made an important contribution to workplace safety and health. Mr. Speaker, TOM is the only Member of this House who has been so honored.

In presenting the award to Congressman LANTOS last week, Joseph A. Kinney, the executive director of the National Safe Workplace Institute gave him high praise:

From the standpoint of job safety and health, Congressman TOM LANTOS has proven himself to be one of the best friends of the American workers.

TOM was recognized for his activities as chairman of the Subcommittee on Employment and Housing for the Government Operations Committee. Mr. Speaker, I know first hand of his contribution to worker health and safety, because I served as a member of his subcommittee in the 100th Congress.

Under TOM's able leadership the committee has undertaken a number of important initiatives for worker safety. The investigation of unsafe conditions in the meatpacking industry prodded the Federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration [OSHA] to issue the highest fines to date for violations of Federal worker protection laws and led OSHA to develop a new program to assure better safety in meat packing.

The subcommittee investigation of the failure of the Federal Government to seek criminal penalties against companies whose willful negligence has led to the death and permanent injury of workers forced the U.S. Department of Justice to alter its policy on seeking criminal penalties against those who willfully violate safety laws. A recent Illinois Supreme Court decision, which relied heavily on the oversight report of the Employment and Housing Subcommittee, is only the beginning of TOM's positive impact in this area.

Under TOM's leadership the subcommittee also undertook an important investigation into the dismantling of CAL-OSHA and held hearings in San Francisco on the impact of that decision upon California working men and women. He also held hearings on the failure of OSHA to issue regulations to protect health-care workers from AIDS and other blood-borne diseases such as hepatitis B. As a result of his initiative, OSHA finally issued its long-delayed regulations.

Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues in the House to join me in paying tribute to our colleague, my neighbor and good friend, TOM LANTOS for his receiving this important recognition.

UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, on January 22 the Ukrainian people celebrated their 71st Independence Day. The Ukrainian National Republic was formed in 1918 with high hopes of freedom, sovereignty, and independence. This unconditional declaration in 1918 proclaimed the rights for all Ukrainian citizens. The rights included freedom of speech, religion and press, security of individual, and personal property, the 8-hour workday and freedom of assembly and minorities. As a member of the Helsinki Commission, who has looked at the human rights picture worldwide for 8 years, I value these rights very highly.

The brave Ukrainian people sought and got the right to practice freely their unique culture, language and religion. Unfortunately, however, after a short period of time—in the early 1920's, the Bolsheviks took over and denied this nation any attempt to exercise self-determination.

Despite almost 70 years of Soviet domination, the dreams of freedom and strong nationalistic feeling are alive among the people of Ukraine as well as among the thousands of Americans of Ukrainian background. I am honored to join with the Ukrainian-American in Pennsylvania and all over the United States, to memorialize the 71st anniversary of the declaration of independence of Ukraine.

Sadly, today the human rights activitsts in Ukraine are being punished, harassed, and slandered simply for trying to exercise their basic rights; such as freedom of speech and assembly. While I recognize and credit the human rights reform process that is taking place in the Soviet Union, I feel strongly that there is much room for improvement.

The Ukrainian-Americans, who still feel strong ties to the native country they left behind, have both preserved their cultural traditions and integrated them into American society. Their contribution to American life, span from Ukrainian folk arts to vibrant community activities. They publish 2 daily newspapers, 8 major weekly newspapers and over 80 weekly and monthly periodicals and magazines. Their political, educational, and professional societies as well as various youth organizations are active in many areas of American culture and society.

I am very proud to represent a large number of Ukrainian-Americans and I join with them in expressing our faith and hope that the millions of Ukrainians will be successful in seeking to regain their political freedom and self determination.

WOMEN IN DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1989

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mrs. Speaker, today I join with my colleagues, Representative MICKEY LELAND and Representative OLYMPIA SNOWE in introducing the Women in Development Act of 1989.

Women produce, process, and market up to 80 percent of the food in developing countries. They run 70 percent of all microenterprises. One-third of all households are sustained by women. If we help 100,000 women, we are helping 400,000 children.

Last year, many of you cosponsored our legislation and helped us send minor tremors through the halls of the Agency for International Development. Over the last year, efforts by AID to train its personnel to integrate women into the planning, implementation and evaluation of its development projects have increased notably.

Women are too important to the future of the developing nations to be marginalized or neglected. When women are offered resources and the power to make the decisions over those resources, they accomplish impressive results, for themselves and for the communities the United States is trying to assist. Research shows that when women are integrated into the planning and implementation of a development project, the project is more likely to succeed and to benefit more people.

Now we are working to incorporate the women in developrnent policy into the foreign aid authorization, making it a permanent part of U.S. development policy. We ask you to join us in this effort.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM G. EVANS

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, January 30, 1989, the community of northeast Ohio suffered a tragic loss with the passing of Mr. William G. Evans.

The list of Bill's contributions to his country and community is endless. Few people knew of Bill's distinguished service in World War II with the 3d Army Armored Division in Europe. On one occasion, he crawled to safety from his burning tank, an incident which proved he earned his three battle stars.

After the war, Bill returned to Cleveland and began working to instill quality and equality in all levels of government. In the late sixties, he played a key role in Carl Stokes' election as the first black mayor of a major American city. Through his leadership in such organizations as the Americans for Democratic Action and the Cleveland City Club, Bill was at the forefront of many important battles, such as the fight to restore education funding. Bill believed that a quality education should be available to everyone, not just to those who can afford it. This was the kind of intense concern for others that made Bill such a special person.

Bill will be remembered for his warmth, dependability, sense of humor, and sense of commitment. I had the pleasure of knowing Bill on both a professional and personal level. He will always be a great friend. Many Americans may never learn of Bill Evans' work on their behalf. Many more do know and will always keep Bill close in their memories.

EMANUEL FOUNDATION FOR HUNGARIAN CULTURE

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to an outstanding organization, the Emanuel Foundation for Hungarian Culture. Founded in 1987, this group of concerned Hungarian-Americans was established to restore and promote the few remaining vestiges of Jewish culture in Hungary through the creation of an International Tribute Committee for Hungarian Jewish Holocaust Victims. The Emanuel Foundation is led by such distinguished Americans as actor Tony Curtis, Nobel Laureate Elie Wiesel, and chairman of the World Jewish Congress, Edgar Bronfman.

As my colleagues know, hundreds of thousands of Hungarian Jews were murdered by the Nazis during the Second World War, despite the heroic efforts of such individuals as Raoul Wallenberg and others who succeeded in saving tens of thousands. Jewish culture in Hungary was highly developed, but the hateful fanaticism of Hitler and the Hungarian Fascists turned many of its cultural monuments to ashes.

In memory of the victims of this great tragedy, the Hungarian Government has provided a plaza at the intersection of Rumbach and Wesselnyi Street in central Budapest, and at this excellent location the Emanuel Foundation for Hungarian Culture is constructing a memorial to Hungarian holocaust victims and heroes. The inspiration for the project was the growing concern that the atrocities of the past were being forgotten and, even worse, denied.

This monument will assure that present-day Hungarians, Hungarian-Americans, and families of the victims of Fascist atrocities do not forget the unspeakable tragedy of the Holocaust, and it will remind future generations that the world must condemn genocide now and forever. The memorial is a sculpted rendering of a tree in the shape of an inverted menorah, with the names of Holocaust victims inscribed on its leaves and base.

Mr. Speaker, we must never allow the atrocities of the past to go forgotten, unless we are willing to risk their recurrence. This monument in the center of Budapest—a city where thousands died at the hands of Nazi and Fascist murderers—will serve forever to remind and to warn us. The Emanuel Foundation for Hungarian Culture deserves our commendation for this outstanding effort.

NATIONAL SALUTE TO HOSPITALIZED VETERANS

HON. BRUCE A. MORRISON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 16th annual National Salute to Hospitalized Veterans, which will be held on February 14.

The National Salute to Hospitalized Veterans is a way of paying tribute to these men and women not only for the contributions they have made to this country, but also to the special courage they have shown in their daily battles against illness, pain, and loneliness. As part of the salute, special quests will be touring Veterans' Administration facilities across the country to visit with patients. Veterans, youth, civic, and religious groups around the Nation will be taking part in activities to honor our hospitalized veterans.

The National Salute to Hospitalized Veterans is a fitting tribute to these men and women who have given so much to their country. It is important that we as citizens take the time to acknowledge their sacrifices and let them know that they are remembered and appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, many thousands of veterans of America's armed forces have served this Nation in times of both peace and war, and in doing so they have assured the safety and prosperity of all our people as this Nation enters its third century of independence.

Each year, more than a million veterans enter Veterans' Administration facilities nationwide for medical attention.

The Veterans' Administration, for the 16th consecutive year, has organized a national day of tribute honoring all hospitalized veterans, with the purpose of urging all Americans to remember these men and women especially on this day and throughout the year.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join that effort and offer a special tribute to the patients in the West Haven Veterans' Administration Medical Center, who deserve our concern and sincere appreciation.

I call upon my colleagues and all our citizens to pay tribute to hospitalized veterans on this day and each day of the year.

WASTE ISOLATION PILOT PLANT LAND WITHDRAWAL ACT OF 1989

HON. JOE SKEEN

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation along with my distinguished colleague, RICHARD STALLINGS of Idaho, that will help address a serious national security and environmental problem facing this Nation.

This bill, the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant Land Withdrawal Act of 1989, allows for the possible opening of the WIPP facility to receive transuranic waste. Located near Carlsbad, NM, the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant [WIPP] has been designated to become the Nation's first repository for defense-generated transuranic waste. This is a Department of Energy project that was authorized by Congress in 1980.

While I also introduced WIPP land withdrawal legislation during the 100th Congress, this bill has been significantly expanded from what was introduced in 1987. The reasons for the changes were to address numerous concerns regarding the operation of the WIPP project and ensure that the Department of Energy meets strict environmental and safety tests.

The transuranic waste destined for WIPP is currently sitting at the Department of Energy facilities around the Nation including the Rocky Flats plant in Colorado, and the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory. At several of these facilities, particularly Rocky Flats, the last of the authorized storage space for transuranic waste is being quickly used up. What is especially alarming about this situation is that there is no place to store any overflow waste generated at Rocky Flats. Without addressing this critical situation, Rocky Flats could close within the next few months.

Above all, the current method of storing this waste is not a final solution to safely disposing of defense-generated transuranic waste. That is why the Federal Government has spent nearly $650 million building WIPP.

In its most basic form, the legislation would permanently withdraw 10,240 acres of Federal lands located in New Mexico from certain public land laws. Until the land withdrawal is finalized, no waste can be transported to the WIPP facility. In the broadest sense, it is legislation that protects the health and safety of the citizens of New Mexico and the Nation. If it is proven to be a safe repository, this legislation would allow WIPP to open and become operational.

I want to make it perfectly clear that passage of this legislation does not automatically allow for the shipment of transuranic waste to WIPP. There are many conditions and certain environmental standards that must be met before waste shipments can begin. The responsibility will clearly be on the back of the Department of Energy to prove to Congress and the Nation that WIPP is ready to operate and receive transuranic waste.

One of the important additions to this legislation is creating a trigger on when the actual land withdrawal will take place. That trigger is the successful completion and approval of the Department of Energy's Final Safety Analysis Report which proves the facility has been safely designed.

Under this legislation, absolutely no waste can be received at WIPP until the Department of Energy shows that WIPP complies with Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] standards for the storage of transuranic waste. At that point there is a strict cap on the amount of waste that can be received at WIPP until EPA disposal standards are met. Within this cap, only the amount of waste that is necessary for specific experimental and operational tests can be received at the facility. The Department of Energy must show this waste is retrievable until EPA disposal standards are met.

If the Department of Energy determines by a certain date that WIPP is not a suitable site for permanent disposal of transuranic waste, the legislation provides for a process to retrieve the waste and close the facility.

There will be a substantial amount of oversight of the project. The State of New Mexico, the Environmental Evaluation Group [EEG], the National Academy of Sciences, and the Environmental Protection Agency will each have an important role to play in evaluating various aspects of the project and consulting with the Secretary of Energy. In fact, the State of New Mexico and the EEG will have the ability to implement a conflict resolution process to resolve specified concerns they may have with the WIPP project.

I know the safe transportation of this waste is a major concern in New Mexico and the other corridor States through which waste shipments will travel. This legislation contains numerous provisions to address transportation safety such as requiring Nuclear Regulatory Commission certification of the container that will be used for transporting the waste. The bill also authorizes the Department of Energy to provide emergency prepardness training and equipment to affected communities.

One of the key components of the bill authorizes the payment of $250 million to the State of New Mexico.

Again, this legislation only sets in motion the possibility of WIPP opening. The bill establishes a long checklist of requirements and conditions that the Department of Energy must meet. I feel these provisions adequately protect the safety and welfare of the people of New Mexico and this Nation.

If the Department of Energy wants to solve a very critical situation regarding the storage and ultimate disposal of defense-generated transuranic waste, it knows what must be accomplished. I believe the requirements are necessary and reasonable.

I ask that my colleagues join me in seeing that this legislation moves quickly through the House.

IT'S TIME TO REPEAL THE EARNINGS LIMIT ON SOCIAL SECURITY

HON. ALFRED A. (AL) McCANDLESS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. McCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week I reintroduced legislation to repeal the earnings limit on Social Security. The earnings limitation is an unnecessary burden on the elderly. It discourages senior citizens' efforts to better their own condition, to remain independent, and to maintain a sense of pride in their ability to work.

Last year, the Commissioner of Social Security, Dorcas Hardy, called for an end to the earnings limit when she testified before the Ways and Means Committee. She pointed out that the earnings limitation equals a 50 percent marginal tax rate, because for every $2 a senior earns over the limit, $1 is withheld from his or her Social Security check.

At present the annual earnings limitation is $6,480 for those age 62–64, and $8,880 for those age 65–69. There is no limit on earnings for those age 70 and over.

The earnings limit discriminates against working people and work income. Other sources of income, such as dividends and interest, do not count toward the earnings cap. The earnings test reduces work incentives, and causes some older workers to deliberately hold down their earnings to avoid being penalized.

Repealing the earnings test would reduce the administrative costs of Social Security. The Social Security Administration spends a significant amount of its resources in efforts to identify overpayments and to collect from those senior citizens who have earned too much. The Social Security Administration informs me that over half a million overpayments were made in 1988 because of the earnings limitation. Many seniors who have received overpayments find that it is a real hardship to pay the money back. They may file a request for a waiver of the overpayment, based on financial hardship. Eliminating the need for adjudicating such requests would save money and help cover the cost of any additional benefits paid to older workers.

For these, and other reasons, the time has come to repeal the Social Security earnings limitation. People over 65 should have the freedom to work and earn as much as they can, and to remain in the labor force as long as they want, without having to worry about their Social Security checks being reduced. The earnings limitation is actually a form of age discrimination, and it should be repealed.

GOVERNMENT SECRECY

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, February 8, 1989, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

GOVERNMENT SECRECY

This year millions of federal documents will be stamped confidential, secret, or top secret to restrict their distribution. Every nation needs to keep secrets. Sensitive information used by diplomats, the military, and intelligence officers could harm the national interest if it became widely known. But when too many documents are classified, and when too many people have access to them, it becomes extremely difficult to protect that information. And when the classification system is used for political rather than national security purposes, confidence in the management of sensitive information is undermined. I have come to the conclusion that it is time to review the government's system of classifying information.

So many government documents are now classified that an accurate accounting may not be possible, but they likely exceed several hundred million pages. In 1987, almost twelve million documents were classified for the first time, 10% more than in 1986. Throughout the 1980s, the volume of classified information has been growing, partly because of increased defense spending and covert activity, but also because of an executive order issued by President Reagan in 1982 that made it easier for government officials to classify documents and keep them classified. It even made it possible for the government to "reclassify" information that had previously been made public. Presidents from Eisenhower to Carter issued executive orders aimed at reducing the volume of classified information. Breaking with that tradition, the Reagan executive order has encouraged greater government secrecy.

Decisions to classify or to declassify information are important in a free society because they determine what information can, and cannot, be made available to the public. Those decisions are routinely made by over 6,700 individuals designated by the President or selected agency heads. Members of Congress may review classified material related to their legislative responsibilities, but they do not make classification decisions. The number of people making such decisions has declined in recent years but is still, in my judgment, too high.

Many documents are given a higher classification than they deserve, and others are classified when they do not merit any special protection at all. Estimates of the rate of overclassification vary enormously from a low of 5% to a high of 50%, but no one disputes that overclassification is a serious problem. It produces cynicism and carelessness among those who handle classified material. It also overwhelms an already strained security system. As Justice Potter Stewart said, "When nearly everything is classified, then nothing is classified."

Too many people have access to classified materials. The procedure for screening individuals before they receive classified information is overburdened by the number of people who are given clearances. Over four million Americans now hold security clearances. Even with expensive efforts to investigate their backgrounds and supervise their activities, the sheer numbers of persons with clearances overwhelms the system and makes effective security very difficult to achieve.

The "need to know" principle is one way to protect classified information, but it is often ignored. Too many people with clearances have access to too much information. A clearance should not entitle a person to anything. It is only one condition for use of classified material. Once someone has met this condition, they should be given only the information they need to know in order to do their job.

Another serious problem is political rather than practical. The freest possible flow of information is essential to the continued vitality of our democratic political process. The power of the Executive Branch to withhold or release sensitive information, like all powers, carries with it the risk of abuse.

Classification decisions can be used to hide misconduct, to avoid public accountability, to manipulate the public policy debate, and to impede congressional oversight. For example, the Department of Energy has known for some time that there were major environmental problems at many of its nuclear weapons production facilities. Yet much of that information, which was of obvious importance for the public safety of those living nearby, was classified for years. Many believe that this information was classified less to protect national security than to prevent government embarrassment and postpone the expense of rebuilding our nuclear production capabilities. In addition accounts of Sandinista aid to guerrillas in El Salvador and the role of Libya in certain terrorist incidents were exaggerated and sometimes timed for their impact on policy debates. Decisions to withhold and misrepresent information in the Iran-conta affair violated legislative reporting requirements and denied the Congress an opportunity to perform its role in making and evaluating foreign policy. Too often classified information is used to make policy look good, rather than to make good policy.

In my view, classification procedures must be revised in order to better protect the national security. The Congress should act to reform the nation's classification system. We need to reduce the number of people with clearances and the volume of classified material. We should further reduce he number of people who make classification decisions and ensure that penalties are imposed when they abuse their authority. We must restore vitality to the "need to know" principle. These changes would strengthen our classification system and allow us to focus our energies on giving the best possible protection to truly sensitive national security information. We also need to guard against the temptation to use classification to hide official misconduct and distort public debates. Both President Bush and the Congress must work together to establish an atmosphere of trust in carrying out their shared responsibilities to protect our national secrets without compromising our democratic institutions.

TRIBUTE TO SECRETARY OF THE ARMY, JOHN O. MARSH, JR.

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a good friend and colleague, the retiring Secretary of the Army, John O. Marsh Jr. He is the longest serving Secretary of the Army or Secretary of War, as the position was called until the creation of the Department of Defense in 1947. On February 2 he beat the record established by Henry Dearborn, President Thomas Jefferson's Secretary of War. His years as the top Army civilian have been marked by quiet, selfless, and determined devotion to duty. Unlike others who seemed eager to work in the glare of the public spotlight, Jack Marsh was content to work quietly behind the scenes to promote the vitally important work of the U.S. Army. He brought to the job an unusual mix of political common sense and Army experience.

Born on August 7, 1926, in Winchester, VA, the future Secretary of the Army was commissioned from OCS in the U.S. Army in 1945 at the age of 19. He is a graduate of Parachute School and Jumpmaster School at Fort Benning and holds senior parachutist wings.

An attorney, John Marsh earned his law degree in 1951 from Washington and Lee University. Gaining admission to the Virginia bar, he took up practice in Strasburg, VA. From 1951 to 1976 he served in the 116th Infantry Regiment, the 29th Infantry Division, and the State Headquarters Detachment to the Virginia National Guard, retiring with the rank of lieutenant colonel in 1976.

From 1963 until 1971 Jack served in Congress, a four-term respresentative from Virginia's Seventh District. While a Member of Congress, he volunteered as a National Guard major for 30 days' active duty in South Vietnam. This experience, the experience he gained in 1973–74 as the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Legislative Affairs, and as his service as Counselor to President Gerald Ford, all helped prepare Jack Marsh to assume the duties as Secretary of the Army in 1981.

Under his quiet leadership, working closely with three very able Army Chiefs of Staff, Generals Edward "Shy" Meyer, John Wickham, and Carl Vuono, the Army has undergone a dramatic transformation in the 1980's. We now have a modern Army—one that has fielded a variety of new, capable, and very lethal weapon systems. A short list of new systems includes the M–1 tank, the M–2 fighting vehicle, the AH–64 Apache helicopter, the multiple launch rocket system, and the Patriot air defense missile.

As important as force modernization to the Army has been, so too has been the solid achievement in improving the quality of Army recruits. Both the Army and the National Guard have seen a tremendous increase in the number of high school graduates serving in uniform. From 1980 to 1988 the number of high school graduates in the Active Force jumped from 54 to 93 percent. In the Guard the figures for the comparable period increased from 61 to 87 percent. Today, leaders throughout the Army point to our service people—enlisted, NCO, and officer—as the finest resource in our military establishment. They are smart, tough, and disciplined.

The U.S. Army today is the beneficiary of the vision, dediction, and quiet effectiveness of John Marsh. He is a true public servant, in the finest sense of those words. Mr. Speaker, as Jack Marsh relinquishes his duties as Secretary of the Army, I want to wish him and his lovely wife, Glenn Ann, all the best that life has to offer.

TRIBUTE TO MR. HERBERT E. ZUCCA

HON. ALAN WHEAT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in recognition of an outstanding citizen of my district, Mr. Herbert E. Zucca, who recently retired after 43 years of dedicated service to our Armed Forces. Mr. Zucca is deserving of special recognition not only for his inspirational leadership and outstanding military service, but also for his unselfish contributions to the community.

Mr. Zucca was born on December 7, 1928, and joined the Navy shortly after his 17th birthday. He served on three different diesel submarines before being discharged from active duty in October 1947. In January 1948 he returned to military service, and for the next 35 years served with the 406th Infantry Regiment, the 314th Infantry Regiment, and the 418th Civil Affairs Company at Richards-Gebaur Air Force Base in Kansas City, MO.

During his 20 years with the 418th, Herb held the highest enlisted position in the unit, dedicating much extra time and energy to his work. He has received the Meritorious Service Medal, the Army Commendation Medal, the Army Achievement Medal with two oak leaf clusters, 10 Army Reserve component achievement medals, three Armed Forces reserve medals, the Asiatic-Pacific Campaign Medal, the World War II Victory Medal, the National Defense Medal, three overseas training ribbons, the NCO Development Program Ribbon (third level), and the enlisted Navy Submariners Badge.

In July 1983, by which time he had reached the rank of first sergeant, Herb was transferred to the Ready Reserve. After his transfer to the Retired Reserve at age 60 last December, Herb is now considering service in a National Guard unit composed of retired reservists receiving no compensation whatsoever.

Last March Herb and his wife, Opal, celebrated their 35th wedding anniversary. Their four children, Timothy, Wayatt, Marta, and Colette, now have families of their own. In 1970, Herb and Opal joined the Foster Parent Program in Jackson County, MO, and have hosted over 160 foster children in their home through this program. In 1985 they also joined the Black Adoption Agency, through which they adopted their daughter LaQuisha. Herb and Opal are also active in their church.

Mr. Speaker, neighbors such as Herb and Opal Zucca are a source of great pride to me as the Representative of the Kansas City metropolitan region. I extend my best wishes to Herb and his family for whatever challenges they take on in the years ahead. It is an honor for me to bring Herb's achievements to the attention of the House and to commend him for his fine service to our area and our Nation.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY CHAPTER OF PLANNED PARENTHOOD

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join so many others in Montgomery County in expressing my appreciation and congratulations to the Montgomery County Chapter of Planned Parenthood. On February 14, the chapter will celebrate its 50th anniversary.

Montgomery County Planned Parenthood began in 1939 as the Maternal Welfare Association, Inc., at the request of the county health officer. They opened their first clinic the following year in space provided by Montgomery General Hospital. In 1943, it became the Planned Parenthood League of Montgomery County and opened a clinic in the Public Health Department of Rockville.

In 1951, the league applied and was granted separate affiliation by Planned Parenthood Federation of America. By 1961, Planned Parenthood merged with the District of Columbia association to form Planned Parenthood of Metropolitan Washington, DC [PPMW].

By 1970, Planned Parenthood established themselves as the most comprehensive family planning organization in the area. It started a volunteer program at the University of Maryland's Student Health Center, began weekly rap sessions for teens, educated clients at the Department of Social Services and Food Stamp Offices, and began programs at the detention centers, group homes, MARC, Head Start, and with parents in the Northeast Health Center. Planned parenthood was appointed to the citizens' advisory committee on family life and human development and to the council on adolescents.

Mr. Speaker, planned parenthood has served thousands of Montgomery County citizens over the past 50 years by providing high quality, low cost family planning services. Nationally, more than 800,000 unintended pregnancies per year are prevented as a direct result of family planning organizations like planned parenthood; more than half of those are among teenagers. Each dollar invested by the Federal Government into a family planning organization like PPMW yields a savings of $2.70 in health and welfare costs.

I am proud to represent such a committed organization, and I salute the dedicated health professionals and community volunteers for their tireless efforts in making available the best in family planning services. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate planned parenthood on their 50th anniversary and wish them many, many more.

THE NATIONAL PUERTO RICAN PUBLIC POLICY AGENDA

HON. JAIME B. FUSTER

OF PUERTO RICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. FUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to share with my colleagues today a matter that should concern us all as the 101st Congress begins to set its priorities for the national agenda. As you know, I represent 3.5 million American citizens in Puerto Rico, but there are also some 2.5 million Puerto Ricans living on the U.S. mainland, and their concerns are sometimes unique.

As such, the National Puerto Rican Coalition, Inc. [NPRC] has established a public policy agenda for 1988–90, and it is that agenda which I want to share with my colleagues today. NPRC, based in Washington, was founded in 1977 to further the social, economic, and political well-being of Puerto Ricans throughout the United States and in Puerto Rico. It is a nonprofit, tax-exempt association providing a presence and voice at the national level for all Puerto Ricans.

I am certain that my colleagues will find the following summary an important one as the Congress debates priorities:

SUMMARY

Nearly two-and-a-half million American citizens of Puerto Rican descent live in the United States mainland. They constitute an identifiable community within the general U.S. population that has a special historical relationship with the United States; an ongoing relationship with Puerto Rico; and a particular economic, social, and educational profile that requires a distinct approach to issues of priority concern.

Because it believes the needs and requirements of the Puerto Rican community differ in some significant aspects from those of other Hispanic groups in the United States, the National Puerto Rican Coalition, Inc., (NPRC) has developed a public policy agenda keyed to those special needs and requirements. While the issues outlined are of major importance to all Hispanic Americans, the NPRC Public Policy Agenda emphasizes the elements that have a special impact on Puerto Ricans.

The 65 national and community organizations that constitute the NPRC membership have selected five issues for special action: (1) civil rights enforcement and empowerment; (2) community economic development; (3) health; (4) education; and (5) welfare reform, employment, and training. NPRC's agenda in each area is summarized below.

CIVIL RIGHTS ENFORCEMENT AND EMPOWERMENT

Puerto Ricans were made citizens of the United States in 1917 with full and expressed recognition of their cultural and language heritage. As an organization of native American citizens, NPRC:

Objects to efforts to make English the official language of the United States;

Asserts Puerto Rican civil rights in such areas as voting, housing, and employment; and Expects that the U.S. Department of Commerce will provide an accurate count of Puerto Ricans in the 1990 Census to ensure their proper representation in the apportionment of political power.

COMMUNITY ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Together with the private sector, federal and state governments have a responsibility for community economic development. Puerto Rican community-based organizations should be an integral part of economic development efforts for low- and moderate-income Americans and must be represented in policy formulation and program design. In this regard NPRC will:

Develop and strengthen partnerships between the public and private sectors and community-based organizations;

Support retention of tax incentives for the economic development of Puerto Rico as being the best interest of the Puerto Rican communities in the United States; and

Encourage the federal government to increase funding for federal housing programs that promote new construction and rehabilitation, especially in low-income areas.

HEALTH

The Puerto Rican community faces serious health risks which are compounded by low income, unemployment, and language barriers. Thus, NPRC:

Supports efforts to extend adequate health insurance, Medicare, and Medicaid to all poverty populations;

Urges federal, state, and local governments to increase funding for substance abuse prevention programs; and Insists that adequate funding be allocated for AIDS education, research, treatment, and outreach through culturally sensitive programs.

EDUCATION

An estimated 50 percent of Puerto Rican youth never finish high school; moreover, the National Center for Health Statistics figures for 1984 show that only 34 percent of Puerto Rican mothers aged 18 and 19 had completed high school. Therefore, NPRC:

Supports efforts to improve access to culturally sensitive adolescent pregnancy prevention programs;

Urges all levels of government to expand dropout prevention and recovery programs starting at the earliest grade levels; and

Exhorts federal, state, and local governments to fund adequately bilingual education and adult literacy programs.

WELFARE REFORM, EMPLOYMENT, AND TRAINING

Given the fact that more than one-third of all Puerto Rican households are on welfare, NPRC:

Supports efforts to provide education and jobs for the poor, especially through programs targeted to female-headed households that also provide health and child care.

VOICE OF DEMOCRACY CONTEST WINNER

HON. RICHARD H. STALLINGS

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. STALLINGS. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to recognize Heidi Weaver, daughter of Ronald and Lynne Weaver. Heidi attends North Gem High School in Bancroft, ID and is the 1988–89 winner of the Voice of Democracy contest for the State of Idaho.

Heidi's speech focuses on the idea that "All the World Is a Stage." She offers a challenge to each of us to take the future into our own hand and use our influence to have a positive effect upon our world. I would like to share her remarks with you:

Imagine yourself in a beautifully decorated auditorium waiting for a great production to begin. The curtain slowly raised on a boy and a girl standing hand-in-hand surveying the world. Their faces are full of undaunted courage, of faith in the future and faith in themselves. An inscription on the stage at their feet reads, "It's your world, what are you going to do with it?" The world belongs to each generation in its time and each generation answers this question in its own way. William Shakespeare said, "All the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely players. They have their exits and entrances, and one man in his time plays many parts."

Each generation has it's moment in the spotlight, plays out its part and then exits leaving the stage upon which the next generation plays out its own unique drama.

The great men and women who came before us have set the stage. Some left it a better place than when they found it, others a worse place. It's our turn, the world is ours, what are we going to do with it?

We, the youth of today, are preparing to step into the world's spotlight tomorrow. The world we face is shadowed by the threat of nuclear war. It's a world where hundreds of people die everyday from fatal and incurable diseases, and a world where people are afraid to leave their homes because they fear for their safety. Is this the kind of world we want to pass on to our children who wait so eagerly in the wings? I say no! America's future is in our hands. We must prepare for the role we'll play in building a bright future for our country.

There are many elements necessary in preparing for a great production, such as costumes, props, and most importantly actors. These elements are also important in preparing for our greatest production, life.

Costumes are an important part of any production, they must be used to emphasize a person's true character not to hide it. The time has come for each of us to take off our costumes and unmask our true selves before the world. We must have the courage to stand up for what we believe in. We show our true character not only by what we say, but by what we do.

Props can also add to any production, but we must be careful not to become so obsessed with material things that we forget that which is truly important. How can we as a society compare the material things often valued so highly to the beauty, dignity and value of a human life!

Just as the actors are the most important element in building a good production, the key to building a strong nation lies in building strong in individuals. Noted statesman Richard Aldington once said, "The wealth of a country lies in its men and women. If they are mean, unhappy and ill, the country is poor." Just as no man can rise above the limitations of his character no nation can rise above the character of its citizens.

Each of us writes the script by which we live. We are the directors of our future. We have the potential to become anything we desire. If we set our sights high enough our future will reflect that desire. James Allen said, "Man attains the measure that he aspires. His longing to be is the gauge of what he can be. To fix the mind is to foreordain achievement."

The future doesn't just happen, it is always shaped by somebody. Are we going to reach out for that future or are we going to trust that future to someone else?

We must begin to prepare for the future now for our lives set the stage upon which the youth of tomorrow will build their lives. The future belongs ot each one of us and we decide the role we'll play in life's drama. "I am only one, but I am one. I cannot do everything, but still I can do something. What I can do I should do and with the help of God I will do!" The world is yours, what are you going to do with it?

CONGRATULATIONS TO THOMASVILLE AND CUMMINGS HIGH SCHOOLS

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, the saying goes that good things come to those who wait. The fans of the football teams at Thomasville High School and Cummings High School can attest to that. Both schools had waited a number of years to win their first North Carolina high school football championships. In 1988 the long waits came to an end as both schools emerged victorious from the State high school football playoffs. The entire Sixth District of North Carolina is proud to say that two of our State's new football champions come from our district.

The new 3–A champions are the Cavaliers of Cummings High School in Burlington, NC. In the 19-year history of the school, the Cavaliers had never won a State championship before. In 1988 the Cavaliers were perfect. When they defeated Shelby 41 to 14 on December 9, 1988, Cummings capped a perfect 15-0 season. Congratulations go to each member of the Cavalier Football Team, Head Coach Dave Gutshall and his assistant coaches, Principal J.A. Freeman, and the students, faculty, and staff of Cummings High School.

If Cummings' wait for a football championship seemed long, the fans of Thomasville High School in Thomasville, NC, would say that was nothing. Thomasville High has been around, in one form or another, for more than 50 years, and the school had never won a football championship before. The Bulldogs came close in 1983 and 1987, but in both instances, lost the title game. Those years of frustration came to an end on December 9, 1988, when the Bulldogs beat the previously unbeaten Hertford Bears 13 to 10 to capture their first State 2-A title. Congratulations go to the entire Bulldog Football Team, Head Coach Allen Brown and his assistant coaches, Principal Daniel Cockman, and the students, faculty, and staff of Thomasville High School.

As they say, good things come to those who wait. Two Sixth District schools waited a long time to savor victory, but the longer the wait, the sweeter the taste. Congratulations to Thomasville and Cummings High Schools. There is a dilemma on the horizon. Thomasville will be moving up to the 3-A ranks next year. There is a good chance that we might have two Sixth District football champions playing each other for another title. The good news is that the Sixth District stands a good chance of being the home of next year's 3-A champions.

TRUTH IN DEFICIT REDUCTION

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, as you know, last year Congresswoman OAKAR and I, at your direction, established a task force to examine the impact of the Social Security Trust Fund on the Federal deficit. The task force consisted of a bipartisan group of noted economists and experts on the Federal budget and Social Security.

Yesterday, we released the report of this task force to the public. The task force recommends the removal of the Social Security Trust Fund from the budget deficit calculation. A summary of the reasons for this recommendation follows:

First, the future costs of providing for an aging population requires a greatly increased rate of national savings. Instead, the national savings rate today is barely one-third of the average over the 30-year period from 1950 to 1980.

Second, the current practice of using Social Security Trust Fund surpluses to offset current Government expenses means that these surpluses are not adding to national savings. Additional national savings are essential if we are to increase investment and growth—thereby reducing the burden imposed on future workers who will be supporting the baby boomers during retirement.

Third, the use of Social Security receipts to reduce operating deficits results in funding general outlays with regressive wage taxes instead of the more progressive corporate and personal income taxes.

Fourth, although the Social Security Trust Fund is currently running a surplus, after 2030 the fund will need to redeem securities now being purchased to keep the system solvent. Using these surpluses to cover current deficits misleads the public by depicting greater progress on deficit reduction than is actually occurring and by not explicitly showing the Government's future obligation to redeem the trust fund's bonds.

In conclusion, if the reserves in the Social Security Trust Fund are to be of any benefit in easing the financial burden of the baby-boom generation's retirement, it must be applied to enhancing economic growth. This can only occur if we truly balance the Federal budget and use the Social Security Trust Fund reserve to augment national savings. In removing Social Security from the deficit calculation we will also remove the temptation to balance the budget on the backs of senior citizens who have been promised a secure retirement.

Ms. OAKAR and I, along with two cosponsors have introduced legislation to remove the Social Security Trust Funds from the deficit calculation beginning in fiscal year 1991. Doing so will restore honesty to our budget process and help assure the future of Social Security for both current and future recipients.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR WYCHE FOWLER

HON. GEORGE (BUDDY) DARDEN

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, our former colleague WYCHE FOWLER has represented Georgia for 2 years now in the U.S. Senate, and already is distinguishing himself as one of the leaders of that great legislative body.

Just recently, Senator FOWLER was named assistant floor leader by Senate Majority Leader GEORGE MITCHELL. Clearly, the Senate has come to recognize and appreciate the outstanding qualities of leadership and statesmanship which we in the House of Representatives saw WYCHE FOWLER exhibit during his 10 years serving Georgia's Fifth Congressional District.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit for inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a column published last Sunday in the Atlanta Journal and Constitution. In that column, Durwood McAlister pays tribute to Senator WYCHE FOWLER for his distinguished representation of Georgia as a Member of the U.S. Senate.

FOWLER EMERGES AS SENATE LEADER IN ONLY TWO YEARS

The United States Senate has been described as "the most exclusive club in the world." Inside that club is a smaller group, the even more exclusive "inner club"—the leadership. That is where much of Washington's power and influence are concentrated.

And who is the newest member of that "inner club"? None other than Georgia's very junior senator, Wyche Fowler.

Only two years ago, Mr. Fowler was the liberal representative of Georgia's 5th District in Congress, given little chance of success in his statewide race for the Senate. He not only won the race; he has quickly established himself as a force to be reckoned with in the nation's capital.

Despite his short tenure, he was chosen this week by Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell as assistant floor leader, a position that makes him an active participant in the agenda-setting deliberations of the Democratic leadership in the Senate.

In his book, "Safire's Political Dictionary," William Safire has this to say about the "inner club" of the Congress: "Its members, whatever their political affiliation, have certain things in common: some degree of seniority and a secure seat; a working belief in compromise; the quality and force of their personality; and a willingness to do solid, difficult work in the committees where legislation is forged."

Mr. Fowler obviously comes up short on seniority and some Republicans would argue that his seat is not all that secure; but it is apparent that Mr. Mitchell sees in him an abundance of the other qualities required for membership in the inner circle.

He said as much in his announcement of Mr. Fowler's appointment. "One of the reasons I created this position, and one of the reasons I selected Senator Fowler for it," he said, "is that I want to encourage bipartisanship, and I know that Senator Fowler is widely respected among all of his colleagues, including the Republican members of the Senate. It will be his job, among other things, to help build bridges to enable us to work cooperatively to deal with the serious challenges and problems facing our country."

Citing Mr. Fowler's 12 years of experience in Congress, Mr. Mitchell went out of his way to stress the importance of the Georgia senator's new role. "I intend that he will become an active participant in the Democratic leadership in the Senate," he said. "And that involves not just activities on the floor, but right in this very room where we meet regularly to attempt to determine what our course of action should be, what legislation to bring up, when to bring it up, how to present it."

He added, "It will be an important position . . . He will have access to all of the policy staff and will be instrumental in guiding the direction of the policy committee as well."

All in all, it is a remarkable development.

Many able senators—John F. Kennedy among them—have served their full Senate careers without becoming members of the "inner club." Wyche Fowler has attained that eminence after only two years in the Senate.

Georgia's senior senator, Sam Nunn, has long been recognized as one of Washington's most respected leaders. Now Mr. Fowler joins him as a key player in shaping the country's future. Few other states contribute more to this nation's leadership.

Georgians have reason to be proud.

PASSIVE SMOKING ON COMMERCIAL AIRLINES

HON. TIM VALENTINE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed an article published in the February 10 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association [JAMA] entitled "Passive Smoking on Commercial Airlines." The study was conducted by the Smoking, Tobacco, and Cancer Program of the National Cancer Institute at the request of the Surgeon General, on four Air Canada flights.

Stripped to its essentials, the study seems to say two things—that passengers who are immediately adjacent to the smoking sections on commercial flights may be exposed to some cigarette smoke and that nonsmoking passengers in the nonsmoking sections find cigarette smoke from the smoking sections to be both irritating and annoying.

Presumably, this study will be used to help justify extending—and perhaps making permanent—the 2-year moratorium on airline smoking imposed by Congress last summer. Those who wish to perpetuate the smoking ban may cite this study as proof that separating nonsmokers from smokers on airlines provides inadequate protection to nonsmoking passengers.

In my judgment, to place such reliance on this study would be entirely unwarranted. You do not have to be a scientist to see why.

First, this study involved only nine subjects—only five of whom were passengers—on a mere four flights. Drawing any conclusions from such limited data would be like predicting the result of a national election based on interviews with a handful of voters.

Second, these subjects, all of whom were nonsmokers, were not selected at random. Eight of the nine are employees of Air Canada which banned smoking on most of its flights in 1987. When it came time to answer the study's annoyance questions, these employees were surely aware of their employer's policy.

Third, it is quite possible that the subjects' answers to the irritation and annoyance questions were biased by the consent form that was used. This form stated unequivocally—and without justification—that exposure to cigarette smoke causes health problems. Faced with these assertions, it is hardly surprising that the study participants claimed to be annoyed by exposure to cigarette smoke.

Fourth, we cannot be sure how much of the irritation and annoyance reported by the subjects—even crediting those reports—was actually due to cigarette smoke from the smoking sections, and how much might have been due to low relative humidity, carbon dioxide, ozone, and other such factors. It is elementary for scientists to control for such "confounding variables." The study published in JAMA did not do so.

Indeed, no effort was made at all to measure the symptoms of passengers in the middle of the nonsmoking sections. Although the JAMA article suggests that these passengers were unlikely to be exposed to cigarette smoke, that does not mean they were unlikely to suffer from the effects of other cabin conditions that were less than optimal. Without focusing on a representative sample of the passengers in the nonsmoking sections, no conclusions concerning the causes of reported discomfort can be reached.

Fifth, the authors do not come right out and say that cigarette smoke is a health risk to passengers in nonsmoking sections, but they invite the reader to draw that conclusion. They begin by citing the 1986 report of the Surgeon General, which asserts that tobacco smoke is a cause of disease. Then they report that some passengers in nonsmoking sections are exposed to tobacco smoke.

It's easy to complete the syllogism—a nonsmoker is at risk when inflight smoking is permitted. But there is no showing that the levels of exposure in this setting actually present any health risk. In fact, much of the available evidence is to the contrary.

Given these factors, the JAMA study can be viewed as little more than a political document, written to fuel passage of legislation to ban smoking on all flights. In addition to the questions raised by the study on its face, I note that the Tobacco Institute repeatedly requested information concerning the study under the Freedom of Information Act but received only a small fraction of the documents that were undoubtedly in the Government's possession.

I hope and trust that the airline smoking study to be conducted under the supervision of the Department of Transportation will be more objective than the study reported in this week's issue of JAMA.

SECRETARY OF DEFENSE SHOULD FURNISH HOUSE INFORMATION REGARDING COMMISSION ON BASE REALIGNMENT

HON. TERRY L. BRUCE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise as a cosponsor of the resolution of inquiry directing the Defense Secretary to furnish the House of Representatives with information regarding the actions of the Commission on Base Realignment and Closure.

I would like to express my frustration and concern with lack of information Members of Congress have received thus far from the Commission. The documentation does not adequately or accurately explain the Commission's recommendations and major portions of vital information have been whited out.

As Members of Congress, our obligation is to act responsibly in reviewing the Commission's recommendations. Without an opportunity to analyze the Commission's working papers or the supporting evidence, we would be ignoring the concerns and welfare of the hundreds of thousands of citizens who would be directly affected by the proposed closures.

The documentation requested by this resolution is absolutely necessary for Congress to make a fair judgment on the Commission's recommendations. Therefore, I urge swift action on this request.

TRIBUTE TO MARY D. KILLORAN

HON. GEORGE J. HOCHBRUECKNER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an individual who has worked tirelessly on behalf of the people of Suffolk County. On January 26, 1989, Mary D. Killoran was sworn in as president of the Eastern Long Island Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mrs. Killoran, a resident of Sag Harbor, NY, has a long history of distinguished service to the community. During the 1970's she served as county committeewoman for the Democratic Party in New York City. In 1975 she was appointed by Manhattan Borough president, Percy Sutton, to Community Board One, and for 2 years served on the board's human resources committee.

Mary D. Killoran, president of the Eastern Long Island Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, is an outstanding person. Her many personal and professional accomplishments deserve our applause. I ask that my colleagues join me in commending Mary D. Killoran for her community spirit, and professional dedication.

THE GRIDLOCK RELIEF FOR INTERSTATES PROGRAMS

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that will help urban and suburban areas of the country cope with increasing levels of traffic congestion on the Federal Interstate System. Our colleague, Senator JOHN WARNER, is introducing an identical bill today in the other body.

Urban and suburban segments of the Federal Highway System have become increasingly congested as traffic volume has increased beyond expectations. In many areas, the system is simply breaking down under the huge load of traffic.

The legislation we are introducing today—The Gridlock Relief for Interstates Program [GRIP]—would create a new category of Federal highway funding to expand the capacity of heavily traveled portions of the Federal Interstate Highway System located in suburban and urban areas of the country. Two billion dollars a year would be made available nationwide for the program.

Funds authorized under our legislation could also be used for construction of noise walls or other sound abatement devices, acquisition of rights-of-way for construction of mass transit facilities, and acquisition of land for park-and-ride-type facilities.

The type of funding program we have proposed is desperately needed throughout the Nation.

In the Washington, DC, metropolitan area, for example, interstate highways such as I-66, I-395, I-495, and even I-95 near complete gridlock during peak travel periods. The result is that commuters cannot get to work and interstate commerce cannot flow.

Funds provided under the GRIP legislation, however, could be used to widen I-66 from the Capital Beltway to Prince William County where virtual gridlock occurs every day during rush hours. Bottlenecks on the Capital Beltway—I-495—could be eliminated. The Wilson Bridge—I-95—could be widened or even double-decked.

The problem of congested interstate highways is not unique to the Washington, DC, metropolitan area. The Transportation 2020 Program held a series of 65 forums across the country to discuss the future of the Federal highway program. Witness after witness in State after State testified about the critical transportation problems that urban and suburban areas are facing.

In California, a witness from the general assembly testified that urban congestion is costing California $2 million a day in lost productivity. The summary report on California's Transportation 2020 forum notes: "Traffic congestion in urban/metropolitan areas is California's most serious transportation problem."

In North Carolina, a State not often associated with urban traffic congestion, the Transportation 2020 findings on urban traffic noted that every city in North Carolina with a population over 100,000 has passed a major transportation bond issue within the last 3 years by overwhelming margins.

Our legislation addresses these critical problems by directing Federal funds to the areas of the country where traffic congestion has virtually closed down the Federal Interstate Highway System.

The funds would be allocated to the States based on a formula which gives preference to urban/suburban areas with high levels of traffic congestion on the Interstate System. Rural areas of the country, however, would not be adversely affected because the Federal interstate construction program is virtually completed and our legislation does not affect other highway funding categories.

In 1956 the Federal Government made a commitment to construct an Interstate Highway System linking the 48 contiguous States. That goal is nearly complete and the current highway program is scheduled to end in 1992. We must begin now to look at changes that need to be made to address our Nation's transportation needs and get a GRIP on traffic. We offer this legislation as a starting point for the discussion on this critical issue and we welcome ideas and suggestions from our colleagues.

Northern Virginia and other urban/suburban areas of the country are facing tremendous needs in the area of transportation improvements. Our legislation addresses these needs in a way that will bring relief not only to northern Virginia, but to other regions of the country as well without penalizing rural or less populated areas.

I urge Members to support this legislation.

A copy of our legislation and a section-by-section analysis of the bill follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE GRIDLOCK RELIEF FOR INTERSTATES PROGRAM [GRIP]

SECTION 1. URBAN INTERSTATE EXPANSION PROGRAM

Section 1 provides the Secretary of Transportation authority to approve projects for the purpose of expanding the capacity of interstate highways, certain highways built to interstate standards and certain toll roads located within urbanized areas of 50,000 population or more.

Section 1 also authorizes the Secretary of Transportation to expend funds under this program for noise barriers, acquisition of right-of-way for mass transit facilities and acquisition of land for construction of parking lots to encourage car and van pools and mass transit ridership where capacity expanding programs are undertaken.

SECTION 2. APPORTIONMENT FORMULA

Section 2 establishes the formula for apportioning funds to the states under the capacity expansion program. The formula considers two factors: interstate lane miles located within urbanized areas and vehicle miles travelled on those lanes. The two factors receive weights of 55 percent and 45 percent respectively.

SECTION 3. PERIOD OF AVAILABILITY; DISCRETIONARY USE OF LAPSED FUNDS

Section 3 provides that funds awarded under this program shall be expended within one year after the end of the fiscal year in which the funds were authorized.

Funds that are not expended within this time frame lapse and are made available to the Secretary of Transportation to distribute on a discretionary basis.

Section 3 establishes criteria governing the distribution of discretionary funds. Discretionary funds are available until expended.

SECTION 4. FEDERAL SHARE

Section 4 establishes 80 percent of the cost of any project undertaken as the federal share under this program.

SECTION 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Section 5 authorizes $2,000,000,000 per year for this program in each of fiscal years 1993, 1994, 1995, and 1996.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

"(2) CAPACITY EXPANSION PROGRAM.—The Secretary may approve projects within urbanized areas of 50,000 population or more for expanding the capacity of open-to-traffic routes of the Interstate System designated under sections 103 and 139(c) of this title and open-to-traffic routes on the Interstate System designated under section 139 (a) and (b) of this title before the date of the enactment of the first sentence of paragraph (1); except that the Secretary may only approve a project pursuant to this paragraph on a toll road if such toll road is subject to a Secretarial agreement provided for in subsection (e). Sums authorized to be appropriated for this paragraph shall be out of the Highway Trust Fund and shall be apportioned in accordance with section 104(b)(5)(C) of this title. The Federal share for any project under this paragraph shall be that set forth in section 120(n) of this title.".

(b) ADDITIONAL ELEMENTS OF PROJECTS.—Section 119(c) of such title is amended—

(1) by striking out "Reconstructing" and inserting in lieu thereof "ADDITIONAL ELEMENTS OF PROJECT.—Reconstruction and capacity expansion projects"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Secretary may approve under subsection (a)(2) as a part of a capacity expansion project within an urbanized area of 50,000 population or more on a route of the Interstate System construction of noise barriers along such route, acquisition of right-of-way for future construction of mass transit facilities along such route, and acquisition of land for construction of parking lots to encourage car and van pooling and mass transit ridership by persons traveling on such route if such barriers, right-of-way, or land are or will be located in such urbanized area.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) SECTION 119(a).—Section 119(a) of such title is further amended—

(A) by inserting "RESURFACING AND CAPACITY EXPANSION PROGRAMS.—" after "(a)";

(B) by indenting and aligning paragraph (1), as designated by subsection (a) of this section, with paragraph (2), as added by such subsection (a); and

(C) in paragraph (1), as so designated, by striking out "this subsection" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "this paragraph" and by striking out "this section" and inserting in lieu thereof "this paragraph".

(2) SECTION 139.—Section 139 of such title is amended—

(A) by inserting before the period at the end of the last sentence of subsection (a) and before the period at the end of the fourth sentence of subsection (b) the following: "and funds available to it under section 104(b)(5)(C) of this title for expanding within urbanized areas of 50,000 population or more the capacity of any highway designated as a route on the Interstate System under this subsection before such date of enactment"; and

(B) by inserting before the period at the end of the last sentence of subsection (c) the following: "and Federal-aid highway funds available to it under section 104(b)(5)(C) of this title for expanding within urbanized areas of 50,000 population or more the capacity of any highway designated as a route on the Interstate System under this subsection".

SEC. 2. APPORTIONMENT FORMULA.

Section 104(b)(5) of title 23, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) For expanding within urbanized areas of 50,000 population or more the capacity of the Interstate System:

"55 percent in the ratio that lane miles on the interstate routes designated under sections 103 and 139(c) of this title (other than those on toll roads not subject to a Secretarial agreement provided for in section 119(e) of this title) and located within such areas of each State bears to the total of all such lane miles within such areas of all States; and 45 percent in the ratio that vehicle miles traveled on lanes on the interstate routes designated under sections 103 and 139(c) of this title (other than those on toll roads not subject to a Secretarial agreement provided for in section 119(e) of this title) and located within such areas of each State bears to the total of all such vehicle miles within such areas of all States. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence no State (excluding any State that has no interstate lane miles) shall receive less than ½ of 1 percent of the total apportionment made by this subparagraph for any fiscal year."

SEC. 3. PERIOD OF AVAILABILITY; DISCRETIONARY USE OF LAPSED FUNDS.

Section 118(b) of title 23, United States Code, is amended by redesignating paragraph (4), and any references thereto, as paragraph (5) and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) INTERSTATE CAPACITY EXPANSION FUNDS.—

"(A) PERIOD OF AVAILABILITY.—Any amount apportioned to a State for the Interstate System under section 104(b)(5)(C) of this title shall continue to be available for expenditure in the State for a period of 1 year after the last day of the fiscal year for which such sums are authorized.

"(B) DISCRETIONARY PROJECTS.—Sums not obligated within the time period prescribed by subparagraph (A) shall lapse and be made available by the Secretary for projects within an urbanized area of 50,000 population or more for expanding the capacity of any open-to-traffic route (or portion thereof) on the Interstate System (other than a highway designated as part of the Interstate System under section 130 and a toll road on the Interstate System not subject to an agreement under section 119(e) of this title). Such funds shall be made available by the Secretary to any other State applying for such funds, if the Secretary determines that—

"(i) the State has obligated all of its apportionments under section 104(b)(5)(C) other than an amount which, by itself is insufficient to pay the Federal share of the cost of such a project which has been submitted by such State to the Secretary for approval; and

"(ii) the applicant is willing and able to (I) obligate the funds within 1 year of the date the funds are made available, (II) apply them to a ready-to-commence project, and (III) in the case of construction work, begin work within 90 days of obligation.

"(C) PERIOD OF AVAILABILITY OF DISCRETIONARY FUNDS.—Sums made available pursuant to this paragraph shall remain available until expended.".

SEC. 4. FEDERAL SHARE.

Section 129 of title 23, United States Code, is amended by redesignating subsection (n), and any references thereto, as subsection (o) and by inserting after subsection (m) the following new subsection:

"(n) INTERSTATE CAPACITY EXPANSION PROJECTS.—The Federal share payable on account of any project within an urbanized area of 50,000 population or more for expanding the capacity of any open-to-traffic route on the Interstate System shall be 80 percent of the total cost thereof.".

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of title 23, United States Code, there is authorized to be appropriated out of the Highway Trust Fund (other than the Mass Transit Account) for expanding within urbanized areas of 50,000 population or more the capacity of the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways $2,000,000,000 per fiscal year for each of fiscal years 1993, 1994, 1995, and 1996.

THE CIVILITY OF AMERICAN POLITICS

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, distinguished American scholar and former Librarian of Congress, Daniel Boorstin, has written an excellent article reminding us of the importance of something we take for granted—the civility of American politics. I recommend his article to all our colleagues.

At this point, I want to insert in the RECORD, "The Civility of American Politics," by Daniel Boorstin, published in U.S. News & World Report, January 23, 1989.

[From U.S. News & World Report, Jan. 23, 1989]

THE CIVILITY OF AMERICAN POLITICS

(By Daniel J. Boorstin)

On the eve of the election of 1952, W.H. Auden, who had personally witnessed the violence of the Spanish Civl War and the Nazi excesses, told me what was most remarkable about the contest between Adlai Stevenson and Dwight Eisenhower. "You probably wouldn't even notice it, but neither candidate is packing his bags to leave the country if he doesn't win." With poetic hyperbole he had put his finger on what most distinguishes our American political life, but which may seem too obvious to be noticed in this season of amiable White House transition.

Our tradition of political civility is nowhere more conspicuous than in the inaugural ceremony, which ends one fixed term and begins another. The question of the length of the President's term and how many terms he should serve much troubled the Framers in the Constitutional Convention. On Aug. 6, 1787, the Committee of Detail proposed: "The Executive Power of the United States shall be vested in a single person. His stile shall be 'The President of the United States of America;' and his title shall be 'His Excellency.' He shall be elected by ballot by the Legislature. He shall hold office during the term of seven years; but he shall not be elected a second time." After long debate, every one of these "details" was changed so the President would be elected by an Electoral College for a four-year term, with no limit on re-election.

History has shown that the Framers' concern was not misplaced. Five constitutional amendments—more than on any other subject except civil rights and the qualifications for voting—have modified the details of the office of the President. Most significant was the 22nd Amendment, which limited the President to two terms. What seems to have escaped our notice is the most obvious and rudimentary feature of our system.

The fixed term of the President speaks volumes about American political life. By prescribing a certain number of years for the Chief Executive's tenure of office, the Framers expressed confidence in the civility of American politics. They took it for granted that the political opposition to an elected President would never be so bitter or so violent that they would not tolerate an unpopular President for his full term.

The fixed term has had other consequences, revealed most recently in the Presidency of Ronald Reagan. For the fixed term reposes a confidence in the person of a President who is not to be casually overruled by shifting popular approval. If we had a parliamentary system with the President dependent on the continuing approval of the current majority of voters, several of our Presidents might have been recalled before the end of their four-year terms. Of course, the process of impeachment exists under our system, too, but it is extremely difficult and cumbersome.

Overruling the temporary foibles and whims of popular opinion, the fixed term also gives the President breathing space—some time to recover from passing misfortunes or misjudgments, from vicuña coats or Iran-Contra suspicions. No country in the world has had its shifts of public opinion more frequently or more expertly measured. It is doubly remarkable, and doubly desirable, that we have resisted the temptation embodied in parliamentary government to allow these shifts to be promptly registered in changes of administration.

The classic political theorists parsed governments into monarchy, oligarchy and democracy, according to the numbers and character of those who govern. In the 20th century as never before, overwhelmed as we are by the evanescent currents of public opinion and always threatened by its tyranny, we can see a new significance in the periodicity that any political system provides for the succession to power. We can see more clearly the wisdom of a government that forecasts and provides for the orderly and regular succession with a prescribed period of insulation from shifting public opinion. Today much of the world, including the Soviet and the Chinese empires, selects the successors to power in inscrutable ways hidden from the public. But in our United States, the periodicity of presidential power, well suited to a nonideological people, tolerates the personal weaknesses of leaders for the sake of the civil rhythms of our political life.

THIRTY YEARS OF COMMUNISM IN CUBA

HON. F. JAMES SENSENBRENNER, JR.

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, during the recent congressional break we celebrated the joyful Christmas season with our families, the dawning of a New Year, the swearing-in of our new colleagues, the inauguration of President George Bush and now, the anxious beginning of the 101st Congress. For most of us, the last 2 months have been full of anticipation and celebration. Not so for those in Cuba. In January, Fidel Castro—the most repressive leader in the hemisphere—held ceremonies to commemorate the 30th year since his hijack of the Cuban Government. It is safe to say the occasion is not a happy one for most Cubans.

The only happy Cubans are those million-plus who have fled to adopt the United States as their new home. Castro's defensively braggy response is unconvincing: "So, 1 million malcontents have left, but 8 million have stayed." Can you imagine an equivalent percentage of Americans—31 million—fleeing these United States?

I suspect many more Cubans would flee if the opportunity to freely migrate were given. None of us can forget the chaos of thousands upon thousands of Cubans fleeing across the Florida Straits in every sort of vessel when for just a few short weeks Castro opened Mariel Harbor during 1979. They left all of their belongings to the state, paid exorbitant immigration fees to the Castro regime, and came with nothing in their pockets and just the shirts on their backs. They were happy just to get here. Now, even the criminals Castro mixed-in with those refugees want to stay. You probably recall the rioting by prisoners who thought they would be returned to Cuba. They would rather remain behind bars in our prisons than be returned to Communist Cuba.

Today, 30 years after the revolution, Cuba is perhaps at its nadir under Castro, hopelessly out-of-touch even with what is happening in the Soviet Union. Still, many Castro apologists believe the time for mending political fences is ripe, that we should offer to lift our embargo in exchange for moderated political policies and make Castro the "Tito of the Caribbean."

Unfortunately, these people live in a dream world. Castro lives to be a thorn in the side of the western free world and is an international figure primarily because he has tapped the underground current of worldwide anti-Americanism.

Moreover, Castro cannot even agree with his Russian handlers. Castro is no fan of Gorbachev's new thinking. In fact, Cuban censors diligently trim damaging issues of Pravda and Izvestia mentioning glasnost or perestroika.

During the past 30 years, Castro has pursued two goals: to survive and to project his brand of Cuban communism across the world. He is an adventurer who, above all, wants to leave his mark on history.

As a corollary to these goals, Castro has subjugated the very real problems of Cuba to his desire to build military capabilities commensurate with his adventurism. He is interested in big things for Cuba. Other things, such as the development and democratic reforms he and Che Guevarra promised in 1959, are long forgotten.

Despite economic and social decay in Cuba, Castro has committed Cuban troops, military equipment, technicians, resources and his personal prestige to Africa, Central and South America. The Cuban people are clearly not his priority, but their subjugation is.

In fact, the economic situation in Cuba has steadily worsened since 1959. By many accounts, Cuba before Castro was considered to be an emerging nation. Cuba had twice as many physicians as the rest of the Caribbean, life expectancy higher than several European nations, lower infant mortality than Italy, a broadening economy with perhaps the highest per capita GNP in the region and Latin America's fastest growing middle class. They even had more Cadillac's per capita than the United States.

Cuba in 1989 is nothing more than a typical Third World slum. Social indicators and economic development are way down. Most of Cuba's Latin American neighbors have eclipsed Castro's strides in education, medical care and economic development. Cuba is a shell of what it could have been.

Castro's lifelong promise to diversify the economy is the prime case in point. Cuba as a Russian satellite is more dependent on its sugar industry than ever before in its history. Castro's perennial development schemes have been a complete failure. His nation has regressed to a simple arrangement: Russians guarantee a price for Castro's sugar crop, and Cubans fight the war in Angola.

Recently, many of Castro's former admirers joined some of his critics in an open letter encouraging him to hold a plebiscite on his rule as Pinochet has just done. Castro's response to these 170 movie stars, literati and scientists was typical: "The Cuban people held a grand plebiscite concerning their destiny 30 years ago." Case closed. Imagine Pinochet, who has held power half as long as Castro, making a similar rebuff. Liberals would scream.

I see little chance for change in Cuba and, therefore, little reason for improving relations. However, we should continue to do our best to contain the violence Castro spreads, while at the same time working to improve relations with those other nations in the hemisphere more deserving than the oppressive Government of Cuba.

ENERGY SECURITY

HON. WES WATKINS

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, in an attempt to reverse the United States increasing and continued reliance on imported crude oil and refined products, I have today introduced sweeping legislation to increase domestic production.

My legislation proposes to amend the Tax Code to encourage more production by independents who make 80 percent of the petroleum industry's significant new discoveries of domestic oil and gas reserves as well as operating most of the Nation's 450,000 "stripper wells." In addition, this legislation would preserve stripper production—most of which is from economically marginal wells, yet accounts for almost 50 percent of the total U.S. production.

According to recent figures released by the American Petroleum Institute, imported crude oil and refined products exceeded domestic production in December, and in 1988 imports constituted 42 percent of domestic consumption. In addition, November's petroleum imports cost the Nation $3.14 billion. This only increases our trade deficit.

Domestic production from the lower 48 States declined at an average annual rate of about 400,000 barrels a day last year, and the National Stripper Well Association says that in the past 3 years, State regulatory agencies reported 53,498 producing stripper wells were plugged, almost all due to economics. As a comparison, in 1981 and 1982, when prices were higher, only 16,641 wells were plugged.

During 1988, for the first time in 25 years, domestic production was below 8 million barrels a day, less than half our demand.

It is imperative for our economic and military security that domestic production increase while we search for new reserves and develop ecologically safe alternative energy.

Mr. Speaker, my proposal was a maintenance bill—if it is enacted, it will just maintain the industry, and not allow for much growth. Crude oil prices must reach the $24 to $26 range to allow for long-term energy industry growth.

Dallas Federal Reserve Bank economists recently predicted that world oil prices will rise to $25 a barrel by 1993. The Nation's economic and military security cannot wait until 1993, nor can people in the oilfields of producing States such as Oklahoma, Texas, and Louisiana and the others.

Key to this legislation is a provision to establish a minimum price of $18 per barrel as a small producer "safety net."

Price is the key to keeping the domestic industry alive, and therefore the key to our Nation's military and economic security.

While prices worldwide have been generally rising, crude futures tumbled $1.50 on another rumor 1 week ago.

A butterfly can cough in the Persian Gulf and the traders jump aboard the panic wagon.

The independent segment of the industry operates on borrowed money, much as production agriculture. Lenders are reluctant to make loans when prices are so volatile, and as a result energy loans are almost nonexistent.

We must establish price stability.

My bill would direct Federal lending regulatory agencies to create a mechanism to write down or stretch out energy loans.

It would also require the Department of Energy to fill the Strategic Petroleum Reserve [SPR] with domestic stripper oil, or oil exchanged for stripper, if it can be bought as cheaply or cheaper than current DOE SPR contracts. A recent GAO report said that, for the past several years, DOE has been filling the SPR with Mexican oil at an average price of $19.

On the face of it, that's hard to understand and it's harder to explain why we've been buying Mexican crude while we've had to plug thousands of United States producing wells and bankrupting thousands of independent producers.

My legislation also proposes that natural gas prices be deregulated at the well-head while leaving intact existing contracts.

To summarize, the Secure Energy Supply Act of 1989, would:

Restore percentage depletion allowance to 27.5 percent for stripper-well production;

Repeal a net income limitation on oil and gas wells;

Repeal a provision that disallows the transfer of percentage depletion with a proven petroleum property that is sold or transferred to a new owner;

Remove percentage depletion and intangible drilling costs as tax preference items—and as such part of a minimum tax calculation;

Allow as a tax deduction, with a carryback provision, qualified losses incurred in production of domestic crude—100 percent in the case of independents and 80 percent for other domestic producers—based on cost of production.

Provide for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve to be filled—to at least 750,000,000 barrels—by domestic stripper-well production or oil exchanged for stripper-well oil, if stripper well oil can be bought by the Department of Energy at a price equal to, or less than, the price from current sources;

Repeal price controls on first sales of natural gas at the wellhead, while leaving existing contracts in force for the life of the contract;

Establish a minimum $18 price for domestic crude, adjusted for location and quality; require domestic refiners not buying domestic to buy American crude first, when available. Domestic refiners will pay a "blending surcharge fund" into the Treasury, based on the difference between their weighted average cost of crude and $18. And a similar refined product fee would be established based on the nearest refiner's rack price;

Direct Federal fiduciary agencies to promulgate regulations granting banks and other financial institutions greater flexibility in rescheduling or marking down energy-related trouble loans, including lowered capital requirements.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to point out that the concept of this legislation has been endorsed by the Oklahoma Independent Petroleum Association, the National Association of Royalty Owners, the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, the New York State Oil Producers Association, the International Association of Geophysical Contractors, and the Association of Oil Well Service Contractors. I anticipate other endorsements from the small producer segment and those who realize that we must do something regarding our Nation's energy security.

ANABOLIC STEROID RESTRICTION ACT OF 1989

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today, along with my colleagues LARRY SMITH, RICHARD BAKER, BILL MCCOLLUM, BILL DANNEMEYER, CLAUDE HARRIS, JIM SCHEUER, GEORGE MILLER, RAY MCGRATH, DENNY SMITH, TOM LEWIS, ESTEBAN TORRES, BILL SCHUETTE, BILL HUGHES, PAUL HENRY, BARBARA BOXER, RONNIE FLIPPO, BOB MRAZEK, BEN ERDREICH, MAJOR OWENS, SONNY CALLAHAN, BEN CARDIN, MATT MARTINEZ, TOM BEVILL, CHET ATKINS, DANTE FASCELL, JIM BUNNING, HOWARD COBLE, TOMMY ROBINSON, DAVE MCCURDY, BEN JONES, BERNARD DWYER, AL MCCANDLESS, RON DE LUGO, and BOB DORNAN, I am introducing legislation aimed at Mexican-based steroid distributors who are using the United States mails to end run our efforts to control anabolic steroids. The legislation is titled the "Anabolic Steroid Restriction Act of 1989."

This legislation is a result of a request by my constituent, Mr. Charles Miller of San Lorenzo, CA, who received a truly offensive anabolic steroid catalog, mailed from United Pharmaceuticals of Tijuana, Mexico, in October. The post office has subsequently informed me that this same catalog has been received by thousands of other households across the country.

The obnoxious content of the catalog reveals an overt, blatant attempt to convert unsuspecting American tourists into drug smugglers. Mr. Miller has asked me to try to do something to ban these mailings, and the Anabolic Steroid Restriction Act is an effort to do so.

The Anabolic Steroid Restriction Act, developed in consultation with the U.S. Postal Service, would ban any solicitation—mailing, radio, television, magazine, and so forth—for anabolic steroids, with an exception for legitimate mailings to certified medical professionals. The bill also clarifies the nonmailability status of anabolic steroids. Currently, steroid distribution is limited in the 1988 antidrug initiative to prescription-only availability.

This legislation is a reasonable, and constitutional, approach to halting the offensive solicitation of Americans by Mexican-based pharmaceutical firms to smuggle drugs across our borders. I look forward to working with my colleagues to ensure its passage.

REVITALIZING THE SSI PROGRAM

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of Congressman DOWNEY, Congressman MILLER, and Congressman ROYBAL, today I am introducing three bills which will make the SSI Program better able to serve the needy aged, blind and disabled propulations it was designed to target.

Contrary to popular perception, poverty among elderly and disabled Americans persists. A substantial number of our elderly citizens remain poor. Three and one-half million elderly persons—about 13 percent of all persons age 65 and older—have incomes below the poverty line. Poverty is especially widespread among aged minorities, women, persons living alone, and the very old. The poverty rate for elderly female-headed families is 23 percent and the rate for elderly blacks is 31 percent—19 percent of all Americans 85 or older are poor.

Poverty rates for disabled adults are even higher. It is estimated that more than one-third of disabled adults have incomes below the poverty line and half of the disabled persons living independently are impoverished.

Congress enacted the Supplemental Security Income [SSI] Program in 1972 to guarantee a minimum level of cash income to elderly and disabled persons. However, today that guarantee has failed. Although the program's concept and structure are basically sound, the current level of Federal assistance does not provide recipients with an income that even brings them up to the poverty line. The maximum Federal SSI benefit standard for single persons is only about 75 percent of the poverty level—$368 a month for an individual and $553 for a couple. In addition, the SSI allowable assets limit is very low and has not been adjusted to keep up with inflation since 1972. As a result, many individuals who are truly impoverished are excluded from the SSI Program.

Over 250,000 aged and disabled individuals receive SSI on the basis of a Federal SSI benefit standard of only $245 a month because they are living with family or friends. Present SSI law assumes that their needs are less because they are receiving in-kind assistance even though their needs are great because of their disability or frail condition. This situation often involves parents caring for their adult mentally retarded son or daughter who is not capable of living by themselves. In many cases, where the adult disabled child receives some Social Security on their elderly parents earnings record, that income makes them totally ineligible for any SSI or Medicaid.

Adding to the program's problems are a number of technical eligibility rule glitches each affecting certain specific subgroups of SSI recipients, which collectively create a great deal of suffering and misfortune for many elderly and disabled persons. Correcting each glitch is very important to those aged, blind or disabled individuals who would retain eligibility for SSI if it were not for the unfair and often unintended consequences of current law.

Some elderly and disabled persons do not participate in SSI because their incomes are above the SSI benefit standard. Others do not qualify because their countable assets are greater than the restrictive allowable assets limit. But even with these restrictive eligibility guidelines, a large number of potential SSI beneficiaries do not participate because they do not know the program exists. A Social Security Administration study reported that 45 percent of eligible persons who did not participate simply were unaware of its existence.

The SSI Program was also intended to help the families of disabled children. Children in low-income families with disabilities of comparable severity to adults are eligible for SSI benefits. While the cash payment is important to these low-income families, the Medicaid benefit that SSI eligibility carries with it in almost all States is critical. It is often the only regular source of health care essential to stabilizing and ameliorating the child's condition. Yet despite the obvious benefits of the SSI Program for poor families with disabled children, the majority of these children are not enrolled in the program. Data from a National Health Interview Survey indicates that only a quarter of all totally disabled children living at home below the poverty line are enrolled in the SSI Program.

The three bills we are introducing today address all of the above problems with the current SSI Program. First, the SSI Benefit Improvements Amendments of 1989 would raise the SSI Federal benefit standard level to the poverty line over 3 years and raise the asset limit to reflect inflation. It would allow a person to live with another person and receive in-kind assistance without losing SSI eligibility for purposes of Medicaid. It also would require that the Social Security Administration establish a permanent SSI outreach program for both adults and children.

Second, the SSI Technical Amendments of 1989 would correct glitches in current law including treatment of unemployment compensation, weekly or bi-weekly income, travel tickets, income upon separation, interest and dividend income, life insurance, and burial accounts. It also would extend SSI eligibility for purposes of Medicaid eligibility in several deserving special situations.

The third bill we are introducing would assure that poor disabled children do not fall through the SSI safety net. The SSI Disabled and Blind Children Act of 1989 would reform the definition of disabled children to comport with current medical practices, and correct certain inequities in the treatment of a family's income and resources in determining the eligibility of a disabled child.

Taken together, these three bills would make the SSI Program fairer for recipients and more responsive to the truly needy. The following outline highlights these proposals in more detail.

HIGHLIGHTS OF SSI LEGISLATION

A. MAJOR BENEFIT AND RESOURCE CHANGES

1. Increase SSI to poverty level

2. Increase resource limit to equal value in 1974

3. Establish Permanent SSI Outreach Program for Adults and Children

4. Increase in Benefits for Aged and Disabled Persons Being Cared for in Other's Home or Receiving Housing or Other In-Kind Income

a. Individuals living in low income households would have only actual value of in-kind assistance counted as income instead of automatic one-third reduction in benefits.

b. Aged and disabled persons who are ineligible for SSI because of in-kind income from living with others or receiving below cost housing, would, nevertheless be treated as SSI recipients in determining eligibility for Medicaid.

B. DISABILITY CRITERIA FOR CHILDREN

1. Clarify that there must be an individualized assessment of each child, including consideration of functional limitations.

2. Children, ages 3 years and younger, will be presumed disabled if the child has a congenital or genetic impairment which is probable to be found disabling if tests existed which permitted testing of the young child.

C. PROTECTION AGAINST LOSS OF MEDICAID FOR SSI DISABLED PERSONS WHEN ELIGIBLE FOR SOCIAL SECURITY

1. Continued Medicaid for disabled persons when eligible for Social Security early retirement or spouse benefits at age 62.

2. Continued Medicaid for disabled who lost SSI/Medicaid prior to July 1987, when they became eligible for Social Security disabled adult children benefits.

3. Continued Medicaid eligibility determinations to be provided by Social Security Administration for early retirees, spouses, and disabled widowers.

D. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS TO SSI INCOME AND RESOURCE ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA FOR ADULTS AND CHILDREN

1. Worker's compensation and unemployment compensation to be treated as earned income with $65 plus ½ remaining disregarded rather than as unearned income with only $20 disregard.

2. Parent's income deemed to disabled children which fluctuates in the amount of monthly earned income (resulting from bi-weekly pay periods) would be averaged over a year to monthly average if such averaging would prevent loss of SSI and Medicaid in certain months.

3. Interest income of $120 a year (increasing by $12 a year) would be disregarded in determining SSI benefits.

4. Life insurance policies (which have cash value) would not have their cash value counted if their face value is $2500 or less instead of the current $1500 limit. Allowable burial accounts would also be increased from $1500 to $2500.

5. Members of an SSI eligible couple would each be treated as individuals after one month of living apart instead of six months.

6. Gifts to aged, blind or disabled individuals in the form of commercial transportation tickets would not be counted as income.

7. Property essential for self-support would not be counted as a resource. Only income from such property is to be counted in determining eligibility.

TRIBUTE TO MILLIE WATERMAN

HON. DENNIS E. ECKART

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Millie Waterman, a constituent of mine who is retiring after 30 years of service to our public schools. Thirty years ago, Millie began work on the local PTA in Mentor, OH. Millie's work took her to the national level 10 years ago, when she became the vice president of legislative activity for the national PTA. Through the years her work has been characterized by commitment and integrity.

The challenges that lay ahead for our Nation demand the highest degree of commitment to the education of our children. That commitment must be undertaken with the utmost sincerity and tenacity and it must come from teachers, parents and, of course, the children themselves. Millie has provided an example of this commitment.

Perhaps the greatest expression of appreciation for Millie's work can be found in the community of parents, students, and teachers in northeast Ohio, and indeed, across the country, that have benefited from her years of service.

Millie's 30 years of work on behalf of children has provided a challenge for all of us—a challenge to commit our lives to a purpose that will serve the greater community. For her accepting that challenge we are all richer.

FOREIGN TRADE ZONES AT USER FEE AIRPORTS

HON. DICK CHENEY

OF WYOMING

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. CHENEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues, Mr. GRANDY, Mr. GUARINI, Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. ROBERT SMITH of Oregon, and Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, in introducing legislation today to correct an unforeseen and unintended effect of a portion of the Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987.

This minor correction will allow airports in some of America's small communities to operate foreign trade zones as a means of economic diversification. It was never the intent of the 1987 language to deprive small airports of this tool for economic development, and this legislation clarifies the applicable law to preserve the option. This legislation would have absolutely no effect on foreign trade zones or subzones now operating at or near ports of entry.

The situation in my home State illustrates the problem. For nearly 3 years, the Natrona County International Airport, near Casper, WY, has been interested in operating a foreign trade zone. Setting up the zone would allow the expansion of some existing businesses in the Casper area, and it would encourage the development of some new businesses.

While Wyoming's economy is primarily based on mineral production, it seeks to expand in such diverse directions as light manufacturing and specialized product development. A foreign trade zone would greatly encourage the further enhancement of this bright spot on the Wyoming landscape.

It would allow businesses that locate at the airport to receive foreign goods without paying customs duties or Government excise taxes. Imported items could be used to manufacture more complex products, or sold separately themselves, and no customs duties would be imposed until the goods leave the zone to be sold in the United States.

Businesses at the zone could also receive foreign goods, assemble them at the foreign trade zone, and ship the completed items to another country, all without paying any U.S. customs duties. In addition, when a producer sells a product in the United States that contains imported items assembled in a foreign trade zone, he may choose to pay customs duties either on the assembled product itself or on its component parts. The producer can choose the method which results in the lowest possible customs duty.

Congress created foreign trade zones in 1934 "to expedite and encourage foreign commerce." But their potential benefit to States like Wyoming grew in 1980, when the Customs Service decided not to charge duties on processing costs that arise within a zone. Since then, the zones have become an economic development tool to attract and retain new businesses.

In April 1986, the Natrona County International Airport Board presented its application to the Foreign Trade Zone Board. While the airport was aware of the general practice of locating foreign trade zones at or near ports of entry, the Customs Service led the airport to believe that if it became a user fee airport, it would then be eligible for a foreign trade zone, even though the airport was not a port of entry.

In fact, the airport did acquire user fee status for the sole purpose of attracting a foreign trade zone. On November 16, 1987, a notice was published in the Federal Register regarding the application, and a hearing on the application was conducted by an examiner's committee, appointed by the Foreign Trade Zone Board, on December 1, 1987, at Casper.

While waiting for a decision on its application, my office learned of a potential legal problem raised by the Customs Service. Customs lawyers said the problem arose from the 1987 Budget Reconciliation Act, a portion of which provided that the Customs Service may no longer charge fees for making inspections at foreign trade zones. The legislation did not prohibit Customs personnel from inspecting foreign trade zones; it simply said that they may not levy a special, additional charge for the service.

Customs said that because their personnel at a user fee airport could not charge for their services at foreign trade zones, it could not be reimbursed for what they do. Therefore, the argument went, the user fee airport personnel could not do work at a foreign trade zone, because their user fee personnel can provide services only for which they can be reimbursed.

If some change is not made in the Customs Service statutes, no user fee airport will ever be able to operate a foreign trade zone. While the problem arose in Wyoming, a similar obstacle faces other units of local government who seek to follow Casper's example.

Therefore, I am today introducing a bill to make it possible for Customs agents to make inspections at foreign trade zones at user fee airports. I must emphasize that there is no cost whatsoever to the Federal Government from this legislation. The whole point of a user fee airport is that the operator of the airport reimburses 100 percent of the Customs Service costs at the airport.

My legislation makes it possible for Customs to levy inspection fees at user fee airports only, and it makes it clear that Customs agents are permitted to inspect foreign trade zones at those airports as part of their duties. And I repeat that these fees would not apply to foreign trade zones anywhere else, such as at ports of entry.

I thank my colleagues for their cosponsorship, and I urge the Congress to enact this simple legislation to correct a situation that Congress never intended to create in the first place.

CRIPPLED BUT NOT CRUSHED

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, the following articles by Bob Lowe should be of interest to all Members. Entitled "Crippled but Not Crushed," the article discusses the hardship wrought upon the people of Panama by United States economic sanctions. It was printed in the Sunday Post-Crescent, a newspaper published in Appleton, WI.

The question of what direction United States-Panama policy should take is certainly one of the most important foreign policy issues facing the new administration and the 101st Congress. And on problems as complex and difficult as how to balance our security, economic, narcotics and human rights concerns in Panama, it is surely advisable for us to consider the full spectrum of responsible views. Mr. Lowe presents a different viewpoint on United States-Panama policy than is prevalent here on Capital Hill. It is my opinion, therefore, that all Members would benefit from reading Mr. Lowe's article:

CRIPPLED BUT NOT CRUSHED—IN PANAMA, NORIEGA STILL IS IN CHARGE

(By Bob Lowe)

PANAMA CITY, PANAMA.—Central Avenue, the capital city's main downtown commercial thoroughfare, continues to have massive traffic jams. During the recent holiday shopping season, hordes of shoppers crowded the sidewalks and the stores, looking for bargains.

Ships continue to traverse the 51-mile Panama Canal unimpeded and without major problems.

Anti-government riots that were widespread in the urban areas a year ago have ended. Members of Panama's Defense Forces, under the command of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, are firmly in control.

People are going to work and school and flocking to the beaches, as usual. And Panamanians, who are quick to party at the drop of a sombrero, are still socializing with salsa music, sassy dances, strong drink and spicy food.

If you didn't know otherwise, you would think this Central American isthmus is exactly what the travel brochures describe it as being; a bustling, cosmopolitan, tropical paradise; an international banking and commercial center and a bridge that unites the American continent through the Panama Canal.

But these seemingly normal appearances are deceiving.

Panama today is a war zone. Perhaps, not in the same way as Beirut, the West Bank or Nicaragua, but an economic war zone. It has become the target of an economic destabilization campaign being waged against it by the U.S. government.

The nation of 2.2 million people is facing one of the biggest challenges in its 85-year history.

"The economic crisis," as it is referred to here, was initiated by the Reagan administration last March when it imposed sweeping economic sanctions in an effort to force Noriega to step down. Noriega, as commander of the 15,000-member Panama Defense Forces, is regarded as the de facto ruler of the republic.

Last February, in a highly unusual move, federal prosecutors in Miami and Tampa had Noriega indicted on charges of drug trafficking and laundering racketeering money. It is believed to be the first time the United States has ever filed criminal charges against a sitting head of another country.

The indictment precipitated a political upheaval in Panama. President Eric Arturo Delvalle's attempt to fire Noriega backfired when the Legislative Assembly dismissed him. Named to take his place was Manuel Solis Palma, the former minister of education.

Now in hiding, Delvalle is still recognized as the official head of state by the U.S. government.

Last March 10, the U.S. House of Representatives voted 367-2 on a non-binding resolution authorizing then-President Reagan to consider economic sanctions against Noriega's government.

On April 8, Reagan invoked an executive order to that effect under the provisions of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act.

The order froze an estimated $30 million in Panamanian assets in U.S. banks; revoked Panamanian trade preferences; denied U.S. landing rights for Air Panama, causing it to lose millions in airfares, and withheld payments of $78 million in annual canal revenues from the Panamanian government.

It also prohibited the payment of taxes to the Panamanian government by all U.S. citizens and companies operating in Panama and withheld the taxes deducted from the paychecks of Panamanians working for the Panama Canal Commission and placed these funds in an escrow account in a Federal Reserve Bank in New York.

These measures have resulted in depriving the Panamanian treasury of more than $250 million. But the long-term loss to the country's economy so far is in excess of $400 million, according to Orville K. Goodin, minister of finance and the treasury.

Panama does not have the option of printing money to alleviate the shortfall because the local currency is the U.S. dollar.

The sanctions have severely constrained the Panamanian populace, particularly the poorer classes. Hungry children and adults have been forced to sell plantains, oranges and trinkets at intersections—or go begging door-to-door.

People have been forced to renegotiate their mortgages or sell their homes, cars and furniture in order to eat and support their families. Unemployment is reported to be 25%.

The sanctions have crippled the country's credit system. Few stores now accept personal checks or credit cards issued by local banks.

Highway repairs and maintenance have been deferred because of a shortage of funds for the Ministry of Public Works.

Cash reserves, which as recently as 1987 totaled $200 million, are now nearly exhausted. The government is having difficulty meeting the payroll for public employees.

For the last pay period in December, all 130,000 public employees were paid the same amount: $75. They received the balance on Jan. 6.

Economic progress achieved over the past 10 years has been virtually wiped out, said Goodin, who views the sanctions as a form of neo-colonialism.

Noriega maintains that the United States is orchestrating a campaign to maintain U.S. control of strategic military bases in Panama. Under the terms of the 1977 Carter-Torrijos Treaty, full control of the canal area and military bases will revert to the Panamanian government in the year 2000.

Pro-government representatives said the withholding of taxes and canal tolls owed the Panamanian treasury clearly violates the 1977 treaty and the Charter of the Organization of American States.

Article 19 of the OAS Charter states: "No state may use or encourage the use of coercive measures of an economic or political character in order to force the sovereign will of another state and obtain from it advantages of any kind."

A number of labor unions representing Panamanian workers said the use of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act against Panama is unwarranted. The only other countries that it has been used against are Libya and Iran.

"We do not consider it to be a justified action that we have to suffer these inconveniences only because the government of the United States, in order to justify its ego, has elected to impose these sanctions on the Panamanian regime," said Willis Small Jr., the head of Local 811 of the International Association of Machinists.

Reporters asked a U.S. State Department official what national security emergency justified Reagan invoking the seldom-used law and he replied;

"The presence of Gen. Noriega, who denies the legitimate authority of Panama. The United States' interests are very heavily intertwined with Panama's. His presence increases the threat to the canal, the people of Panama and our citizens there."

Some Panamanian officials suspect other motives. They say the indictments against Noriega were handed down after he refused to go along with a scheme by Oliver North, a former national security aide, and former National Security Adviser John Poindexter to dispatch, then intercept, a shipment of East German arms to El Salvador's leftist guerrillas.

The motive behind this ploy was to blame Nicaragua for supplying the weapons, thereby supporting the charge that the Sandinistas were exporting their revolution.

As the not-so-covert economic destabilization program continues, Panamanians say they feel like pawns in an international power struggle.

"It's like the U.S. being invited into my home and taking it over and deciding how we should live," said a taxi driver.

WHAT IF TABLES WERE TURNED?

(By Bob Lowe)

PANAMA CITY, PANAMA.—To understand the feelings of the Panamanian people in response to the economic sanctions imposed by the Reagan administration to force the ouster of Gen. Manuel A. Noriega, let's reverse the situation.

Suppose the government of Panama decides that President George Bush should be charged with conspiracy, subversion, fraud and perjury because of his role in the Iran-Contra scandal.

The Panamanian attorney general issues an indictment against Bush, declares him persona non grata and only recognizes Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis as the legitimate head of the United States' government.

The Panamanian government then denies entry visas to all members of the Bush administration, including his entire cabinet. Landing rights for all U.S. airlines operating in Panama are suspended.

The government confiscates the federal withholding tax from the paychecks of U.S. employees in Panama and deposits these funds in the National Bank of Panama.

Efforts are made to recruit dissident officers in the Pentagon to foment a coup to depose Bush and his cohorts. Agents from the G-2 (Intelligence) section of the Panamanian Defense Forces are deployed to foster instability among opposition political parties, subvert the banking system and destabilize Wall Street.

Further, the Panamanian government freezes the accounts of all U.S. funds in Panamanian banks and urges all Panamanian companies operating in the U.S. to withhold all tax payments to the federal treasury as long as Bush remains in office.

Preposterous, you say?

Critics would be quick to say that the Panamanian government has no legal basis for intervening in the internal affairs of a sovereign nation. Cries of "imperialism," "neocolonialism" and "arrogance" would fill the air.

That's how the Panamanians feel.

T.R. Reid, in a satirical article published in the April 10, 1988, edition of The Washington Post ("The Noriega Effect—A Premonition") presents a fictional scenario on what would happen if the Japanese were to dump all their U.S. holdings, withdraw all their money from U.S. banks and withhold tax payments to the state and national state governments unless certain "unsavory" members of Congress and the Reagan administration resigned.

* * * * *

It is worth quoting some additional excerpts from Reid's article to see the Panamanian issue from another perspective.

"Tanaka wouldn't identify all those whose resignations his country has demanded, but he mentioned the name of Atty. Gen. Edwin Meese. 'Of course, Mr. Meese hasn't been convicted of anything' he said. 'But neither has Noriega.'

"Aftershocks of the Japanese announcement were widespread. Three unidentified men in pin-stripped suits died of suffocation while waiting in line at the Jam-packed unemployment office in Greenwich, Conn., police said.

"Impeachment proceedings were begun against four southern governors who had provided huge cash incentives to lure Japanese firms that now refuse to pay taxes to any U.S. jurisdiction.

"Meanwhile, BMW owners across the country ransacked dealerships for spare parts after West German announcement that it would cut off all auto exports to the United States unless Reagan agrees to return to Bitburg Cemetery during his trip to Europe this summer and light an eternal flame to the memory of SS veterans.

"Standing amid the wreckage of his parts department, Y.P. Boomer, owner of Boomer BMW in Potomac, Md., said he is a 'true blue Reaganite' who 'stood and cheered when Ronnie got tough on that sleeze bag Noriegas.'

"But Boomer said he is having second thoughts.

" 'Nobody ever said that other countries might start doing the same thing to us,' he said. 'I mean, just because the Germans are rich, does that give them the right to order our government around?' "

JESSE GRAY HOUSING BILL WOULD FILL URGENT NEED FOR ADDITIONAL PUBLIC HOUSING ASSISTANCE

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the "Jesse Gray Housing Act of 1989," which would authorize such Federal funds as necessary for the gradual construction and renovation of urgently needed public housing units. Estimates are that at least 5 million new units of public housing are needed to meet the demand for public housing. The "Jesse Gray Housing Act" would, over a 10-year period, create those 5 million units. An additional 100,000 existing units would be revitalized each year. And the "Jesse Gray Housing Act" would restore the requirement that public housing tenants pay no more than 25 percent of their income on housing.

From the unfortunate victims on Capitol Hill steam grates to our constituents at home, a rising tide of homelessness has swept our Nation. Demand for emergency shelters is at record levels and rising rapidly. And most tragic of all, families with children are the fastest growing segment of the homeless.

The explosion in homelessness is, in part, a consequence of policies which cut Federal housing assistance by 70 percent between 1980 and 1988. Nearly 40 million poor Americans are in need of housing assistance. But because of the massive Reagan budget cuts, only one-fifth of those in need actually benefit from our Federal housing programs.

In fiscal year 1990, alone, the Federal Government will forgo $46.9 billion in revenue to help subsidize the housing costs of middle- and upper income Americans, with two-thirds of this amount benefiting the most wealthy fourth of all households. Yet we are currently spending less than one-sixth of that for assisted housing programs for low-income Americans.

Over the last 8 years, poor Americans have faced more than declining housing stock, they also have had to pay a larger share of their income on rent. Most of the poor unable to gain public housing now pay 50 percent of their income on rent. Some pay up to 75 percent.

The "Jesse Gray Housing Act" would alleviate this burden by limiting such payments to 25 percent of income.

Mr. Speaker, we heard much over the past year about the need for "a kinder, gentler Nation." Now is the time to match this campaign rhetoric with action. For poor people who now live in public housing, the Federal Government is the only resource of affordable housing. The "Jesse Gray Housing Act" would help meet the enormous need for housing in America and restore housing as a basic right for all Americans. We must never forget the importance of public housing to people who cannot otherwise afford adequate shelter.

I insert the text of the bill in the RECORD:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Jesse Gray Housing Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the number of rental dwelling units available for lower income families is insufficient, and the physical condition of a substantial portion of such dwelling units is inadequate;

(2) new construction of rental dwelling units is occurring primarily in higher income areas;

(3) Federal housing assistance programs, such as rent subsidies, vouchers, and other rental and mortgage assistance, too frequently assist middle and higher income families and do not meet the demand for housing by lower income families;

(4) such Federal housing assistance programs are not cost effective, due to a lack of suitable rental dwelling units available for lower income families; and

(5) a significant number of families are paying more than 25 percent of their monthly income for rent.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to ensure that all families in the United States have access to rental dwelling units at rents that are not more than 25 percent of their monthly income, and that such rental dwelling units are decent, safe, and sanitary;

(2) to ensure that all funds for housing assistance by the Federal Government benefit lower income families by requiring the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to propose that Federal housing assistance be limited to lower income families:

(3) to encourage the establishment of a public housing system that consists of—

(A) projects located throughout metropolitan and rural areas;

(B) low-density projects, to the extent practicable; and

(C) dwelling units that are visually indistinguishable from comparable privately owned dwelling units;

(4) to provide for the revitalization of the housing construction industry and related industries; and

(5) to remedy the discriminatory practices of construction unions by providing for the establishment of special procedures for employing individuals to construct and revitalize public housing.

SEC. 3. CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC HOUSING.

Section 5 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(m)(1) The Secretary shall carry out a program for the construction of 500,000 new dwelling units in public housing during each of the fiscal years 1989 through 1998.

"(2) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subsection such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1989 through 1998. Any amount appropriated under this paragraph shall remain available until expended.".

SEC. 4. REVITALIZATION OF PUBLIC HOUSING.

Section 14(b) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3)(A) To the extent approved in appropriation Acts and subject to subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall make available and contract to make available financial assistance under this subsection, in addition to the financial assistance made available under paragraphs (1) and (2). In making assistance available under this paragraph, the Secretary shall give particular preference to public housing agencies requesting such assistance for public housing projects that the Secretary determines would likely have been subject to demolition or disposition under section 18, as such section was in effect before the date of the enactment of the Jesse Gray Housing Act.

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph, the aggregate amount of budget authority that may be obligated for contracts for annual contributions is increased on October 1 of each of the years 1988 through 1997 by the amount necessary to provide for the revitalization of 100,000 dwelling units in public housing during each of the fiscal years 1989 through 1998, respectively.".

SEC. 5. PROHIBITION OF DEMOLITION AND DISPOSITION OF PUBLIC HOUSING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 18(a) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by striking all that follows "project" the second place it appears and inserting a period.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 18 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended—

(1) by striking subsections (b) and (c);

(2) in subsection (d), by striking "subsections (a) and (b)" and inserting "subsection (a)"; and

(3) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (b).

SEC. 6. EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC HOUSING CONSTRUCTION AND REVITALIZATION.

The United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC HOUSING CONSTRUCTION AND REVITALIZATION

"SEC. 22. (a) IN GENERAL.—In connection with any construction and revitalization of public housing under sections 5 and 14, each public housing agency shall carry out a program of job training and employment of individuals residing in the area with respect to which such public housing agency has authority. Each such program shall give preference to such individuals who reside in public housing.

"(b) PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) Each training and employment program required in subsection (a) shall provide that 50 percent of the individuals employed in connection with the construction of any public housing project shall be individuals described in such subsection. Of the individuals employed under this paragraph, 60 percent shall be trained and employed in skilled and semi-skilled positions.

"(2) Each training and employment program required in subsection (a) shall provide that 35 percent of the individuals employed in connection with the revitalization of any public housing project shall be individuals described in such subsection. Of the individuals employed under this paragraph, 70 percent shall be trained and employed in skilled and semi-skilled positions.

"(c) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall issue such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.".

SEC. 7. TENANT RENT CONTRIBUTIONS.

(a) RENTAL AND COOPERATIVE HOUSING FOR LOWER INCOME FAMILIES.—Section 236(f) of the National Housing Act is amended—

(1) by striking "30" each place it appears and inserting "25"; and

(2) in paragraph (1)(ii), by striking "25" and inserting "20".

(2) Section 521(a)(3) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by striking "30" each place it appears and inserting "25".

(3) Section 530 of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by striking "30" and inserting "25".

(d) RENT SUPPLEMENTS.—Section 101(d) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking "30" and inserting "25".

(e) TRANSITIONAL PROVISIONS.—Section 206(d)(6) of the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983 is amended by striking "30" and inserting "25".

(f) EXCLUSION OF CERTAIN INCOME.—For purposes of determining the monthly contribution to be made by a family under the provisions amended by this section, the adjusted income of a family shall exclude any income attributable to any cost-of-living adjustment made after the effective date of this section in—

(1) any welfare assistance received by such family from a public agency; or

(2) any benefits received by such family under the Social Security Act.

(g) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of, and amendments made by, this section shall take effect on October 1, 1989.

SEC. 8. REPORT REGARDING FEDERAL HOUSING ASSISTANCE.

The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, following consultation with public housing agencies, shall prepare and submit to the Congress a comprehensive report setting forth a proposal to limit Federal housing assistance to assistance for public housing in order to ensure that all funds for housing assistance provided by the Federal Government benefit lower income families.

THE SECURITIES LAW ENFORCEMENT REMEDIES ACT OF 1989

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Securities Law Enforcement Remedies Act of 1989 to provide the Securities and Exchange Commission with additional tools for its arsenal in fighting financial crimes.

Public confidence in our markets is at an all-time low. The odious cloud hanging over the Chicago futures pits only confirms the perception of widespread corruption and regulatory failure. "Yea, they are greedy dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand: They all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarters."—Isaiah 56:11. The state of affairs serves our economy very poorly.

The amendments I introduce today will enhance the SEC's enforcement of the Federal securities laws. If enacted, they would permit assessment of new civil money penalties in administrative and civil proceedings under the Federal securities laws, and would allow the SEC to ask a court to suspend or bar violators from serving as directors or officers of public companies.

A section-by-section analysis follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Section 101.—Section 101 of the Act amends Section 20(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 ("Securities Act") by adding language to clarify the ability of the Commission to obtain court orders barring persons from serving as officers or directors of any issuer that has a class of securities registered under Section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 ("Exchange Act") or that is required to file periodic reports under Section 15(d) of the Exchange Act. While Section 20(b) as currently in force does not refer to any form of relief other than an injunction, courts have recognized that they have available the full range of equitable remedies, including disgorgement, appointment of a receiver, and a prohibition against acting as a director or officer of reporting companies. For example in J.I. Case Company v. Borak, 377 U.S. 426, 433 (1964), the Supreme Court held that under the Exchange Act a court could order all relief necessary for the protection of investors. See also SEC v. Materia, 745 F.2d 197 (2d Cir. 1984) (once equity jurisdiction invoked, court has power to order all equitable relief necessary under the circumstances).

This amendment is intended to clarify the courts' authority to enter an order barring an individual from serving as an officer or director of a reporting company, a remedy which has been obtained by the Commission in prior cases. See, e.g., SEC v. San Saba Nu-Tech, Inc., Litig. Rel. 10,531, 31 S.E.C. Dock. 510 (D.D.C. 1984); SEC v. Florafax International, Inc., Litig. Rel. 10,617, 31 S.E.C. Dock. 1038 (N.D. Okla. 1984). It is intended that by specifying this particular type of ancillary relief, the Act does not restrict the Commission's ability to obtain other forms of such relief. These could include the appointment of a special agent to conduct an investigation or insure compliance, see, e.g., SEC v. Beisinger Indus. Corp., 552 F.2d 15, 18 (1st Cir. 1977), setting aside a merger, see Mills v. Electric Auto-Lite Co., 396 U.S. 375, 386 (1970), ousting or appointing directors, see International Controls Corp. v. Vesco, 490 F.2d 1334, 1339-40 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 417 U.S. 932 (1974), freezing assets, see Deckert v. Independence Shares Corp., 311 U.S. 282, 290 (1940), establishing an audit committee, see SEC v. Mattell, Inc., 4 S.E.C. Doc. 724, [1974-75] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) ¶ 94,754 (D.D.C. 1974), or ordering a defendant to perform specified acts not otherwise required by law, see, e.g., Wright v. Heizer Corp., 560 F.2d 236, 256 (7th Cir. 1977). Parallel amendments are made to the Exchange Act, the Investment Company Act of 1940 and the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, in Sections 202, 302, and 402, respectively.

Section 102.—Section 102 of the Act amends Section 20 of the Securities Act, by redesignating current subsection (c) as subsection (d), and by adding a new subsection (c), to provide that the Commission may seek civil penalties in civil actions. A court can impose such penalties in any case where it finds a violation of the federal securities laws. The amount of the penalty is determined by the court in light of the facts and circumstances in the particular case, but cannot exceed the greater of (1) $100,000 for natural persons or $500,000 for other persons or (2) the gross amount of pecuniary gain to the defendant as a result of the violation. The penalty is payable into the Treasury, and the Attorney General is charged with enforcing payment of penalties. Parallel amendments are made to the Exchange Act, the Investment Company Act and the Investment Advisers Act, in Sections 202, 302, and 402, respectively. Although it is contemplated that civil penalties will be sought in conjunction with actions seeking to enjoin future violations, under new Section 20(d) of the Securities Act and those subsections added to the other acts by the parallel amendments, a court may impose a money penalty even if it finds that there is an insufficient basis to grant injunctive relief.

Section 201.—Section 201 of the Act makes two changes to the Commission's authority in proceedings under Section 15(c)(4) of Exchange Act. First, it adds violations of Section 16(a) of the Act to the list of bases for proceedings.

Second, Section 201 authorizes the Commission to bar or suspend a respondent from acting as officer or director of any issuer that has a class of securities registered pursuant to Section 12 of the Exchange Act or that is required to file periodic reports pursuant to Section 15(d) of the Exchange Act. Such bars can be imposed against any person found to have failed to comply with Section 12, 13, 14, subsection (d) of Section 15, or subsection (a) of Section 16 or to have been a cause of such failure to comply, if the Commission finds that the bar was in the public interest. The bar can be either conditional or unconditional, and for such period of time as the Commission determines.

Section 202.—Section 202 of the Act makes amendments to the Exchange Act, paralleling those made to the Securities Act by Sections 101 and 102. First, it amends Section 21(d) of the Exchange Act by redesignating it as paragraph (1) of that section, and by adding language to that paragraph to clarify the authority of courts to prohibit persons from serving as officers or directors of any issuer that has a class of securities registered under Section 12 of the Exchange Act or that is required to file periodic reports under Section 15(d) of the Exchange Act. This language parallels the language added to Section 20(b) of the Securities Act by Section 102, to Section 42(d) of the Investment Company Act by Section 302 and to Section 209(d) of the Investment Advisers Act by Section 402.

Second, it adds new paragraph (2) to permit the Commission to seek and a court to impose monetary penalties in injunctive actions for violations of the securities laws. The provision excepts those violations that are subject to the civil penalty provisions of Section 21A. This new paragraph parallels new section 20(c) of the Securities Act added by Section 102, new Section 42(e) of the Investment Company Act added by Section 302, and new Section 209(e) of the Investment Advisers Act added by Section 402.

Section 203.—Section 203 of the Act adds new Section 21B to the Exchange Act, to authorize the Commission or other appropriate regulatory agency to impose civil penalties in administrative proceedings. Subsection (a) of Section 21B authorizes such penalties in proceedings under Section 15(c)(4) of the Exchange Act. Subsection (b) of Section 21B authorizes such penalties in proceedings under Sections 15(b)(4), 15(b)(6), 15B, 15C and 17A of that Act. Under subsections (a) and (b) of Section 21B, the Commission may assess a penalty if it finds that the respondent violated the federal securities laws; or willfully aided, abetted, counseled, commanded, induced or procured a violation by any other person; or made willful misstatements in any registration application, report required to be filed, or Commission proceeding with respect to registration; or failed reasonably to supervise, with a view to preventing violations of the federal securities laws, another person who committed a violation, if the other person was subject to his supervision; and also finds that a penalty is in the public interest. By authorizing the imposition of civil penalties against securities firms in administrative proceedings, this section is not intended to expand the substantive scope of firm liability for the misconduct of controlled or supervised persons. Subsection (c) of Section 21B provides that in determining whether the penalty is in the public interest, the Commission or other appropriate regulatory agency may consider the following factors:

(1) whether the act or omission for which such penalty is assessed involved fraud, deceit, manipulation, or deliberate or reckless disregard of a regulatory requirement;

(2) the harm to other persons resulting either directly or indirectly from such act or omission;

(3) the extent to which any person was unjustly enriched, taking into account any restitution made to persons injured by such behavior;

(4) whether such person previously has been found by the Commission, other appropriate regulatory agency, or self-regulatory organization to have violated the federal securities laws, state securities laws, or the rules of a self-regulatory organization, or has been enjoined by a court of competent jurisdiction from violations of such laws or rules;

(5) the need to deter such person and other persons from committing such acts or omissions; and

(6) such other matters as justice may require.

The maximum amount of the penalty is $100,000 for natural persons or $500,000 for all other persons. The penalty is payable into the Treasury, and the Attorney General is charged with enforcing payment of penalties.

The six factors enumerated in these subsections are intended to be permissive considerations in determining whether a penalty is in the public interest, taken into account according to the facts of any given case. They are intended to be specific, yet flexible enough to allow the Commission to assess appropriate penalties for a broad range of violations.

Subsection (d) of Section 21B provides that a respondent may present evidence that the Commission or other appropriate regulatory agency may consider in determining whether a penalty is in the public interest. That evidence could relate to his ability to pay a penalty, including evidence of his ability to continue in business, and the collectability of the penalty, taking into account other claims of the United States or third parties upon his assets and the amount of his assets. This subsection is intended to give respondents the opportunity to show their inability to pay a penalty. It is appropriate for a respondent to have the burden of proof as to his ability to pay, because he has better access to his financial records than does the Commission. Under this subsection, the Commission has the discretion to impose a penalty even if a respondent presents evidence that his business would be affected adversely by imposition of a penalty.

Section 204.—Section 204 of the Act is a conforming amendment to Section 15B of the Exchange Act, necessitated by the Commission's authority to seek a penalty in administrative proceedings pursuant to new Section 21B. It requires the Commission to inform the appropriate regulatory agency for a municipal securities dealer of whether the Commission is seeking a penalty against the dealer pursuant to new Section 21B of the Exchange Act.

Section 301.—Section 301 of the Act adds new subsection (d) to Section 9 of the Investment Company Act of 1940 authorizing the Commission to assess monetary penalties in administrative proceedings instituted pursuant to Section 9(b) of the Investment Company Act. This new subsection parallels new Section 21B of the Exchange Act added by Section 203, and new Section 203(i) of the Investment Advisers Act added by Section 401. Section 301 also makes conforming amendments to Section 9 by redesignating current subsection (d) as subsection (e), and by amending subsection (e) so that the clarification of the term "investment adviser" applies to all of Section 9.

Section 302.—Section 302 of the Act makes amendments to Section 42 of the Investment Company Act paralleling those made to the Securities Act by Sections 101 and 102, to the Exchange Act by Section 202, and to the Investment Advisers Act by Section 402.

First, it adds language to Section 42(d) to clarify the authority of courts to enter orders prohibiting persons from serving as officers or directors of any issuer that has a class of securities registered under Section 12 of the Exchange Act of 1934 of that is required to file preiodic reports under Section 15(d) of the Exchange Act. This language parallels the language added to Section 20(d) of the Securities Act by Section 102, to newly redesignated Section 21(d)(1) of the Exchange Act by Section 202, and to Section 209(d) of the Investment Advisers Act by Section 402. Other provisions of the Investment Company Act provide prohibitions against securities law violators from serving as an officer or director, among other things, of any registered investment company. First, Section 9(a) of the Investment Company Act makes unlawful such service by any person who within 10 years has been criminally convicted of, or who has been enjoined by a court from securities law violations. Second, Section 9(b) authorizes the Commission to prohibit service as an officer or director of a registered investment company by persons who have violated the federal securities laws. Third, Section 36(a) authorizes the Commission to institute a civil injunctive actions against any person who has served as an officer or director of a registered investment company and who engaged in or is about to engage in any breach of fiduciary duty involving personal misconduct in respect of any registered investment company for which he act as an officer or director, to obtain an injunction from such service.

Second, it adds new subsection (e) to Section 42 to permit the Commission to seek and a court to impose monetary penalties in injunctive actions. This new subsection parallels new Section 20(c) of the Securities Act added by Section 102, new Section 9(d) of the Investment Company Act added by Section 202, and new Section 209(e) of the Investment Advisers Act added by Section 402.

Section 401.—Section 401 of the Act adds new subsection (i) to Section 203 of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 to authorize the Commission to assess monetary penalties in administrative proceedings instituted pursuant to Sections 203 (e) or (f) of the Investment Advisers Act. This new subsection parallels new Section 21B of the Exchange Act added by Section 203, and new Section 9(d) of the Investment Company Act added by Section 301.

Section 402.—Section 402 of the Act makes amendments to Section 209 of the Investment Advisers Act paralleling those made to the Securities Act by Sections 101 and 102, to the Exchange Act by Section 202, and to the Investment Company Act by Section 302. First, it adds language to Section 209(d) of the Investment Company Act to clarify the ability of the Commission to obtain court-ordered bars prohibiting persons from serving as officers or directors of any issuer that has a class of securities registered under Section 12 of the Exchange Act of 1934 or that is required to file periodic reports under Section 15(d) of the Exchange Act. This language parallels the language added to Section 20(d) of the Securities Act by Section 102, to newly redesignated Section 21(d)(1) of the Exchange Act by Section 202, and to Section 42(d) of the Investment Company Act by Section 302.

Second, it adds new subsection (e) to Section 209 of the Investment Advisers Act to permit the Commission to seek and a court to impose monetary penalties in injunctive actions. This new subsection parallels new Section 20(c) of the Securities Act as added by Section 102, new Section 9(d) of the Investment Company Act added by Section 202, and new Section 42(e) of the Investment Company Act added by Section 302.

Section 403.—Section 403 of the Act is a conforming amendment that amends Section 214 of the Investment Advisers Act to expand the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States to include actions at law, as well as equitable or injunctive action, under that act. This amendment is necessitated by the addition of the new Section 209(e), the civil penalty provision, to the Investment Advisers, Act, since that new section requires the courts to have jurisdiction in penalty actions.

THE TONGASS TIMBER REFORM ACT

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce today, along with more than 75 of my colleagues, a comprehensive reform package that will enable prudent management of our Nation's largest national forest. This bill, the Tongass Timber Reform Act will save the American taxpayers billions of dollars and will save an ecosystem of incalculable value.

RAINFOREST PROTECTION

Last July, the House sent a strong message to the U.S. Forest Service [USFS] and the two major timber operations in the Tongass by passing H.R. 1516 by an overwhelming margin of 361 to 47. Members voted to significantly reduce the Federal deficit and to protect one of the last rain forests in the world's temperate latitudes at the same time. Considerable attention has been focused on the destruction of tropical rain forests in the Amazon Basin and the relationship to changing global climate. By passing this bill, we have an excellent opportunity to set an example by wisely managing nearly 17 million acres of pristine rain forest.

The Tongass is bigger than the State of West Virginia. It is home to the greatest concentration of bald eagles and grizzly bears in the world. Its streams provide the spawning grounds for salmon that is vital to the economy of Alaska. Perhaps most important to the future of the State's economy is the rapidly growing number of tourists who come to the Tongass to experience its spectacular wilderness. As John Muir described it more than 100 years ago, the Tongass is a place of endless rhythm and beauty.

TAXPAYER BOONDOGGLE

In addition to the need to manage this forest in an evironmentally sound way, we must change policy in order to end the loss of taxpayer dollars. The USFS is wasting tens of millions of taxpayer dollars each year on a timber program that cannot accomplish its stated goal of preserving timber industry jobs.

During years of strongest timber demand and prior to the passage of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act [ANILCA], the USFS still lost millions of dollars selling timber from the Tongass. Because of the deteriorated market conditions and high levels of USFS spending since Congress handed the Tongass Timber Program an open-ended permanent appropriation, a virtual blank check, taxpayer losses have skyrocketed.

Net Tongass Timber Program receipts and expenditures for 1977 through 1986 are negative over the entire 10-year period, resulting in a total loss of more than $360 million. In fact, annual net receipts are consistently negative even if one completely ignores the timber program's capital costs, such as roads, bridges, and facilities.

In 1983 and 1984, annual taxpayer losses on Federal timber sales from the Tongass were $57 million and $54 million, respectively. Stated differently, the Tongass Timber Program lost 91 cents on every taxpayer dollar spent in 1983 and 93 cents in 1984. In 1985 and 1986, taxpayer losses were maximized at more than 99 cents on the dollar.

Unfortunately, even the USFS's reports to Congress affirm the sad fact that the annual dollar amount of these losses is bound to grow over time. Because of chronically weak markets for southeast Alaska's timber products and the fact that future harvests will have to rely on less accessible, less valuable stands, the worst losses loom ahead for the taxpayer.

The USFS continues to commit the best portions of the Tongass' rare old-growth forest to logging, stating a need to maintain timber industry jobs. However, in spite of increasing timber program expenditures, regional timber industry employment has fallen sharply—from more than 3,000 in 1980 to less than 1,800 in 1986. Although a recent boom in the market due to the strong Japanese yen has increased employment, the boom and bust cycle of the pulpmill industry is sure to continue. In the long term, community stability is best enhanced by a competitive industry producing value-added products.

This Federal policy is also flawed because it ignores the contributions to timber output and employment that can be made by Alaska Native corporations. These corporations, established pursuant to the 1971 Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, are wholly owned by Alaska Natives. Through careful land selections, the Native corporations now own some of the best timber lands in southeast Alaska. Their share of the regional timber harvest climbed from 13 percent in 1980 to 58 percent in the first two quarters of 1986. However, USFS sales under two exclusive 50-year contracts impede the ability of the Native corporations to successfully market their pulp-grade logs. Up to 50 million board feet of pulp-grade material is left on the ground on Native corporation clearcuts each year because the pulpmills have access to subsidized Federal timber from the Tongass.

Finally, the Federal Timber Program places at risk a large number of jobs in southeast Alaska that ultimately depend on the preservation of more forest areas on the Tongass. This is particularly true for jobs in the fishing and tourism sectors of the economy. These sectors, which provide more than twice as many jobs as the timber industry, depend on natural resources that can be sustained in perpetuity. The southeast Alaska timber industry, on the other hand, is dependent on the one-time harvest of high-volume, old-growth timber that, for practical purposes, is nonrenewable. This fact makes a continued decline of timber industry jobs inevitable. In 1987, as much as 40 percent of the Tongass timber jobs were filled by seasonal employment from the lower 48 States. Presently, Federal Timber Program losses translate into an annual cost of more than $36,000 per job in logging and millwork.

The unique qualities that make the Tongass an important resources for the Nation are threatened by the Federal Timber Program and, particularly, but the USFS's interpretation of ANILCA. Section 705, included as part of a broad amendment package prior to Senate passage of the act, contains three provisions that are environmentally and economically unsound.

First, section 705 sets a goal of supplying 4.5 billion board feet of timber per decade from the Tongass to dependent industry. Second, it provides an open-ended appropriation of at least $40 million annually or as much as the Secretary of Agriculture finds is necessary to enable the USFS to achieve the timber supply goal. Unlike virtually all other Federal expenditures, including expenditures for national defense, these funds are not subject to deferral or rescission by the administration, nor are they subject to the annual appropriations process in Congress. Finally, the section exempts the Tongass from an important reform of the National Forest Management Act of 1976 that requires the Secretary of Agriculture to identify national forest lands that are economically and physically unsuited for timber production.

Section 705 is an anomaly in national forest management, designed especially for the Tongass. In essence, it ratified a series of unproven economic assumptions in the USFS's 1979 Tongass land management plan [TLMP] aimed at preserving the regional timber industry. The existing pulp and sawmills in southeast Alaska were built as a direct result of efforts by the USFS to establish a major timber industry in the region. The TLMP and section 705 represent an ongoing attempt to sustain the timber economy created by those earlier efforts.

In ANILCA, Congress recognized the inherent tension between logging on the Tongass and other important goals such as the preservation of wilderness, wildlife, and fish resources. Congress further recognized that economic and environmental factors change over time. For these reasons, section 705(b) of ANILCA requires the USFS to report to Congress by the fifth anniversary of the act, and every 2 years thereafter, on the status of the Tongass.

As the 1985 section 706(b) report conclusively demonstrates, section 705 will continue to result in the taxpayer loses approaching 99 cents on every dollar spent growing and selling trees on the Tongass. Moreover, because the economic assumptions upon which the law was based have proven to be totally in error, it is apparent that the law must be changed to reflect current circumstances and national fiscal priorities.

The agency continues to prepare sales without regard to demand. From 1980 through 1986, the USFS spent $287 million from its Tongass timber supply fund to put about 2.8 billion board feet of timber on sale. Only about 1.5 billion board feet, or 53 percent, was sold. In fact, while the USFS offered 450 million board feet each year, the annual average timber harvest from 1980 to 1988 has been only 285 million board feet. Even a recent General Accounting Office report recommends that Congress revise the 4.5 billion board feet per decade requirement so that timber goals can be set through the land management process—as they are on every other national forest.

The USFS should limit the preparation of new sales each year to volumes based on anticipated demand for sale offerings and estimated backlogs of prepared sale offerings. The agency should include estimated backlogs and projected demand levels in the annual supply and demand reports to Congress that are required by ANILCA. The Tongass Timber Reform Act requires the USFS to justify expenditures each year so that the Appropriations Committee can determine the appropriate level of funding.

CONTRACTS

When I traveled to Alaska, I met with representatives of the Tongass-dependent timber industry, Native and independent loggers, fishermen, local conservationists, representatives of the tourist industry, people dependent on subsistence uses, and millworkers. In addition, I visited a pulp and sawmill, commercial fishing operations, and many of the cities and rural villages in southeast Alaska. Throughout my travels, I found that there was strong support for Tongass timber reform.

The second component of the Tongass Timber Reform Act will put all purchases of timber from Alaska's national forests on an equal footing by terminating 50-year timber sale contracts in the State of Alaska and replacing them with a system of short-term timber sales used in all other national forests. I believe this bill will return to the USFS full control of management of our Nation's largest forest. In addition, this bill will, for the first time, make balanced multiple-use management of the Tongass possible.

Since the Tongass became a national forest in the early part of the century, the USFS has pursued a unique experiment designed to foster the development of a large-scale pulpmill industry in southeast Alaska. The purpose was to stablize the local economy, promote industrial expansion, provide local jobs, further the development of the State of Alaska, and to settle part of the last frontier. To attract pulpmills to southeast Alaska, a remote and economically forbidding region, the USFS offered unprecedented long-time timber contracts to potential bidders in the 1950's. The terms of these contracts give the purchasers virtually unfettered control over the national forest, sole access to a huge portion of the annual allowable timber harvest, and great competitive advantages that amount to monopoly power in the local market, They effectively commit two-thirds of the commercial forest land to the exclusive use of the mills. While these contracts may have served a purpose in the 1950's when they were signed, they no longer make sense.

In fact, Alaskan long-term timber contracts have interfered with normal free market mechanisms and are berriers to competition. For example, timber contracts have been used to manipulate the market and to eliminate competition. In a case entitled "Reid Bros. Logging against Ketchikan Pulp Company" (No. C75-165SR W.D. Washington 1981), two decades of antitrust violations by the contract holders, under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, were found to have resulted in the elimination of existing independent mills and the payment of artificially low prices to loggers, thus eliminating the independent businessmen. In addition, the holders of these contracts continue to pay only an average of $2 per thousand board feet where average rates for independent operators are approximately $40 per thousand board feet.

In addition, Alaskan long-term timber contracts antedate all major environmental and resources management laws pertaining to the national forests, including the Multiple-Use and Sustained-Yield Act of 1960, the Wilderness Act of 1964, the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, and the National Forest Management Act of 1976. These laws have never been fully implemented for the Tongass. As a result, the existence of these long-term timber contracts impairs the ability of the United States, the State of Alaska, and other responsible parties to properly manage nontimber resources in Alaska.

It is important to realize that the termination of these contracts will not impede any timber operator in any way from competing for timber supplies from national forests located in Alaska. In fact, this bill will enhance competition within the timber industry. A 1987 Congressional Research Service report concluded that no compensation would likely be required. If by chance compensation was required, the report placed it between $21 million and $150 million, with the low figure most reasonable. Even counting compensation, millions would still be saved every year from less subsidies, enhanced industry competition and more efficient forest management. I strongly believe the contracts have ceased to further their original goals and their continued existence damages other Alaskan industries dependent on access to natural resources.

PERMANENT PROTECTION

The areas selected for protection in the bill have exceptional values for fish, wildlife, recreation, subsistence hunting and fishing, and scientific research. They are areas of high-volume old-growth forest, portions of the Tongass' rain forest with trees 200 to 800 years old, which provides essential habitat for deer, grizzly bear, bald eagles, and other wildlife. And, this special forest occurs primarily along rivers and streams where clear-cutting leads to erosion, siltation, and other degradation of salmon habitat.

Since 1950, more than half of the highest-volume old-growth forest on the Tongass has been logged. Less than 5 percent of this habitat is protected in wilderness. By the USFS's own rating system, 70 percent of the high-value wildlife areas and 72 percent of the high-value fishery areas lie outside the Tongass' designated wilderness areas—and are subject to whatever management the forest plan prescribes for them.

With the help of local communities, 23 areas have been identified as areas of special environmental value. The list includes areas nominated by the Alaska Department of Fish and Game, the United Fishermen of Alaska, the Sealaska Corporation—the Native regional corporation—the Southeast Alaska Conservation Council, and southeast Alaska communities as deserving protection from logging. Four areas were voted by the House as wilderness in 1979, two areas were recommended by the USFS for wilderness, seven areas were identified by the Senate Energy Committee as "special management areas." In 1988, the House approved a 5-year moratorium on logging in 18 of the areas. In the Tongass Timber Reform Act, these areas will be protected as wilderness.

The Tongass National Forest is one of the last significant stands of temperate rain forest left in the Northern Hemisphere. That the American taxpayer should be asked to subsidize the destruction of this magnificent national treasure is ridiculous. I ask that you join me in limiting the funds available to subsidize the Alaska timber industry and to require the Tongass budget to reflect national fiscal needs and resources.

THE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF CHICAGO CONFERENCE

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, on the 20th anniversary of the founding Chicago Conference of Abortion Rights Organizers in 1969, we ask that Congress join us in celebrating with the abortion rights movement a significant date that has meant so much to the progress of women.

As the backup to contraception and family planning, abortion rights have become the rock on which all other economic, social, and personal rights of women are based. By allowing women to control their fertility, it has become a dominant factor in promoting the health of women and making every child wanted and loved.

With every poll showing that the majority of Americans support abortion rights, we ask that Congress and the judiciary recognize that in our pluralist society, no minority group should force its morality on the rest of the country, and cause social chaos by enforcing minority dogma by law.

H.R. 126, THE INDIVIDUAL PRIVACY PROTECTION ACT

HON. CARDISS COLLINS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, what was once considered personal information is now finding its way into public and private computers across the country. And what was once considered personal conversation, can now find its way into the public airwaves through new communication technologies.

The Federal Government, through the use of high speed, efficient computers is currently the largest collector of personal data. Its various computers maintain a vast amount of personal information on each American, including one's financial, health, and entertainment habits, as well as economic, social, and marital facts. When these government computers connect with each other, they produce quite a complete—if not entirely accurate—picture of us.

Prior to the advent of these advanced technologies, data collection, and searches were carried out manually, The realities of manual recordkeeping helped assure that disclosures were legitimate.

With this new technology, however, we now have the capability to collect, record, track, correlate, and develop profiles of large classes of people. We can easily use the data for purposes unrelated to the events that generated it.

These computerized records threaten each American's privacy. When inaccurate information is disclosed, it can find its way into the files of credit bureaus, landlords, employers, and insurers—creating a dangerous cycle which can take years to correct. And even when the disclosed information is accurate, it can lead to other problems when damaging or irrelevant information is transferred.

Recently, I have introduced H.R. 126, the Individual Privacy Protection Act, to address this threat to personal privacy. By clarifying ambiguous wording and closing loopholes, it will enable people to have greater access to their records and provide new recourse for erroneous disclosure of information. It will ensure that when information is given for one purpose, it is not used for entirely different reasons without an individual's knowledge and consent.

The Individual Privacy Protection Act also will establish a permanent government board to research, study, and investigate issues relating to personal privacy. The information gathered by the Commission will put Congress in a position to legislate intelligently on privacy issues in the future. The Board also will have the authority to inform Government agencies on the impact of their regulations on an individual's privacy and, to guide them in developing recordkeeping systems which are less intrusive.

Mr. Speaker, the need for this legislation has grown throughout the 1980's and will continue to grow due to the proliferation of new information technologies unless we address these concerns.

THE PATIENT RELIEF PROGRAM

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, there is a group of people in San Diego, CA who, in various ways, have helped to change the lives of those ravaged by war. The Patient Relief Program is made up of physicians, hospitals, and private citizens who have banded together to nurse the victims of the wars in Afghanistan and Central America back to health. These talented men and women restore both physical and emotional health. San Diego's Patient Relief Program works in cooperation with the U.S. Government's Afghan Patient Relief Program, the Intergovernmental Committee on Migration, and the International Medical Corps.

All of the surgery and medical care performed is done free of charge. Food and housing is donated, or paid for by donations, local immigrant and refugee communities provide translation and run food banks.

The Frost Street Surgical Center, Scripps Memorial Hospital, and Sharp Memorial Hospital, have all done outstanding work for the Patient Relief Program. They've opened up their facilities to these patients free of charge and given them the best medical care available.

Many physicians, medical specialists, and therapists have selflessly volunteered to reconstruct war-torn children and adults. I would like to especially thank Drs. Barbara Brem, Donald B. Dose, Harold Forney, Malton Johnson, Jonathan Jones, Susan Kay, Cammille Kochenderfer, Stephen Krant, and Arthur Sanford. Oculist Kirsten Kolberg-Applegate, BCO Gordon Kolberg, and therapist Sandy Doehr also have my thanks.

Without the help of private individuals and community leaders, the program could not have rebuilt so many lives. These men and women contributed countless amounts of time and money to care for the victims of war in Central America and in Afghanistan. Thanks to Larry Dickson, Michal Foote, Engineer Dost Hayat, Dan McKinnon, Sue Reeves, Zia Waleh, and Dr. Sadruddin Shuhab Zadeh.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be associated with the Patient Relief Program. I am sure sometimes between the language barrier, international flights, visa problems, bureaucracy, long hours, and sometimes heartbreaking cases, these fine men and women wonder if it is all worth it. But I am sure that the glow of one young patient's face, reminds them that their work is vital and deeply appreciated.

FEDERAL EXCISE TAXES: REGRESSIVE, EXCESSIVE, AND INEFFICIENT

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, today I stand before you in a tide created by the wake of the proposals of many to alleviate the budget deficit. With the ebb and flow, one remedy seems to recur as regularly and predictably as that tide: the solution of excise taxes. What is it about excise taxes that makes them so superficially appealing as a panacea for America's ills? Federal excise taxes are regressive, excessive, and inefficient. Yet time and again we turn to a so-called revenue option that allows us to simply plug the numbers into an unsound formula and "solve" the budget deficit.

Excise taxes are regressive, and this regressivity cannot be cured merely by increasing the earned income credit, which only reaches families who have earned income and does nothing to help those who have no dependents or are retired or unemployed. Moreover, the credit bears no relation to individual consumption patterns, which is essential to compensate for taxes on selected consumption items. Similarily, cost of living adjustments [COLA's] touch only limited income sources and do not reflect individual consumption patterns. Both credits and COLA's have significant time lags, and other "solutions" quickly become far too expensive and/or complex. The only solution to the regressivity of excise taxes is complete avoidance.

Fuel taxes fall most heavily on those who must drive long distances for work or other nondiscretionary purposes. Tobacco and beverage taxes penalize those products whose consumers are disproportionately from minority and lower income groups. A diesel tax falls hardest on owner-operators, as well as on workers and owners of marginal trucking companies—most of which are small businesses—as well as service stations and oil distributors. Reduced sales of beverages and cigarettes that are the result of previous tax increases hurt "mom and pop" stores most, in addition to growers, producers, and distributors of their respective goods.

According to our own Congressional Budget Office, families with incomes below $5,000 pay from 7 to 15 times as great a fraction of income for Federal excise taxes on gasoline, beverages and tobacco as do families with incomes exceeding $50,000.

Federal excise taxes undermine a critical and important State financial base. States typically rely much more heavily on excise taxes to meet their financial needs. Given the laudable trend away from Federal financial assistance, States have been forced over the last 8 years to bear a much larger portion of the financial burden in meeting the needs of their citizens.

These taxes fall upon those people least able to pay. "User fees" and "revenue enhancers" unfairly place a disproportionate burden of the responsibility for deficit reduction upon select groups of consumers. Job losses from these tax increases are likely to be highest among the small businesses of our Nation, discouraging the entrepreneurial spirit upon which our great Nation was built.

Some proponents of higher excise taxes try to mask their proposals as public health measures. These arguments are incomplete and misleading. For example, when the cigarette tax was doubled in 1982, an estimated 14,600 tobacco growers and workers lost their jobs; that social cost must be weighed against any assumed health benefits. Another example is set forth by the vast majority of those consumers of alcoholic beverages who do so moderately. These tens of millions should not be penalized for the unfortunate abuses of a small minority who will not be discouraged by a tax increase.

Excise taxes discriminate by income and by region. For instance, gasoline usage per driver is nearly 50 percent higher in Wyoming than in New Jersey or Pennsylvania. Tobacco, wine, beer, and distilled spirits taxes are assessed on farmers and manufacturers concentrated in a small number of States. Should these few States and industries bear the burden of a national deficit reduction?

Mr. Speaker, our newly elected President came to his distinguished office on a platform proclaiming "no new taxes". In his inaugural address, President George Bush recognized an important and essential fact in the ongoing dilemma of deficit reduction. "We have more will than wallet, but will is what we need." He extended a hand and appealed for a Congress and Executive working together to produce a budget on which this Nation can live.

Honorable colleagues, we can reach that goal without the retribution of an excise tax that is regressive, excessive and inefficient. We can reach that goal through budget reform, and the use of a flexible freeze. But we cannot continue to try to fill the Government wallet at the expense of the American taxpayer.

TRIBUTE TO ANTHONY TREBINO

HON. CURT WELDON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Anthony Trebino, a constituent of mine, who has demonstrated and remined us all that ours is still a government of the people.

In December 1988, Mr. Anthony Trebino of Glen Riddle, PA, was outraged when an independent commission recommended a huge salary increase for members of the executive, legislative and judicial branches. The Commission's proposal, if enacted, would have automatically raised congressional salaries from $89,500 to $135,000 per year, unless the House and Senate voted to prevent such action before February 8.

The House leadership, ignoring the public outcry against the raise, tried to prevent a vote on this sensitive issue. When word of this strategy leaked out, it angered Mr. Trebino even more. He, like many Americans, decided it was time to take action. He called my office and wrote Members of Congress to register his opposition to the proposed raise.

But Mr. Trebino did not stop there. He set up signs at his employer's gas station and rallied public awareness on this issue. As a result, he collected over 25,000 signatures from Delaware Valley residents opposed to the salary increase then shared them with Members. His outstanding contributions on this issue were recognized nationwide, and outlined in a recent USA Today story.

It was efforts by individuals like Mr. Trebino that ultimately forced the House not only to take a vote, but to reject the inappropriate pay raise. Once again, American citizens were able to see that their opinions do make a difference and that they can shape public policy. I think it is especially fitting that we were able to witness this precess during the bicentennial celebration of our Constitution. Mr. Trebino was an outstanding participant in one of the greatest bicentennial events we have witnessed yet and he is a personal testament to the strength of participatory democracy.

I hope that efforts like Anthony Trebino's won't stop with the defeat of the pay raise. There are many critical issues facing our Nation which demand the same kind of unity and action which we recently witnessed. I hope many others will follow in Mr. Trebino's footsteps and devote their efforts to helping us solve the problems confronting us.

A TRIBUTE TO JORGE RIVERO—MR. AMIGO 1988

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend and pay tribute to Mr. Jorge Rivero, the newly selected Mr. Amigo.

Every year, members of the Mr. Amigo Association, who represent the city of Brownsville, TX, travel to Mexico City to select a new Mr. Amigo to serve as honored guest of Charro Days. Charro Days is a 4-day event in which the United States and Mexico are joined in celebration of the cultures of these neighboring countries. During Charro Days, which originated as a pre-Lenten festival, Brownsville citizens participate in a series of parades, dances and parties to demonstrate the goodwill of both countries. It is a well-planned, major function which is enjoyed and eagerly anticipated by many native South Texans as well as our winter visitors.

Jorge Rivero is the 25th Mexican citizen to be honored by the Mr. Amigo Association. Born in Mexico as the son of an engineer.

Mr. Rivero worked with his father in the family tannery as a young man. Although primarily recognized in Mexico as an actor, Jorge Rivero excelled in athletics and became a "world-class" athlete during his college career, winning medals at the Pan Am Games in Jai-Alai.

Soon after graduating from college with a degree in chemical engineering, Mr. Rivero made his Mexican film debut in "The Invisible Man" and his American film debut in "Soldier Blue," opposite Candice Bergen. Other co-stars of his include John Wayne, in "Rio Lobo," Charlton Heston in "The Last Hard Man" and Ava Gardner in "The Priest of Love."

Not only do Mr. Rivero's talents lay in acting, but they also include motion-picture production. He produced and co-starred with George Peppard and Max von Sydow in "Target Eagle" and with Margaux Hemingway and Lee Van Cleef in "The Killing Machine."

In between his movie producing and acting in Mexican and American films, Mr. Rivero finds time to exercise and relax at his Hollywood Hills home and his ranch in Mexico.

Mr. Amigo is selected on the basis of his or her contribution to international friendship and development of mutual understanding and cooperation between Mexico and the United States. Mr. Rivero should not only be recognized for his fine acting and production talents, but most importantly, for his contributions to international friendship, and the film industry of his native country and the United States, Mexico's sister republic. It is for these reasons that Mr. Jorge Rivero is an excellent choice for this year's award.

As Mr. Amigo, Jorge Rivero will receive the red-carpet treatment when he visits Brownsville as the city's honored guest during the upcoming Charro Days fiesta. During his 3-day stay on the border, he will make personal appearances in the Charro Days parades and at other fiesta events. Official "welcome" receptions will be staged by Cameron County, TX, and the cities of Brownsville and Matamoros, Mexico. The actor will also be the special guest at the Mr. Amigo Association Luncheon and the President's party.

I ask my colleagues to join me in extending congratulations to Jorge Rivero for being honored with this special award.

GEOGRAPHY AWARENESS WEEK

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my distinguished colleague from California, Mr. PANETTA, in introducing a resolution to declare the week of November 12–18, 1989, as Geography Awareness Week.

For the past 2 years, during Geography Awareness Week thousands of Americans across the Nation—Governors, State education officials, librarians, students, teachers, and parents—participated in numerous exercises designed to improve and promote geographic literacy. A seminar on the "geographical perspectives of Bluegrass Music," a national geography bee, special classes on mapmaking, and a lecture series on the geography of environmental hazards were just a few of the special activities that students participated in during Geography Awareness Week 1988. These and other special events conducted by our citizenry each year, during Geography Awareness Week are essential to draw attention to the critical need to know where we—and others—are.

It is important to acknowledge, though, that other than the lessons learned during Geography Awareness Week, 75 percent of American students today have no significant exposure to geography in their curricula. This is illustrated by the results of a recent Gallup poll which ranked Americans in the bottom third in an international test of geographic knowledge, with those aged 18 to 24 ranking last. The poll also found that one out of seven—a figure that would project to 24 million American adults—could not identify the United States on a world map. Further, half of those surveyed could not identify Nicaragua as the country in which the Sandinistas and Contras are fighting nor could 75 percent name four countries that officially acknowledge having nuclear weapons.

Those statistics are particularly disturbing when we realize that the United States is a nation whose global influence and responsibilities demand that its citizens be prepared for the future of a shared world. We, as the Nation's political leaders, have the responsibility to help create legitimate and viable programs for improving the state of geographic literacy in the Nation's schools and educational systems. Therefore, we are introducing this resolution today to focus national attention once again on the critical need for geography awareness in a nation that must meet the international, political, economic, environmental, social, and military challenges set forth by an increasingly interdependent and interconnected global village.

H.R. 134, THE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION AMENDMENTS OF 1989

HON. CARDISS COLLINS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, at a hearing that I chaired in 1984, it was learned that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission [EEOC] is unable to do its job completely in securing information from the 110 Federal agencies whose equal employment opportunity programs it oversees. Specifically, the EEOC is fully empowered by section 717 of the 1964 Civil Rights Act to gather data and timetables on an agency's compliance with affirmative action goals. However, it has no authority to gather that data if an agency fails to comply with Federal law.

To correct this oversight, I recently reintroduced H.R. 134, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission Amendments of 1989, to give the EEOC the subpoena power needed to effectively enforce section 717. With this authority, the EEOC would be able to issue a subpoena against any officer or employee of the United States. This officer or employee would be required to produce the information which the Commission needs to determine compliance with an agency's affirmative action responsibilities.

If a Federal employee refused to comply with the subpoena, the EEOC could then request a court order to enforce it. If the employee still did not comply, this individual would be held in contempt of court. Under this legal authority, this person could be subject to a fine or imprisonment. These penalties are "not designed to punish" but, rather, are to "produce action."

Mr. Speaker, the EEOC does not have the necessary legal powers to do its job properly. Together, we can provide this agency with the proper means to effectively carry out the responsibilities that Congress assigned to it.

AMERICAN BUSINESS GROUP ANNOUNCES OPPOSITION TO STEEL QUOTA EXTENSION

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw my colleagues attention to the announcement yesterday of a steel users coalition to oppose the extension of the voluntary restraint program for steel. The group of nearly 200 companies and trade associations represents American consumer and industrial goods manufacturers which use large amounts of steel in their products.

I was interested to see that the coalition includes companies from Massachusetts to California and from Texas to Minnesota. Large companies and small business alike are represented.

Its members also include companies from many industries; home appliances, farm equipment, food equipment, engines, auto parts, shipbuilding, industrial machinery, and metal products. This is a comprehensive cross section of the steel-consuming sector of the U.S. economy.

COMMITMENT TO COMMUNITY

HON. KWEISI MFUME

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, Baltimore has long been known as the City of Neighborhoods. Visitors from across the country and the world marvel at the fact that a major city like Baltimore can possess such a rich and wholesome smalltown atmosphere. When these visitors ask me to comment on this phenomenon, I tell them that the credit must be given to the people within the community, who so often come together to offer a helping hand when their neighbor truly needs one.

An exemplary case in point is the relationship between Mr. Travis Winkey and the Northwest Child Development Center. Travis Winkey has been a fixture in the Greater Baltimore community for many years. His name has become synonymous with international fashion design. Yet, after all of his international success and rave reviews, Travis Winkey continues to find time to host a benefit fashion show every year for the Northwest Child Development Center. This year's benefit will be on Sunday, February 26, 1989, at the Pimlico Race Course in Baltimore.

The Northwest Child Development Center is also a fine example of how Baltimoreans commonly assist one another. The development center is a community-based day care center in the Park Heights neighborhood that has provided quality service to this community for the past 12 years. I wish to take this time to personally congratulate all those dedicated individuals from the center who have diligently and selflessly given of their time, talent, and resources to working parents and their children in the Park Heights area.

As we all know, February is Black History Month. This is the time of year when America salutes the achievements and acknowledges the contributions of our Nation's many great African-Americans. Perhaps the greatest legacy of our African-American heritage is the fact that our strength and survival has always drawn upon the energy and identity of our communities. This very unique and enduring quality helped African-American people break the bonds of slavery and provided the courage to march triumphantly down the road toward true freedom.

With this in mind, I believe that each and every neighborhood in Baltimore can be proud and thankful that we can boast of being the hometown of Travis Winkey and the Northwest Child Development Center. In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind my colleagues that our Nation's children desperately need role models to guide them toward realizing their greatest potential. Travis Winkey and the many others like him who support the Northwest Child Development Center are among the best candidates I know to fill that role by encouraging future generations to give back to the communities from which they came.

LYME DISEASE AWARENESS WEEK

HON. GEORGE J. HOCHBRUECKNER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER. Mr. Speaker, as the Member of Congress representing the area with the most cases of Lyme disease in the country, I rise today to introduce the Comprehensive Lyme Disease Act of 1989. The senior Senator from New York State, DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN has introduced identical legislation in the Senate. I am also introducing a resolution to designate the week beginning July 23, 1989 as "Lyme Disease Awareness Week." I appreciate this opportunity to provide my colleagues with some background on this disease, and why I believe that this legislation is worthy of their attention and full support.

While most people have heard of Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever, a disease transmitted by a tick that affects about 700 people a year, there is a far more common tick-borne disease that has not received enough attention—Lyme disease. Although Lyme disease was first officially reported just 14 yars ago in Lyme, CT, it has fast become the most common tick-borne disease and one of the fastest spreading infectious diseases in the United States. If treated early, the disease can be cured by antibiotic therapy. However, early diagnosis is often very difficult because of the disease's resemblance to the flu, arthritis, and ringworm. Without early treatment, Lyme disease can cause severe arthritis, heart disease, or neurologic complications. Later effects, often occurring months or years after the initial onset of the disease, include destructive arthritis and chronic neurologic disease. To date, there is no cure for Lyme disease once it reaches its later, more dangerous stages.

Since 1982, over 14,000 cases of Lyme disease have been reported to the Centers for Disease Control [CDC] from 35 States. However, because diagnosis is difficult and public awareness about the disease is limited, the CDC estimates that thousands of cases have gone undiagnosed, unreported, and—worse—untreated. CDC has unofficially announced a preliminary figure of 5,700 cases of Lyme disease for 1988 with many States not yet reporting.

New York State, which has been hardest hit by Lyme disease, offers an example of how the number of reported cases is rapidly increasing. This may be due to heightened awareness on the part of the public and physicians. The number of cases reported to the New York State Department of Health in 1988 increased three-fold over the number reported in 1987. In 1987, 877 cases were reported in New York State. As of January 1989, with 1988 reports still coming in from doctors offices around the State, 2,678 cases had been reported. This represents well over one-third of all cases reported to the CDC through 1986, and this is in just 1 year, indeed, and in one state.

Representing the First Congressional District of New York, my district encompasses two-thirds of Suffolk County, Long Island which by Federal and State statistics is the most endemic area of Lyme disease in the country. While the New York State Health Department reported 2,688 cases for 1988, Suffolk County alone reported 1,224 cases.

In some areas of my district, up to 98 percent of ticks may carry the spirochete that causes the bacterial infection. Therefore, being bitten by a tick means almost certainty of getting Lyme disease. Despite the fact that the tick which causes Lyme disease is called the "northern deer tick," it will feed on almost any mammal, including humans and their pets. In fact, the most common animal host of this disease is no longer thought to be the deer, but rather the common field mouse.

The deer tick lives in grasses along the shore, in fields, and at the edge of woodlands. Many people on eastern Long Island have expressed concern about going to the beach, taking a walk in the woods, or sitting in their own backyards for fear of getting this debilitating disease. Hospitals in some of these endemic areas will not take blood for transfusions from local residents for fear of unknowingly transmitting Lyme disease to someone else. While blood products are regularly screened for AIDS and hepatitis, there is no screening process for Lyme disease.

Many people never even know that they have been bitten by this tick because it is so small. The tick which spreads this disease is the size of a comma in newsprint. The parasite can attach itself, feed, detach itself to go and lay its eggs all without the host's knowledge. Moreover, a person might not develop the telltale rash at the site of the tick bite, leaving the person clueless as to the cause of his or her ailment. Without the characteristic rash, doctors may have difficulty diagnosing Lyme disease. Standard blood tests often do not reveal the presence of the spirochete.

Federal support for research is necessary to produce a specific blood test to isolate and accurately identify the Lyme disease spirochete and a vaccine to prevent people living in endemic areas from contracting this disease. Effective new treatments are needed to stop the reoccurrence of Lyme disease within patients and to find a cure for advanced Lyme disease. Surveillance and education are also needed to control the spread of Lyme disease and halt the suffering it brings.

The Comprehensive Lyme Disease Act of 1989 is an expansion of legislation I introduced in the 100th Congress. This much-needed legislation will provide $2.5 million annually over 3 years for grants to public and private nonprofit entities to conduct research and to provide treatment of Lyme disease. These grants would be distributed by the National Institutes of Health. In addition, this legislation will provide $1 million annually over 3 years for efforts to educate the public about Lyme disease. These grants would be distributed by the Centers for Disease Conrol [CDC].

Last year Congress passed, and the President signed into law a resolution which former Congressman DioGuardi and I introduced designating the week of July 24–30, 1988, as "Lyme Disease Awareness Week." I was pleased that my colleagues joined me in support of this bill. I have introduced the measure again to designate the week beginning July 23, 1989, as "Lyme Disease Awareness Week." As early treatment of Lyme disease is the key to warding off its worst effects, and as there is currently no vaccine for Lyme disease, the best defense against it is prevention. Prevention depends upon public awareness. This is why I hope that my colleagues will again join me in bringing this disease to the attention of the American public and support funding for research and treatment of Lyme disease.

THE CONGRESSIONAL SALARY AND TAX ACT OF 1989

HON. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, in the aftermath of the vote taken earlier this week to deny ourselves and others an increase in salary, we find ourselves in a quagmire of confusion. We cannot restore the lost purchasing power of the Federal paycheck by voting for a raise, nor can we by not voting for a raise. Members are reported as being without ideas on what will work now.

With that in mind, I am today reintroducing a bill I sponsored in the previous Congress. The bill contains a provision which would establish what I call the "sign-in" system for congressional salaries. I mentioned this idea in my argument on the floor against the rejecting resolution 2 days ago. In fact, I have been promoting this idea for a few years now.

At first, it drew laughs and good-natured back slaps, but something interesting is happening. As other methods to raise Federal salaries, either directly or indirectly, fall apart, the "sign-in" system is attracting attention and gaining respect. I like to think that is so not just because it is innovative and flexible, but also because it is based entirely on a principle not often found in congressional salary plans—honesty.

The bill, which I have modified since it was last introduced, also contains provisions which address other troublesome areas of the overall income picture for Members and congressional staffs, which are decribed below.

THE SIGN-IN SALARY SYSTEM

The compensation system I propose would establish a range of salaries and would permit Members to "sign-in" somewhere in that range. The low end of the scale would be our current salary, and the high end would be the salary last recommended by the "Quadrennial Commission." If enacted this year, the scale would be from $89,500 to $135,000.

At the beginning of each Congress, Members would be permitted to claim a salary somewhere on the scale. New Members might be expected to start somewhere near the bottom, where they would be joined by those unwilling to try to justify a higher level to their constituents. Members who currently take less than the authorized salary would, of course, be free to continue that practice.

On the other hand, those Members with more responsibility or longer tenure would be free to make a statement of their worth to their constituents openly and honestly by signing in higher on the scale.

The sign-in system would give us the flexibility we need. For example, Members who live in high-cost areas, such as certain locations on the West Coast, the Northeast and the Midwest, could take that into account in deciding what salary to claim. Furthermore, it could accommodate such things as experience, expertise, effectiveness, and other factors which are commonly considered in salary negotiations in other lines of professional work.

Before this past month, I was not exactly expecting the people of the United States to recognize fully the requirements and responsibilities placed on a Member of Congress. After watching our voters be whipped into a frenzy by the media and those who are expert at manipulating it, our task of bringing a balanced view of what we do for the country now strikes me as an impossible one.

As far as I am concerned, there is no chance whatsoever that the public will support an across-the-board pay increase of reasonable size in the foreseeable future. The sign-in system addresses that problem. Instead of one national media-hyped "survey" in which all Americans are asked about all Members under whipped-up conditions, each Member would be judged by his or her own constituents, in the town meetings, in letters, in calls, and ultimately in the voting booth.

What I like most about the sign-in system is its honesty. The charade of going on "automatic pilot" would be behind us, as would all the other parliamentary shenanigans which have been tried. I am not sure what infuriated our constituents more, the pay raise or the attempt to avoid going on the public record. I have argued as strongly as I can for the self-respect of the House and its Members, and I have written this bill with that in mind.

In one major modification of last year's proposal, this bill provides that the senior members of the executive branch and the judges will receive the Quadrennial Commission's recommendation automatically.

This is yet another demonstration of the flexibility of the sign-in system. It does not break the link of parity with the other branches, since Members are free to claim a salary equal to our counterparts. However, it does mean that the future of the Federal Government's ability to meet the demands put upon it will not be held hostage to our inability to win support for an increase for ourselves.

TREATMENT OF HONORARIA

Something else we learned in the public furor of the past several months was the strong suspicion of conflict of interest which surrounds our rules on the retention of honoraria. I reject categorically the charge that the receipt of a fee for helping an audience better understand what goes on in Congress leads without fail to a loss of independence and objectivity on the part of the Member providing the information. There is no limit to the examples which could be cited to disprove the theory.

Nevertheless, we are well-advised to guard against even the appearance of a conflict of interest, no matter how unfairly suggested. Accordingly, the bill prohibits Members from retaining any honoraria and requires honoraria, if accepted, to be distributed to tax-exempt charitable organizations.

The bill's proposal on honoraria is consistent with the honest, straightforward compensation system that I propose. When a Member "signs in" for a certain salary, reflecting that Member's view of an appropriate level of compensation, there will be no reason for that Member to add another 30 percent of his salary through speaking, writing, and appearance fees. The ability to attract such fees is often a function of a Member's position in the Congress anyway, which can and should be taken into account when the salary level is chosen.

TAX TREATMENT OF MEMBERS' EXPENSES

The bill also repeals the current $3,000 limit on the deductibility of the living expenses incurred by members while in Washington on legislative business, putting Members in a position similar to other taxpayers engaged in a trade or business.

This provision addresses a problem which many Members have raised. Due to the differences in distance from home, family situation, and personal preferences, it has been extremely difficult over the years to devise an appropriate tax treatment for Members' expenses which is fair to all. Each approach has generated valid complaints from a number of Members.

So, in the context of a new compensation system which can take many of the variable factors into account, it seems fitting to adopt the simplest approach of all—treat Members of Congress like any other individuals engaged in a trade or business that often takes them away from home. Members of Congress are still different since our district homes must remain our homes even though we spend a large portion of our time in Washington. All Internal Revenue Service regulations on the subject would apply, and the level of deduction ultimately claimed by each Member would be that figure which each individual Member can justify to the IRS.

Like all other taxpayers, Members would only be permitted to deduct these expenses and other "miscellaneous deductions" to the extent that they exceed 2 percent of adjusted gross income.

The existing deductibility provision has appeared as a "perk" on the lists which our critics have been so avidly publishing all over the country. If they call it a "perk," I say let's eliminate it. By getting rid of these largely nonconsequential benefits one at a time, maybe we can carve the issue down to the point where we can have an intelligent and honest debate on salary levels without unnecessary distractions.

SENIOR CONGRESSIONAL SERVICE STUDY

Finally, Mr. Speaker, my bill calls for the next "Quadrennial Commission" to focus specifically on the very difficult problem of retaining senior congressional staff. The Commission would be directed to make recommendations for the establishment of a system of compensation which is fair, reflective of comparable private sector compensation, and ultimately designed to encourage our best public servants to consider making congressional service a career.

We do not need a statistical study to know that something is wrong in Congress when so few staffers decide to make congressional service their life's work. There is no more established truism in Washington than that service "on the Hill" is usually mere preparation for a more lucrative career in the private sector. Instead of spending so much time and passion on restricting their activities once we lose them, as we did last year and threaten to do again, I think we should explore why we lose them in the first place.

Extensive study and debate have gone into exploring what needs to be done to retain top civil servants in the executive branch. Comparability studies, the establishment of the Senior Executive Service, and professional development programs are all extremely worthy undertakings. However, all those studies and programs have ignored what needs to be done to retain those members of our personal and committee staffs who the Congress can least afford to lose.

My bill directs the next Commission, which will convene in 1992, to examine the issue in depth. In conjunction with its report, the Commission would be required to make recommendations for a definition of "Senior Congressional Service" status, and for a compensation and professional development program aimed at making it possible for our most valuable experts to make congressional service a career instead of a stepping stone.

When this bill is considered by the committees of jurisdiction, I would have no objection if somebody other than the Quadrennial Commission is given the opportunity of developing the SCS Program. It would be good not to have to wait 4 more years.

In the meanwhile, I have made one additional modification of last year's bill by changing the point of reference for staff salaries visa-vis Members' salaries. This bill ties staff salaries to the high end of the sign-in scale. In its previous version, the bill would have required staff salaries to stay below the low end.

I decided to make this change after listening to the recent debates about senior officials in the executive branch. For all the reasons cited in those debates, and for those recited above, I could see that we would only be hurting the legislative branch and the country by locking senior congressional staff into today's salary structure until something like the Senior Congressional Service can be created.

For those who feel it would be wrong for a member of a staff to receive more than a Member of the House or Senate, let me note that that is already happening. Since some Members currently are declining to accept pay increases enacted since their first election, there are today members of several staffs who are drawing more per month than some Representatives.

In a final change, this year's bill subjects staff to the same ban on retaining honoraria as Members.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Speaker, maybe there are better ideas for the pay system in the Congress. From what I read, Members seem anxious to break with the past ways of trying to handle this thorny issue, all of which have fallen into discredit. The sign-in system could represent a giant step toward an honest compensation system in which all Members can have pride. Including as it now does the other proposals I have added to the original idea and to last year's bill, I think it deserves serious study.

Let's be honest with the American people and with ourselves. Then, with heads held high, let us resolve to continue to provide quality representation and public service to our constituents and to the Nation.

MUNHALL FIREMEN TO MARK MILESTONE

HON. JOSEPH M. GAYDOS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 1989

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I have heard it said the roots of a meaningful life grow deepest in the soil of service. If that be so, then there are no deeper roots grown anywhere than by our Nation's volunteer firemen.

They truly "serve." At any hour of the day or night * * * in any kind of weather * * * when they are called, they answer.

Volunteer firemen regularly risk their own lives to protect the lives and property of their friends and neighbors. That dedication has earned them the admiration and respect of their communities.

In western Pennsylvania, we have thousands of individuals committed to such public service. It is my privilege today to single out a company of volunteer firemen that will be marking a milestone on Saturday, April 1.

It was 50 years ago this Spring when 14 members of Munhall Volunteer Fire Company No. 5 planted their roots in community service.

They started with the barest of equipment: a wheelbarrow, two sections of hose, a rake, a shovel and two brooms. Not even a truck. But, when they were needed, they were there. Fires were fought with muscle and manpower.

Those first 14 were William Jacko, John Smolley, Stephen Pentek, George Vogt, George Harry, Samuel Zaugg, William Henderson, Frank Bell, Samuel Smiden, Joseph Yesko, James Henderson, Fred London, George Pentek, and H. P. Douglas.

It wasn't until 1953 that company No. 5 got its first truck. A used vehicle, donated by Munhall Borough Council. Over the years, more equipment was added: an ambulance, a new truck, a pumper, a ladder truck, et cetera. The company did what it could to provide the community with the best service possible.

As No. 5's rolling stock grew so did its need for space. Originally housed in a garage, the company eventually bought a piece of ground, built a hall and periodically added on to it. Its membership grew, too. Today No. 5 has 64 members led by the following:

Executive Officers—Walt Dominski, president; Larry Oleksa, vice president; John R. Balint, treasurer, and Nick Havrilla, secretary.

Line Officers—Tim Smoley, chief; Bob Grobelski, Chris Cibula and Ron Smoley, assistant chiefs; Bob Dillinger, truck foreman; Mark Olsavicky, assistant truck foreman, and Andy Cibula, ambulance coordinator.

Mr. Speaker, if satisfaction with one's life is indeed found in the soil of community service then the members of Munhall volunteer Fire Company No. 5 should be most gratified. I wish them well as they embark on a second half-century of service.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, February 21, 1989

The House met at 12 noon.

The SPEAKER. Our prayer today will be offered by a guest chaplain, the Reverend Ralph Hubble of the Berean Baptist Church of Richmond, VA, who today is celebrating the 50th anniversary of his ordination.

The Reverend Ralph Hubble, Berean Baptist Church, Richmond, VA, offered the following prayer:

Gracious Heavenly Father, Thine is the greatness, and the power, and the glory and the majesty; for Thou art God, the Ruler of all nations.

Thou art exalted above all principalities and powers and it is Thine, O God, to make great and to give wisdom and strength unto men and women of every family, tribe, nation, race, and tongue.

Therefore, I beseech Thee to hear this petition on behalf of this Congress. These honorable men and women are compassed about with many problems that call for divine guidance.

Quicken their hearts and minds and direct their deliberations as they share in the pursuit of peace for all nations.

This I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. JAMES] will lead us in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. JAMES led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

REV. RALPH TIPTON HUBBLE

(Mr. TAUKE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great privilege that I welcome today to the House Chamber our guest chaplain, a very special man, my father-in-law, who was ordained 50 years ago today as a Baptist minister.

He was at that time a young man of 20 years of age. He was born in Virginia but had been raised in Indiana, where he attended Indianapolis Bible Institute. With his young wife, Catherine, this young minister served several churches in Indiana until he was urged by Virginia Baptists to come home back to his roots.

Mr. Speaker, he returned to Virginia, and at age 35 was the founding pastor of Berean Baptist Church in Richmond. In one word, the name of Ralph Hubble's new church summarized the core focus of his life, named "Berean" after the congregation in Acts 17 that "searched the Scriptures daily."

The church was led by a young man with an extraordinary love for the Holy Scriptures. "He is quiet, unassuming, steady, persistent, but most of all, he is faithful to his calling," says his bride of 50 years, Catherine.

Thirty-five years after the debut of that Baptist Church in Richmond, Ralph Hubble serves there as pastor. I hope that his grandson, Joseph Hubble Tauke, who is in the Gallery with my wife and Joseph's grandmother, will follow the qualities, share many of the qualities, of his grandfather, the grandfather who is with us today, Ralph Tipton Hubble, 50 years a minister of the Gospel, a man who seeks God's wisdom and guidance for a Congress which can clearly use such assistance for the crucial issues confronting this generation.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the Chair appoints the following Members to represent the House of Representatives at appropriate ceremonies for the observance of George Washington's Birthday to be held on February 22, 1989:

Mr. PATTERSON of South Carolina; and

INTRODUCTION OF THE NATIONAL COOPERATIVE RESEARCH AND PRODUCTION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1989

(Mr. EDWARDS of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, today all of us surely recognize that American firms face unprecedented challenges in the global marketplace. As one—but singularly important—step in spurring the needed technological innovations to better compete in this new economic environment, I am introducing the National Cooperative Research and Production Act Amendments of 1989. This legislation builds upon the legislation that I introduced and managed to passage in the 98th Congress and which provides favorable treatment for research and development joint ventures. Five years after the success of that measure in stimulating more and dynamic cooperative ventures at the research level, it is now clear that the same incentives must exist to encourage properly structured cooperative efforts at the production, distribution and marketing levels. Only by moving more rapidly to commercialization can America capitalize on its still-dominant edge in pure research and innovative thinking.

The economic realities behind this piece of legislation seem clear enough: First, the costs of developing many items on the new technological agenda and bringing them to the marketplace often exceed the resources of a single firm. Second, the economics of high-technology manufacturing has shifted to short product life-cycles and the need for rapid response to changing consumer demands. Third, because newly developed products may now give a technology innovator no more than 6 months to a year of exclusivity, American firms must develop and initiate marketing strategies and production scheduling with much greater dispatch than in the past. Fourth—and equally important to all the above—American-style competition can coexist with cooperative efforts to enhance innovation and be the spur to greater manufacturing success as in the past.

Must there be a contradiction between antitrust, which guarantees a healthy competitive edge and the free enterprise system, and cooperative production ventures? Absolutely not. We have seen evidence of that, most recently, in two developments. The first involved the American automobile industry, so much in need of revitalization in the 1970's and early 1980's. In 1984, GM and Toyota sought to coproduce a subcompact car, the Nova, in Freemont, CA. Here we had the world's first and third largest producers of automobiles getting together for a limited but valuable purpose. The proposal passed antitrust muster at the FTC; and the revitalization of the automobile industry in America took another step forward, with attendant employment benefits for American workers.

The second development was passage of the National Cooperative Research Act of 1984. That act reaffirmed that joint R&D was favored under the antitrust laws provided that the participants avoided certain obvious pernicious anticompetitive practices—such as price-fixing and market allocation—which, in the end, can only restrict output and product development.

The act has worked well because it has alleviated private industry's perception of antitrust hostility to properly structured cooperative efforts. Quite the contrary, such joint ventures have been, and will now always be, judged by the benign rule-of-reason test. The act also established a mechanism by which the antitrust agencies are able to preview projected plans and flag possible competition problems at the start, so that companies are not surprised later or are made to always look over their shoulders after making a tremendous financial commitment.

Finally, by making disclosures of planned joint research and development ventures a voluntary matter, there is no unwarranted Government intrusion into the private sector decisionmaking process. Should companies decide to participate, however, they will be shielded from private treble damage actions in the future. Moreover, under such a scheme, the antitrust agencies will not be converted into full-fledged regulatory bodies, which would only detract from their primary enforcement mission.

In the past few months, numerous approaches other than those developed in the 1984 act have been suggested as means by which to stimulate more production joint ventures. These suggestions have ranged across a wide spectrum of form and content, including the Government-sponsored creation of a technology company structured on the model of the creation of RCA in 1919; favorable antitrust treatment for only small business cooperative ventures; the creation of industry-specific—even, project-specific—antitrust exemptions; the development of a regulatory certification process to be administered by the Department of Justice and/or the Department of Commerce; the carving out of antitrust safe harbors for cooperative ventures based on market shares levels; the enumeration of specific factors to be considered in a rule-of-reason test by the courts, and various hybrids of some or all the above.

Without a doubt, the motivation behind all of these suggested approaches is laudatory—to prevent any further erosion of our hard-fought manufacturing leadership. But after careful reflection, I am convinced that the basic model established by the 1984 National Cooperative Research Act still provides the most balanced, less Government-intrusive means to achieve the goals we all seek.

Just as in the Joint R&D Act of 1984, I believe the answer for production joint ventures lies in generic antitrust legislation that will benefit cooperative efforts by large as well as small companies, and within our so-called moribund Rust Belt industries as well as within our high technology industries. I believe that the voluntary disclosure and notification system established in the 1984 Joint R&D Act is, at once, the least intrusive and most efficient way for American firms to receive antitrust relief from private lawsuits while not in any way permitting dangerous ancillary restraints of trade to exist under the guise of a cooperative venture. I also believe that the rule of reason standard should not be unnecessarily hampered by descriptive terms that may only freeze the development of this flexible and evolving test by the courts. Already, the test has undergone tremendous refinement in the joint venture area, with the widespread recognition of the many procompetitive justifications of such activity even in the face of structural presumptions created by market share or by moderately high levels of Herfindahl numbers used by our Federal antitrust agencies to assess concentration levels.

In this regard, I was particularly impressed by the Department of Justice's analysis of joint ventures in its recent 1988 Guidelines on International Operations and Antritrust Enforcement Policy. The paradigm elucidated in the guidelines traces a series of analytical steps, beginning with a consideration of the anticompetitive effects of the venture in the specific joint venture markets, followed by a review of the effects in the markets outside the joint venture market in which venture members are actual or potential competitors, and finally with a consideration of nonprice vertical restraints. This type of sequential analysis provides for quick yet thorough determinations about the relative balancing of procompetitive and anticompetitive factors. In any event, rule of reason analysis is continually developing and should not be constrained by spelling out some but not all the relevant factors to be considered. History has shown that these factors change over time with new developments and economic learning.

For all these reasons, I am convinced that my proposed bill provides the kind of framework to answer the need for enhanced domestic commercial responses to the challenges of the international marketplace. I intend to press forward for passage, and hope that my colleagues will join with me in supporting the National Cooperative Research and Production Amendments of 1989.

TRIBUTE TO REV. RALPH TIPTON HUBBLE

(Mr. BLILEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Speaker for today calling on one of my constituents, the Reverend Ralph Tipton Hubble, to provide the invocation.

Mr. Speaker, 50 years is a long time, a long time of dedication to his church, and for many years, at least 35 years, to the citizens of my district.

I want to salute him and commend him and wish him many more years, and to thank him for providing my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE], with a wonderful wife and, now, a grandson.

AMERICAN FLAG FIDELITY ACT

(Mr. STAGGERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, today, I am reintroducing the American Flag Fidelity Act in an effort to protect the integrity of our Nation's most venerated symbol of freedom, pride, and independence.

The American Flag Fidelity Act would prohibit the importation of foreign-made American flags. Foreign workers simply do not have enough respect for our national symbol to manufacture the Stars and Stripes. I have an example of this lack of respect in my office: An American flag, made in Taiwan, with a Harley-Davidson motorcycle superimposed upon it. Emblazoned across the motorcycle's gas tank are the words "High Times." Is this a fitting design for our Nation's most revered symbol of honor and dignity? We must not allow foreign companies that violate the U.S. flag code to produce the U.S. flag.

Furthermore, I have documented evidence that at least one foreign company urges our flag importers to purchase U.S. flags produced by factories in Taiwan, remove the "Made in Taiwan" labels, and restitch "Made in the USA" labels onto the flags. This same foreign flag company will even provide the "Made in the USA" labels. We must not allow companies who encourage the violation of U.S. customs laws to produce the U.S. flag.

Throughout American history, there has been a tradition of keeping the flag raised even while soldiers are falling around it in battle. I am asking my colleagues to help me keep the flag held high by delivering it entirely into the trustworthy hands of the American worker, and out of the reach of the exploitative foreign manufacturer.

"I pledge allegiance, to the flag, of the United States of America, and to the Republic, for which it stands * * *." We should not allow these revered words to ring hollow. Our allegiance should only be pledged to a flag made by the American worker.

WASHINGTON, DC, IS NOT DODGE CITY

(Mr. ROBERTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, enough is enough!

With gunfire echoing throughout our Nation's Capital and a crime wave engulfing Washington, again and again we hear the one liner, "D.C. isn't Dodge City."

With all due respect to the local Mayor, the rock group that did the rap song, my colleagues in the Congress, the so-called experts on the talk shows and everyone else inclined:

For those of us who call Dodge City home, you got it right. Washington, DC, sure as heck is not Dodge City, KS, America. Better that you should follow our example in Dodge.

Education, health care, public services our rodeo, museum, library, concerts, theaters—any index you want to yardstick, we have more and do it better on a per-capita basis than this outfit we call the District of Columbia. And that is certainly true in terms of public safety and law enforcement. We don't have to have Wyatt Earp at our side to walk the streets of Dodge.

So, my colleagues, in behalf of our city fathers and all of the fine citizens of a most resourceful, positive, and progressive and safe and good-place-to-raise-your-family community, Washington, DC, is not Dodge City but it sure would be a better place to live if it was.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that our problems in the Nation's Capital regarding violent crime can receive the kind of attention and discussion this complex issue demands and deserves—but let us not perjure my hometown of Dodge City in the process.

NOT ALL INDIANS ARE ALIKE

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, recently there has been a spate of articles about the Senate investigation of Navajo Chairman Peter McDonald. There have been charges of kickbacks, gifts, and other corrupt practices.

Whatever the merits or final outcome of this investigation, the image of our Indian people has suffered, and that is unfair. For every bad apple, there are hundreds of other tribal governments that operate efficiently, honestly, and without a hint of scandal.

The Indian people are proud of their heritage and insistent on preserving their sovereign rights. Therefore, it is important to keep this investigation in proper perspective.

I say this not because I represent a large number of Indian constituents, but because I know that many native Americans are afraid that many in this country and in this Congress will make a blanket conclusion that all tribal governments are corrupt. There is no question that the Bureau of Indian Affairs needs to be reformed. There is no question that the corruption on Indian land must not be tolerated. But most importantly, let us not malign or generalize all Indian programs or all tribal governments because of the recent allegations about one tribal chairman.

INTRODUCTION OF THE CAPITAL INVESTMENT ACT OF 1989

(Mr. MORRISON of Washington asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to restore the incentive for all taxpayers to invest in our Nation's economic future through the creation of special capital gains treatment for long-term investments. The Capital Investment Act of 1989 is similar to legislation I first introduced, together with my good friend from Oregon, Congressman LES AUCOIN, in the 100th Congress. I am pleased to be joined by LES AUCOIN, once again, in sponsorship of this endeavor to provide the tax incentive for investment necessary to create new jobs and enhance American competitiveness.

The Capital Investment Act of 1989 would establish a three-tiered capital gains rate differential for individuals at all income levels. Specifically, this legislation would exclude from personal income tax 40 percent of the gain on investments held for 1 year, 60 percent of the gain on investments held for 3 years, and 100 percent or all of the gain on investments held for 5 years or longer.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will provide the pool of venture capital necessary for developing new technology, creating new jobs, and enhancing our competitive position in the world's markets. Unlike our current system of taxation, which penalizes long-term investment, the Capital Investment Act of 1989 will reward Americans who invest in our Nation's economic future.

CAPITAL INVESTMENT ACT OF 1989

(Mr. AUCOIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Washington, Mr. SID MORRISON, in the introduction of the Capital Investment Act of 1989.

Two weeks ago President Bush put the capital gains issue back on the front burner for this country. I applaud his initiative, but I believe that the bill that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MORRISON] and I are introducing today will go even further in stimulating the creation of jobs in Oregon and Washington and across the entire Nation.

The difference between the President's plan and ours is simple. Under our bill, the longer an asset is held, the more favorable tax treatment it gets. Investors will thus have an even greater incentive for long-term, productive investment in America, and particularly to invest in those small startup companies that provide the vast majority of jobs in this country.

Mr. Speaker, it is ironic that our capitalistic Nation taxes capital like no other nation in the world. Japan, West Germany, and other countries do not tax capital gains at all, and they are the very countries who today are beating our socks off in international competition.

I think it is time to give American investors an incentive to invest in American companies and American jobs. I hope my colleagues will agree that it is time to restore the favorable treatment on capital gains, and join my friend, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MORRISON] and myself in supporting and cosponsoring this important legislation.

CHILD CARE DILEMMA

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, we are poised to take up the issue of child care. But the question is not whether we should have a child care program, but what kind of program we will have.

Child care is an important issue because working parents are the norm. But the concern of this Congress for the massive budget deficit must also be considered.

Proponents of a child care program take three approaches. ABC backers suggest grants to the States. Others suggest tax credits. Chairman HAWKINS would expand Head Start and school-based care.

Each of these solutions has unique advantages. But, Mr. Speaker, they all share one glaring fault. None of them includes a financing mechanism. Each would add appreciably to the Federal deficit.

It is unconscionable for Congress to continue to make multibillion-dollar promises to the American people when we can't even keep the promises we've already made. It is time to tell people, honestly, that there is no free lunch, and if Government solutions are desired, they must be paid for.

THE RIGHTS OF THE DISABLED

(Mr. COELHO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, last Monday was a day of victory and celebration for 36 million Americans. Just like Rosa Parks declaring she had a right to ride at the front of the bus, last Monday disabled Americans were finally given their rights to board the bus. Last Monday the U.S. Court of Appeals said, once and for all, it was time to stop discriminating against the disabled and let them ride the bus like anyone else.

This is an important step forward for the 36 million disabled Americans, many of whom have been systematically denied access to transportation, education, employment, and public services simply because they are disabled. The court's ruling says, flat out, this kind of discrimination must stop; that disabled Americans, like all Americans, have the same rights to public transportation.

The third circuit ruling makes me believe that a "new breeze" truly is blowing in America—one I hope the Bush administration will fan into winds of change for the disabled across our country.

APARTHEID

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, last night my colleagues, Messrs. SHUMWAY, MCEWEN, and BURTON and I returned from a seven-nation tour of the frontline states and South Africa. I have to say everyone in this House certainly abhors apartheid and we found from this tour throughout Africa that the nations in that region, of course, abhor apartheid.

But we also found a very clear message which we need to hear as we address the problems that exist in South Africa. That is, the frontline states, the nations of Zimbabwe, Malawi, Zaire, Angola, Namibia, and other nations throughout that continent would be devastated if this Congress were to impose sanctions on South Africa.

We desperately want to bring the problem of apartheid to an end, but further sanctions are not the solution, Mr. Speaker.

PATRICK PURDY'S HEINOUS CRIME

(Mr. DINGELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, like all other Americans, I was distressed by the Time magazine cover story describing Patrick Purdy's heinous murder of five schoolchildren in Stockton, CA. There is, however, one fact that this body and the people of this country should have in mind. Mr. Purdy was not an ordinary citizen. He had an extensive, and serious, and unpunished criminal record.

In 1980, he was arrested for soliciting sex from a police officer.

In 1982, he was arrested on drug possession charges.

□ 1220

In 1983, Mr. Purdy was arrested on a dangerous weapon charge, convicted of a misdemeanor and put on probation.

In 1983, again he was arrested and charged with receipt of stolen property. The charge was dismissed.

In 1984, he finally served some time. He was arrested and charged with two serious felonies, attempted robbery and criminal conspiracy. He served a grand total of 30 days for these crimes because, though he had already been arrested four times, he was offered a plea bargain and was convicted merely of the misdemeanor offense of being an accessory to a felony.

He was not apparently rehabilitated during that 30-day imprisonment. He was arrested again in 1987, this time for firing a pistol in the Eldorado National Forest and for resisting arrest. While he was in custody he attempted to commit suicide by cutting his wrists with his toenails and fingernails, that is after failing to hang himself.

At this point the criminal justice system meted out what was to be its strongest accomplishment: 45 days in jail followed by probation.

Mr. Speaker, we have here a litany of failure of law enforcement, a criminal, a man of known and established violence, a threat to himself and a threat to society, and one described in a probationary report as a danger to himself and to others. He served very little time. He committed no felonies which would bar him from ownership of firearms, not because he was not guilty of those events, but because the criminal justice system was not properly applied to convict him of the kind of crimes of which he was, in fact, guilty. The harsh fact of the matter is that we confront now a situation where we are charged with the need for gun control. What we believe to be the more correct result of careful analysis is that the jailing and proper punishment of serious criminal activity would go a long way to assure the safety of citizens in their homes.

I would urge that we should address this part of the problem rather than stripping American citizens of a cherished constitutional right. The right to own and bear firearms for legitimate supporting of defense purposes.

Mr. Speaker, Time magazine recently ran a cover story describing Patrick Purdy's heinous murder of five schoolchildren in Stockton, CA. While Time's piece included a great deal of editorializing, there was one fact requiring special attention.

Time reported a remark by a sociologist at the University of Texas on the sorry state of criminal justice in this country: "People have lost confidence in the ability of local government to control crime."

Mr. Speaker, if the Purdy attack proves anything, it proves that the people have been right to lose that confidence. In the wake of emotional outcrys to ban semiautomatic rifles, shotguns, and pistols, some of which can be heard in this Chamber, it is useful to keep in perspective that Mr. Purdy is not your ordinary law-abiding citizen.

It is instructive to look at the record of the man who pulled the trigger on those schoolchildren:

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to insert for the RECORD the remainder of my remarks containing the full details of how Patrick Purdy was allowed to commit his horrible crime.

In 1980, Purdy was arrested for soliciting sex from a police officer.

In 1982, Purdy was arrested on drug possession charges.

In 1983, Purdy was arrested on a dangerous weapon charge, convicted of a misdemeanor, and put on probation.

Again, in 1983, Purdy was arrested and charged with receipt of stolen property. The charge was dismissed for lack of evidence.

In 1984, Purdy finally served some time. He was arrested and charged with two serious felonies—attempted robbery and criminal conspiracy. He served a grand total of 30 days for those crimes because even though he had already been arrested four times, he was offered a plea bargain and was convicted merely of the misdemeanor offense of being an accessory to a felony.

Apparently, Purdy was not rehabilitated during that 30-day imprisonmement. He was arrested again in 1987—this time for firing a pistol in the El Dorado National Forest and for resisting arrest. While he was in custody, Purdy attempted to commit suicide by cutting his wrists with his toenails and fingernails—that is, after failing to hang himself. At this point, the criminal justice system meted out what was to be its strongest punishment: 45 days in jail followed by probation.

Mr. Speaker, the most shocking fact in this litany of failure is that Patrick Purdy was given probation despite the fact that the probation report itself described him as a danger to himself and others.

When reviewing this incredible record, some of my colleagues ask: What can be done to prevent such a man from obtaining a gun? This is really the wrong question. Last year, during the debate on the Brady amendment, this body was deluged with reports as to how well the waiting periods in California works to deter criminals from purchasing handguns. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that Purdy complied with the waiting period some five times, one of the last times being when he bought the pistol he used to kill himself after his horrible crime. Once again, gun control measures already in place failed to prevent a criminal from getting his hands on a gun, even one who was foolish enough to circumvent the black market to comply with the law.

Like John Hinckley before him, Patrick Purdy was legally entitled to purchase a firearm under the longest waiting period and background check in the Nation—not because firearms laws are too lax, but because of lax law enforcement. He had no felony record. Unlike Hinckley, Purdy would have been in jail long before his last crime had our criminal justice system worked as advertised.

Mr. Speaker, the right question to ask in light of that crime in Stockton is: Why has our criminal justice system so failed America that a known, violent criminal like Patrick Purdy can be left free to roam in the streets? Until we get an answer to that question, law-abiding citizens must insist that the law be enforced. That crime be vigorously punished. That criminals be jailed and removed from the streets where they threaten the safety of the citizenry. Only after this has been done is an attempt justified to strip citizens of a cherished and essential constitutional right, one set forth in the second amendment—the right to own and bear arms.

NO REPEAT PERFORMANCES

(Mr. MILLER of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, an interesting—if not frightening—item caught my eye recently that led to visions of gasoline line nightmares and overseas dependence on oil supplies.

The American Petroleum Institute has issued a report indicating that for the third year in a row—in 1988—U.S. oil production dropped. The drop last year left domestic production matching its lowest level in 24 years.

If this trend continues, with this Nation fiddling around while domestic oil production continues to slide downward, then our OPEC friends will—once again—literally have this Nation over the oil barrel. Was it not only yesterday that the agony of oil dependency from the Middle East had this Nation calling for energy independence? Didn't Congress vow—following the gasoline shortages of the seventies—to sharpen its efforts and avoid the conditions that lead to energy disaster?

The gist of this report is both a cause for concern and a warning: We need to carefully examine the importance of becoming self-sufficient. We need to take a long, hard, realistic look at U.S. oil production and avoid being held hostage—once more—to OPEC demands and mandates. I am convinced that this Nation can sustain a strong domestic energy industry without jeopardizing environmental goals. If the predictions of this particular report bear out, we will have little choice: Either place our priorities on energy independence now or we will surely pay more later.

A SAD INVITATION TO EVERY TWO-BIT LUNATIC TO CENSOR WHAT GETS PUBLISHED IN AMERICA

(Mr. ACKERMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, since the birth of our Nation, tens of thousands of Americans have given their very lives to protect our right to freedom of speech and freedom of the press.

Our European cousins had their homes bombed and their cities leveled rather than yield to those who would deny them their democratic institutions.

It is Voltaire who is credited with the statement that is the sum and substance of our Nation—words that have often been quoted on this floor: "I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it."

And now, in a betrayal of our constitutional underpinnings, those who make their great living from the right to publish—some of America's major book distributors—have become accomplices to censorship by threat of terror, and have quietly turned their backs on the Bill of Rights. The rattle of sabers has silenced their pens.

What a sad invitation to every two-bit lunatic with access to a phone to censor what gets published in America.

The industry with the most at stake has made losers of us all by not putting their mouth where their money is.

This body must not be a passive party to the burning of books. We must find a suitable response—not because we've read or approve of the book, which is obviously an insult to one of the world's great religions, but because we are supportive of freedom.

We're not proud of their words, but every racist, every demented dictator, every lunatic theoretician has his work on display in this heretofor uncensored America for independent judgment, whether praise or scorn. Till now, we've been proud of, and able to support that process.

But now, one humiliated individual, seeing his power and influence dwindling, desperately in need of an enemy from without—has found one: the civilized world.

It has been a bad week for courage. Everywhere, free men have submitted to the forces of stupidity and darkness. Salman Rushdie has been abandoned to the assassins. As soon as Khomeini issued his death sentence, writers, editors, publishers and booksellers everywhere should have banded together and said to this demented old man:

"I am Rushdie." They should have stacked the bookshop windows with copies of "The Satanic Verses." They should have demanded from their governments the basic protections purchased by taxes and guaranteed to constitutions. They should have shouted two words to Khomeini and his God-sick followers; the second of those words is "you."

Instead, in too many cases, they ran. The book was pulled from the major American chain stores. W.H. Smith's 480 stores in England hid it in the basement. France, Greece, Turkey and West Germany announced the suspension of publication. Canada stopped new copies from crossing the border. Italy stood up, as did Holland, Finland and Norway; they deserve praise. The rest collapsed.

The reason for this submission to Khomeini was simple: runny, belly-quivering fear. The publishers and booksellers simply didn't believe that their governments could protect them and their employees from the fanatics. They believed more in the power of terror than the power of law. This loss of faith was accompanied by a lot of pussyfooting language about not intending to offend Moslems. But that only obscured the issue. The issue is not religion; it's freedom. And freedom must be exercised in the face of risk or it dies.

In this case, silence is collaboration. Writers are now speaking out. But where are the voices of the Arab intellectuals? Where is Edward M. Said, who has argued so persuasively in so many books against Western stereotypes of Islam? We have seen some Moslem leaders on TV, humorless, devoid of irony, mouthing the conventional (and ferocious) pietie. But the silence of Said and other modern, secular Arabs is morally outrageous.

The fact is that good writing usually offends someone. It was said by the Russian poet Osip Mandelstam that nobody took poetry more seriously than Stalin; he killed people for writing it. But our truest inheritance is the freedom to speak, write and publish without being killed or imprisoned. That freedom was paid for with the blood of brave men.

Yes, we have our home-grown mullahs, intolerant leftists, right-wing zealots, Bible-thumping true believers who launch periodic assaults on freedom of the mind. Like Khomeini's Shiite followers, they, too, believe they have an absolute monopoly on the truth. Agree with me, they say, or die. We have gone through know-nothing cycles when the thought police have purged our libraries, burned books and records, jammed the cement heel of the state upon the necks of free thinkers. No religion and no country is completely free of stupidity.

But it is our pride to openly fight these crackpots, insisting on the liberal virtues of tolerance, openness, pluralism. The citizen, not the state, will choose to read or not read a book, see or not see a play or movie. You don't like "The Satanic Verses?" Fine: Don't read it. But I must fight you to the death if you try to prevent me or anybody else in this country from choosing otherwise. The death sentence issued by Khomeini against Rushdie—and the contagion of cowardice that followed—is now depriving milions of people of the freedom to make such a choice.

Today we celebrate George Washington's birthday and must again honor the collective genius of the revolutionary framers of the Constitution. They absolutely separated church from state. Human beings here can embrace any religion—or no religion at all. The Founding Fathers somehow knew that when religion is welded to the state, the result is crazy old men like Khomeini and corpses rotting in the noonday sun.

But I can't believe he will prevail. You are Rushdie. I am Rushdie. In the end, our pens will be mightier than his——swords.

[From the New York Post, Feb. 21, 1989]

(Pete Hamill)

The B. Dalton book store at Sixth Avenue and 8th Street is one of the best in the city. It has a splendid collection of literature; it stocks poetry; its clerks generally know what you're talking about when you ask about a book.

But the store has been subjected to the decision of the chain's management to ban Salman Rushdie's novel, "The Satanic Verses." And when I visited yesterday there was an eerie mood in the store that I don't think was the product of my imagination. The mood was one of shame. The argument for banning Rushdie's book is that rational men can't prevent an assault by the irrational. Enraged Moslems (we are told) might come at the bookstores with bomb or torch. They might wait in ambush for the clerks. All of that is possible, if no means are taken to protect the stores. But so far as I know, those means haven't been taken.

But the trip to B. Dalton's yesterday once more proved that, at our best, we are a country where there is room for works that some might consider unacceptable. Among other books, I found various volumes by Ezra Pound, whose sick anti-Semitism and collaboration with Italian fascism continue to fill many people with loathing. I found "Journey to the End of Night," by Louis Ferdinand Celine, another manic anti-Semite and an absolute collaborator with the Nazis during the Second World War. And I found a number of copies, in hardcover and paperback, of "Mein Kampf," by Adolf Hitler.

In the same store yesterday, there were books by Voltaire, who was virtually a permanent resident of the Index in Rome; by D.H. Lawrence, whose works were so persecuted during and after his lifetime; by Thomas Paine, who was pursued with ferocity by Tories here and abroad. Karl Marx was there, and Frederich Engels. You could find "The Last Temptation of Christ," by Nikos Kazantzakis, so recently the cause of much Christian fury. You could find Thomas Mann, who was sentenced to death by Hitler. You could buy copies of "The Story of O" by Pauline Reage and works by the Marquis de Sade.

You could not find anything by Salman Rushdie.

This is not to say that any of the above writers, or their books, should be banned from the shelves. Their very presence is a triumph of freedom. Every citizen should have the right to read Hitler, to examine the course of his corrupt argument, to draw whatever parallels might apply to our own day. The moment a board of censors appears in our midst, we have begun the process of intellectual mutilation. In democracies, the worst wounds are self-inflected.

Slowly, the voices of lucidity and freedom are gathering their forces to fight the assault launched by Khomeini. There is a wider understanding that to surrender to his threats is to make an intellectual Munich. If you give in on this one, if you banish Rushdie's book, if you allow Rushdie to fall to the assassins, if you look the other way and tend your private gardens, you will not appease Khomeini. He will sneer at your weakness. He will use your weakness as evidence of the decadence of the West. And you will reach for more.

"To create today is to create dangerously," Albert Camus wrote many years ago. "Any publication is an act, and the act exposes one to the passions of an age that forgives nothing."

We have forgiven more than Camus ever could imagine. But the only unforgiveable act is that of cowardice. Tomorrow at noon, such writers as E.L. Doctorow, Normal Mailer, Gay Talese, Robert Stone, Joan Didion, Larry McMurtry and John Gregory Dunne (among others) will read Rushdie's work at a public meeting of PEN at 584 Broadway. Their courage must be applauded. The next act must be the decision of the bookstore chains to bring Salman Rushdie back to the shelves.

Note: In yesterday's column I questioned the silence of Edward W. Said on this issue. In fact, he and five other writers and scholars from the Islamic world published a three-paragraph protest, buried in the letters column of last Friday's Times. I missed it. I apologize.

BOOKSELLERS IN CHAINS

(By William Safire)

WASHINGTON.—Couple of years ago, the publisher of a novel of mine had a good idea to promote sales. She took me up to Stamford, Conn., to meet the most powerful man in American letters today: Harry Hoffman, boss of Waldenbooks, the chain of 1,200 bookstores that has brought modern merchandising techniques to the archaic book business.

This was one impressive and likable guy. Harry listened carefully to our pitch, made some shrewd suggestions about publicity and arranged for me to speak to a gathering of his store managers, which would create some point-of-sale enthusiasm just before publication date.

I had seen the future of book-selling and it worked. No more of this hokey-pokey distribution through jobbers and slow mails to mom-and-pop bookstores, which usually reorder too late to meet demand. At last the marketing of books had entered the modern era, with computerized inventories and co-op advertising and sexy display "dumps."

Such efficient marketing would not only boost the sales of my book, I reasoned, but would create a bigger pie for the whole range of literature in the U.S. Only one person in four who now shops at Waldenbooks buys a book (the three others are waiting for a spouse to try on shoes or whatnot elsewhere in the shopping mall), and if Mr. Hoffman and his chain-store competitors could raise that rate to one in two, all book sales in America would soar.

But I forgot one thing: The ability to distribute books on a vast basis includes control of the decision not to distribute. A system that centralizes creates the power to suppress.

Last week the Ayatollah Khomeini decided that a book written by a British subject, Salman Rushdie, was "satanic" as advertised, and ordered the murder of the author. The Government of Iran put a price on his head. Moslem-influenced nations, which apparently include Brian Mulroney's Canada, stopped the sale of the book. Britain objected to this censorship-by-terrorism, but Mrs. Thatcher had thrown away her moral standing with her recent suppression of a spy book.

It can't happen here, Americans thought. We regularly denounce books, plays and films that offend religious sensibilities, often with great self-righteous fervor, but suppression is not an option. The day of Savonarola's bonfire of the vanities in Renaissance Florence is four centuries past; the astronomer Galileo's abject recantation of reality before the Inquisition is remembered with shame; and our prudish barrier to James Joyce's "Ulysses" in this century is lumped in with that repressive past.

Then it happened here and now, led by—of all people—my erstwhile hero, Harry Hoffman. Panicked at the possibility of terrorism at a bookstore, Waldenbooks announced its refusal to sell "The Satanic Verses." Its competing chains, B. Dalton and Barnes & Noble, cravenly followed suit.

At a stroke, one-third of the bookstores in the United States went into the selective book-suppression business. Leaders of the nation's chain gangs said in effect: "Sorry, First Amendment, and sorry, potential buyers of controversial literature, but our first responsibility is the safety of our employees. This book has been declared dangerous; if you want it, try some independent owner who will take his own chances."

Their position is not crazy. I went into a regional chain not participating in the suppression this weekend to buy the Rushdie book (which was sold out) and the young woman at the counter grumbled, "Our boss doesn't care what happens to us."

That sales clerk, whose fear a silent President Bush did nothing to assuage, belongs at some other checkout counter. The book business, like the entire industry of the mind, has responsibilities and protections that go beyond the selling of oat bran and face cream. Even for ever-merging Big Publishing, below the bottom line is another line marked "freedom."

What can book buyers and authors do to prevent these cave-ins to terrorist (or pressure group, or government) threats, short of organizing a consumer boycott of K Mart, corporate parent of Waldenbooks?

Patronize your local independent bookseller. It's like supporting your local sheriff; it may cost a little more than relying on the F.B.I., but you get protection in your own neighborhood.

In unity there may be distributive strength, but only in diversity can we find intellectual safety. To resist conformity, do all the browsing you like at the chain bookstores in the malls, but become a regular customer at your independent bookseller.

[From USA Today, Feb. 21, 1989]

DON'T GIVE IN TO CALLS TO SUPRESS BOOKS

If you want a copy of Salman Rushdie's controversial new novel, The Satanic Verses, don't bother looking in a chain bookstore in you local mall.

Waldenbooks pulled the books off its shelves. So did B. Dalton. And Barnes and Noble.

The nation's three leading booksellers—controlling a third of the USA's bookstores—are giving the Ayatollah Khomenini a veto over what they sell and what you read.

Their reason: fear.

Last week, the ayatollah declared The Satanic Verses blasphemous to Islam and offered a reward for the death of Rushdie and his publishers at Viking Press. Fundamentalist threats against booksellers followed.

Some reacted with courage.

Viking announced it would print a second edition. Many independent booksellers kept the book on their shelves. A few prominent authors are speaking up.

Others, like the chain booksellers, gave in to the threats. Canada banned importation of the book. German, French, Greek and Turkish publishers decided not to publish it.

Their fear is understandable. Employees could be in danger. But banning books is a greater threat.

Freedom of speech, even if it happens to offend someone, must be inviolate. No one—least of all Iran's leading fanatic—can be allowed to dicate what we say or read.

That freedom applies to an everyday citizen who calls the local mayor a crook. It applies to movie makers like Martin Scorsese, who offended many Christans last year with his controversial film, The Last Temptation of Christ.

And it applies to Salman Rushdie.

Contrary to the claims of the writer across the page, the issue is not whether Rushdie's book is offensive to Islam. Most agree that it is.

The issue is whether Rushdie has a right to state his views without threat of censorship and death. He does.

Those who don't like it are free to criticize those views. They are free to protest against them. But they are not free to prevent Rushdie from saying or writing what he thinks.

The ayatollah cannot be allowed to dictate the reading list for this nation—or the world.

Booksellers must recognize they have a special responsibility to protect free speech. They must put Rushdie's book back on the shelf. If they don't, book buyers should take their business to sellers who will.

Moderate Islamic leaders must seize this opportunity to separate themselves from fanatics like Khomeini. They can prove to a largely ignorant Western world that Islam is a richly diverse and benevolent religion that shares many values with Christianity and Judaism—including a willingness to tolerate differing points of view.

Publishers, authors and journalists must stand up against this terrorist censorship.

And the USA must vigorously condemn the ayatollah's serious threats against British and U.S. citizens, as a dozen European nations did Monday.

This nation wrote the book on freedom of speech. Khomenini's fears and threats are no reason to ban that book.

FREE SPEECH AND THE AYATOLLAH

(Mr. LANTOS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the response of some Americans to the recent appalling announcement from the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini—that Teheran is offering a multimillion-dollar reward for the murder of author Salman Rushdie—raises very serious questions about our willingness to defend free speech.

Two spineless American book store chains with nationwide outlets, announced that copies of the book have been removed from their shelves out of fear of Iranian reprisals. With a few more brave responses like that, the Ayatollah will have succeeded without taking another step. In the future, the literary critic from Teheran will simply announce he does not like a book and the free world will quaver and stop publication and sales.

Free speech is the backbone of democracy, the most fundamental of our freedoms. It requires sacrifice and effort on our part to defend that freedom.

The European Community's decision to withdraw diplomatic representatives in Teheran in response to this outrage is a step in the right direction. But we must go much further. The time has come for an international boycott of Iran Air—the chosen mode of transport to carry the Ayatollah's hit men to the capitals of Europe and Asia.

The hundreds of American families whose loved ones were killed in the terrorist attack on Pan Am flight 103—and indeed all the American people—call on the President immediately to initiate an international boycott with our European friends and Japan to isolate the assassins from Teheran.

SEATTLE'S FORGOTTEN PIONEERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MCDERMOTT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to join with others in this body today in commemorating Black History Month. For too long, too few Americans have known the full story of the black American contribution to the development and growth of our Nation. The story of black people in America has been one of struggle, hardship, heroism, tragedy, and—often despite greater obstacles—enormous influence in American life. The chance to participate in this special order, sponsored by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] and the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] is therefore especially welcome.

Mr. Speaker, I represent most of the city of Seattle in the Congress. About one Seattle resident in eight is an African American. Our community, like the rest of the Nation, has benefited greatly from the contributions of black Americans throughout its history. For example, few people realize that the first party of settlers in Washington Territory, who traveled north from the Columbia River to the shores of Puget Sound in 1845, included a black American with the interesting name of George Washington Bush. Is name is now preserved in the geography of the South Puget Sound area: Bush Prairie and Bush Mountain.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on at length about the black experience in Seattle and the State of Washington, but I could not do a better job than the writers Esther Hall Mumford and Eileen Flint did in Pacific magazine 2 years ago in an article entitled "Seattle's Black Victorians: The Legacy of Our Forgotten Pioneers," I include the text of this informative article following my remarks.

[From the Pacific Magazine, Jan. 18, 1987]

SEATTLE'S BLACK VICTORIANS: THE LEGACY OF OUR FORGOTTEN PIONEERS

(By Esther Hall Mumford and Eileen Flint)

In the 1850s, as a muggy July heat closed in on pioneer Seattle, Manuel Lopes, the city's first black resident, led a string of villagers in the Independence Day parade. They marched through dried mud, past shacks and around stumps to the beat of Lopes' snare drum. Usually a quiet sober man, Lopes felt a fervent patriotism for the country that refused him the right to vote.

Following the parade, Lopes solemnly returned to his restaurant kitchen tucked in the back of his small, frame house on Commercial Street (now First Avenue South). There, he carefully prepared lunch. At serving time, he picked up his drum again. A couple of beats brought hungry loggers, miners, mill hands and sailors, whose credit was always good.

Tomorrow this country salutes one of its greatest black Americans, Martin Luther King Jr. It's a good time to recall Seattle's black history, especially its early history. This look back reveals a gallery of black Victorians and their descendants, who like Manuel Lopes, lived and thrived and struggled for rights in early Seattle.

Because most of our history books are full of Dennys and Yeslers and Mercer Girls it's easy to forget that black pioneers also helped settle this wild territory. Between 1853 and the end of World War II they bought land, established churches, published newspapers, operated businesses, practiced law and medicine. Nothing came easy for anyone in those days; discrimination was an extra hurdle for Seattle's blacks.

There was plenty of land for sale, although jobs were scarce. Unlike Oregon, and other parts of the country where laws prohibited blacks from buying land and even settling, industrious blacks were able to move here and become land owners.

Take Lopes. He came to Seattle as a childless widower, and in time he shared his small house with boarders. He not only ran the restaurant, but was the city's first barber and owned the first barber chair brought round the horn. He was born in Africa and probably had been kidnapped and enslaved. Eventually he found his way to New Bedford, Mass., then to Seattle by ship. He lived here till his death in 1895. Lopes was the only black listed in the Federal Census of Seattle in 1860.

Another early entrepreneur was William Gross. In 1860, Gross migrated from Victoria, B.C., and settled in Seattle with his family. Townspeople referred to him as "Big Bill the cook" in deference to his size and trade. At 6-foot-4 and 300 pounds, Gross used his savings to open a lunch counter in Rube Low's saloon across the street from the house of pioneer Henry Yesler, at First and James. In 1876, Gross rented space on Mill (Yesler) Street for a restaurant he called "Our House," where he also rented beds for a quarter.

Gross' generosity was legendary. He'd serve up a plate of pork sausages, flapjacks and coffee to out-of-work loggers, knowing he'd get paid later.

Still, Gross was thrifty and ambitious. In 1870 he used his earnings to buy the lot at Sixth and James where he later built four small rental houses. Twelve years later Gross paid his former neighbor Henry Yesler $1,000 in gold coin for a 12-acre tract in East Madison. Given his extensive land holdings, Gross had to pay more taxes on his property than another land owner in the third ward. The ward encompassed the area from Broadway to Lake Washington and Madison to Yesler.

After the fire of 1889 leveled the city's downtown, including Gross' newest property at the foot of Yesler, Gross moved his family to the East-Madison tract. In her memoirs, his daughter Lizzie Gross-Oxendine writes, "Madison was the only street that was graded. There was nothing but roads and trails through fallen trees, stumps and underbrush; no street lights. When we went to church we carried our lanterns."

Very few blacks or whites lived in the area through the 1980s. But shortly after the Grosses settled in, other blacks moved to the area and it was referred to as a colored colony and sometimes less charitably as "Coon Hollow."

Though Gross paid gold for his land, low-paying jobs or downright unemployment kept land ownership out of reach for most blacks in early Seattle. Some blacks formed associations to pool resources. The first local tract purchased this way was on Beacon Hill, bought in 1869 and called the Riley Addition. It was named after George Riley, who organized and led the Workingman's Joint Stock Association. The group bought the Beacon Hill land as an investment.

The land covered 12 blocks bounded today by South Forest Street and South Lander between 19th Avenue South and 21st Avenue South. The group also bought land in Tacoma and on Whidbey Island. Riley's grandson, George Wright said of the association: "They were just working people. You know what employment was, and they just naturally couldn't keep up the taxes and assessment on it, so little by little they lost it. In 1911 George Wright built a 6-room house on part of Riley's holdings on the 2700 block of 21st Avenue South. It still stands today.

After the turn of the century it became more difficult for blacks to buy land beyond East Madison or the "Hollow." Still, blacks eventually owned land in every part of the city.

Seattle has a reputation for racial tolerance. But with the exception of land purchase, its history shows that discriminatory practices did not differ much from the rest of the country.

Each step to become a part of the mainstream, whether seeking a job or ordering a sandwich, was tarnished by racism. Inequities had to be challenged again and again through discrimination suits. Under Washington state law, a restaurant could be fined $50 to $300 for refusing to serve a black. But it was not unusual for the judgment to be as low as $1.

"It's the principle, not the damage that we are after," said John E. Hawkins, a black attorney who passed the Washington State Bar in 1895.

In the forefront fighting for those principles was Horace Cayton. Beginning in 1894, the black newspaperman reported case after case of discrimination in his newspaper, The Seattle Republican.

And he wasn't all talk. Cayton often filed his own discrimination suits and with his fiery voice articulated the problems, often frightening his more cautious neighbors who preferred a lower profile.

Cayton's courage and inability to tolerate injustice quietly made him one of the strongest voices in the early black community.

While black men were shut out of all-white unions, employment for black women simply did not exist outside the home where they took in laundry and boarders during the early years of settlement. Women who aspired to professions faced racial barriers.

As a young woman in the 1930s, Elizabeth Dean-Wells entered the University of Washington School of Nursing. Before her death in the late 1970s, Wells described her nursing-school experiences this way: "There were only two black nursing students . . . I tried to get into hospital here in Seattle . . . at Harborview, but discrimination was at its height, and we were not at all successful."

Wells eventually droped out of school and worked as a maid in a department store restroom. But her ambitions didn't die. Later Wells enrolled in business courses and eventually headed the Central Area Federal Credit Union.

Another black nursing student, Mildred Ardis-McIver, had a similar experience. "They (U of W) told me that they couldn't accept me as a black student, because that was completely unthinkable, the patient would not accept a black student." Neither woman ever became a nurse.

One place blacks could escape dictation and regulation was the church. The church was their own. Seattle's oldest, the First African Methodist Episcopal (AME) still stands at 14th Avenue between Pike and Pine and last year celebrated its 100th anniversary.

The church was the center for recreation as well as religion. Recalls Muriel Pollard of Seattle, "There were three leading churches; Mount Zion Baptist, First AME and Grace Presbyterian. At the Sunday-school Picnic all the churches would join; it was at Woodland Park." As the entire congregation made the trek to the Phinney Street cable line, "We'd get on the street car with all these baskets," Pollard recalls, "Everybody was carrying something."

The church also kept blacks informed. Visiting dignitaries brought news of the condition of blacks in the South. The church was also a meeting place to discuss issues closer to home. The Afro-American Council was formed here in 1900. Protest meetings were held there. The Puget Sound Conference of the AME was organized in 1891 and included churches from all over the Northwest.

"The church is the nucleus of our community," Sara Oliver Jackson said in 1975. "We learned about the Bible. The church has always kept up with black history. We had Frederick Douglas Week and pageants that portrayed our people."

The lauding of persons and accomplishments is a good exercise. When Black History Month is observed starting Feb. 1, let's remember the beat of Manuel Lopes' drum as he led the way down those muddy streets of early Seattle.

IS FDIC TOO OVERWORKED TO HANDLE ADDITIONAL RESPONSIBILITIES?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STAGGERS). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, under the Bush administration plan to resolve the savings and loan crisis, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation [FDIC] is given an extraordinary amount of additional new responsibilities. The FDIC already insures $1.68 trillion in 8,400 banks and I am concerned that it is too overextended to take on new work.

The FDIC would be given the responsibility to create and manage the Resolution Trust Corporation [RTC]. The RTC would be responsible for the resolution of all insolvent thrift institutions formerly insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation [FSLIC] and all thrifts which become insolvent in the next 3 years. The RTC would contract with the FDIC and others to manage the insolvent institutions.

The FDIC has already entered into an agreement with FSLIC to manage a number of savings and loans that are currently under the management of FSLIC.

If this was not enough work for the FDIC, the FDIC would also be authorized to review all applications for Federal savings and loan charters; to terminate insurance for insured savings and loans; and to request that other savings and loan regulatory authorities take enforcement action. On top of that, the FDIC would issue regulations governing the powers of savings and loans and their growth.

I am concerned that not only is this a large task for any one agency to undertake, but that the FDIC's current level of supervision over the banks that it insures is inadequate.

The FDIC has been increasingly relying upon examinations conducted by the insured bank's Federal and State chartering agencies and on reports submitted to the FDIC by the insured banks themselves.

As of May 1988, banks rated 1 or 2 on the five-point CAMEL safety and soundness rating scale—with 1 being the highest rating—were being examined an average of once every 34 months. This is well behind the FDIC's policy goal of examining these institutions every 24 months. Marginal banks rated 3 on the CAMEL scale were being examined every 23 months, and problem banks rated 4 and 5 were being examined only every 19 months on average. The FDIC goal for examining these institutions was every 12 months. Like the examinations of good rated institutions, the FDIC is well behind meeting its examination schedule.

In Texas, the State which has the highest number of troubled financial institutions, the FDIC last year conducted its own examinations in only 256 of the 1,535 banks that it insures in the State, an average of only one bank in six. Another 78 Texas banks were subjected to visitations, which are a form of abbreviated examinations. All of the FDIC examinations were performed in State banks that are not members of the Federal Reserve System. For national banks and banks that are members of the Federal Reserve System, the FDIC relies entirely on examinations conducted by the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Reserve. For the 617 other banks in Texas at the end of 1988, only 225 of those banks had a FDIC safety and soundness examination in 1988. In fact, 224 of these institutions have had no safety and soundness exam in 2 years and 205 banks had not been examined by the FDIC since at least 1985.

Records of the Federal Reserve and the Comptroller of the Currency, indicate that they, too, do not examine every bank every year. In total, over 5,600 federally insured banks were not examined by Federal examiners last year. Those 5,600 banks represent 40 percent of the banks in the United States.

All of these banks are insured by the FDIC. With over 200 bank failures last year, the largest number since the Great Depression, we should be stepping up the number and frequency of bank safety and soundness examinations. Instead, the Bush plan will saddle the insurer of the deposits in these banks with significant new responsibilities, for not only the 220 insolvent savings and loans, but over the almost 3,000 other solvent savings and loans in this Nation.

Furthermore, the Treasury Department has indicated that other than transferring personnel from FSLIC to the FDIC, there will be no increase in the number of examiners or personnel employed by the FDIC. In other words, the agency will have to do more work with the same number of people.

I want to see the savings and loan crisis cleared up. We must resolve, and we must resolve quickly, the insolvent savings and loans who are a burden on both the taxpayer and the thousands of healthy savings and loans.

Last year, the FDIC lost money because the costs of closing more than 200 banks exceeded the deposit insurance premiums that it took in. The FDIC already has its hands full with the problems it faces now. It needs to concentrate on the problems it currently faces, not spread itself thin by dealing with the problems of insolvent savings and loan.

As chairman of the Financial Institutions Subcommittee, I will be appointing a task force of the subcommittee to examine the adequacy of FDIC supervision over insured banks. This task force will move quickly to report back to the subcommittee in time for its recommendations to be considered as the subcommittee works on resolving the savings and loan crisis.

We need to find out just how good a job FDIC is doing with its current responsibilities before we give it more responsibilities. The task force will give the subcommittee what it needs to determine whether the FDIC can handle its own work, let alone other agencies' work.

RULE 5. PRECEDENCE

Chairman of standing subcommittees who sit on a second subcommittee shall rank behind other members serving on that subcommittee as their primary subcommittee assignment.

RULE 6. PANELS OF THE FULL COMMITTEE AND SUBCOMMITTEES

(a) The chairman may designate a panel of the committee drawn from members of more than one subcommittee to inquire into and take testimony on a matter or matters that fall within the jurisdiction of more than one subcommittee and to report to the full committee. Any such panel shall not continue in existence for more than six months.

(b) The chairman of a standing subcommittee may designate a panel of such subcommittee to inquire into and take testimony on a specific matter within the jurisdiction of that subcommittee and to report to the subcommittee for further reference to the full committee as may be appropriate.

(c) No panels so appointed shall have legislative jurisdiction.

RULE 7. REFERENCE OF LEGISLATION AND SUBCOMMITTEE REPORTS

(a) The chairman shall refer legislation and other matters to all subcommittees of appropriate jurisdiction within 2 weeks unless, by a majority vote of the members of the full committee, consideration is to be by the full committee.

(b) Bills shall be taken up for hearing only when called by the chairman of the full committee or subcommittee, or by a majority vote of a quorum of the full committee or a subcommittee.

(c) The chairman of the full committee, with approval of a majority of the members voting, a majority of the committee being present, shall have authority to discharge a subcommittee from consideration of any bill, resolution, or other matter referred thereto and have such measure or matter considered by the full committee.

(d) Reports and recommendations of a subcommittee shall not be considered by the full committee until after the intervention of 3 calendar days from the time the report is approved by the subcommittee and printed hearings thereon are available to the members, except that this rule may be waived by a majority vote of a quorum of the committee.

RULE 8. PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT OF HEARINGS AND MEETINGS

The full committee and subcommittee shall make public announcement of the date, place and subject matter of the full committee or subcommittee hearing at least one week before the commencement of the hearing. However, if the full committee or subcommittee determines that there is good cause to begin the hearing sooner, it shall make the announcement at the earliest possible date. Any announcement made under this rule shall be promptly published in the Daily Digest and promptly entered into the committee scheduling service of the House Information Systems.

RULE 9. MEETINGS AND HEARINGS OPEN TO THE PUBLIC

(a) Each committee or subcommittee meeting for the transaction of business, including the markup of legislation, shall be open to the public except when the committee or subcommittee, in open session and with a majority being present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public: Provided, however, That no person other than members of the committee and/or subcommittee and such congressional staff and such departmental representatives as they may authorize shall be present at any business or markup session which has been closed to the public. This paragraph does not apply to open committee hearings which are provided for by paragraph (b) of this rule, or any meeting that relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters.

(b) Each hearing conducted by the full committee or subcommittee shall be open to the public except when the full committee or subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of that hearing on that day shall be closed to the public because disclosure of testimony, evidence, or other matters to be considered would endanger the national security or would violate any law or rule of the House or Representatives. Notwithstanding the requirements of the preceding sentence, a majority of those present, there being in attendance no less than two members of the committee or subcommittee, may vote to close the hearing for the sole purpose of discussing whether testimony or evidence to be received would endanger the national security, or would tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person. If the decision is to close for national security reasons, the vote must be by rollcall vote and in open session, there being a majority of the committee or subcommittee present. Otherwise, if the decision is to close because the testimony may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person, the vote may be by a majority of those present, there being in attendance no less than two members of the committee or subcommittee. However, if the committee or subcommittee elects to receive such testimony in open session, it may do so only if a majority of the members of the committee or subcommittee, a majority being present, determine that such evidence or testimony will not tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person. No Member may be excluded from nonparticipatory attendance at any hearing of the full committee or subcommittee, unless the House of Representatives shall by majority vote authorize the full committee or subcommittee, for purposes of a particular series of hearings on a particular article of legislation or on a particular subject of investigation, to close its hearings to Members by the same procedures designated in this rule for closing hearings to the public: Provided, however, That the full committee or the subcommittee may by the same procedure vote to close up to 5 additional consecutive days of hearings.

(c) Notwithstanding the foregoing, and with the approval of the committee chairman, each member of the committee may designate by letter to the Chairman, a member of his or her personal staff with Top Secret security clearance to attend hearings of the committee, or that member's subcommittee(s) which have been closed under the provisions of rule 9(b) above for national security purposes for the taking of testimony: Provided, That such staff member's attendance at such hearings is subject to the approval of the committee or subcommittee as dictated by national security requirements at the time: Provided further, That this paragraph addresses hearings only and not briefings or meetings held under the provisions of paragraph (a) of this rule; and Provided further, That the attainment of any security clearances involved are the responsibility of individual Members.

RULE 10. BROADCASTING OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS AND MEETINGS

(a) In accordance with the provision of rule XI, clause 3, Rules of the House of Representatives, it is the purpose of this rule to provide a means, in conformity with acceptable standards of dignity, propriety, and decorum, by which committee or subcommittee hearings or meetings, which are open to the public, may be covered by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by any such methods of coverage. In that regard, the provisions of rule XI, clause 3(a)09(d) are specifically incorporated herein by reference.

(b) The chairman of the full committee or the chairmen of the subcommittees are authorized to determine on behalf of the full committee or its subcommittees respectively whether hearings or meetings which are open may be broadcast, unless the committee or its subcommittees respectively by majority vote determine otherwise: Provided, however, Each committee or subcommittee chairman shall determine, in his discretion, the number of television and still cameras permitted in a hearing or meeting room.

(c) In accordance with rule XI, clause 3(f), the following provisions shall apply to the broadcasting of committee or subcommittee hearings or meetings which are open to the public:

(2) No witness served with a subpoena by the committee shall be required against his or her will to be photographed at any hearing or to give evidence or testimony while the broadcasting of that hearing, by radio or television, is being conducted. At the request of any such witness who does not wish to be subjected to radio, television, or still photography coverage, all lenses shall be covered and all microphones used for coverage turned off. This subparagraph is supplementary to clause 2(k)(5) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, relating to the protection of the rights of witnesses.

(3) The allocation among the television media of the positions of the number of television cameras permitted by a committee or subcommittee chairman in a hearing room shall be in accordance with fair and equitable procedures devised by the executive committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(4) Television cameras shall be placed so as not to obstruct in any way the space between any witness giving evidence or testimony and any member of the subcommittee or its subcommittees or the visibility of that witness and that member to each other.

(5) Television cameras shall operate from fixed positions but shall not be placed in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing by the other media.

(6) Equipment necessary for coverage by the television and radio media shall not be installed in, or removed from, the hearing or meeting room while the committee or subcommittee is in session.

(7) Floodlights, spotlights, strobelights, and flashguns shall not be used in providing any method of coverage of the hearing or meeting, except that the television media may install additional lighting in the hearing room, without cost to the Government, in order to raise the embient lighting level in the hearing or meeting room to the lowest level necessary to provide adequate television coverage of the hearing or meeting at the then current state of the art of television coverage.

(8) In the allocation of the number of still photographers permitted by a committee or subcommittee chairman in a hearing or meeting room, preference shall be given to photographers from Associated Press Photos and United Press International Newspictures. If requests are made by more of the media than will be permitted by a committee or subcommittee chairman for coverage of the hearing or meeting by still photography, that coverage shall be made on the basis of a fair and equitable pool arrangement devised by the Standing Committee on Press Photographers.

(9) Photographers shall not position themselves, at any time during the course of the hearing or meeting, between the witness table and the members of the committee or its subcommittees.

(10) Photographers shall not place themselves in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing by the other media.

(11) Personnel providing coverage by the television and radio media shall be then currently accredited to the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(12) Personnel providing coverage by still photography shall be then currently accredited to the Press Photographers' Gallery.

(13) Personnel providing coverage by the television and radio media and by still photography shall conduct themselves and their coverage activities in an orderly and unobstructive manner.

(14) With the exception of devices properly used by official reporters and by accredited media and broadcast personnel as covered in these rules, no recording or camera type devices may be operated or otherwise used during committee or subcommittee hearings.

(b) Members present at a meeting of the committee or subcommittee when a meeting is originally convened will be recognized by the chairman in order of seniority. Those members arriving subsequently will be recognized in order of their arrival. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the chairman and the ranking minority member will take precedence upon their arrival. In recognizing members to question witnesses in this fashion, the chairman shall take into consideration the ratio of the majority to minority members present and shall establish the order of recognition for questioning in such a manner as not to disadvantage the members of the majority.

RULE 13. SUBPOENA AUTHORITY

The full committee, and all subcommittees, may require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memorandums, papers, and documents as it deems necessary. Any such subpoena may be authorized and issued by the committee, or subcommittee, in the conduct of any investigation or a series of investigations or activities, only when authorized by a majority of members voting, a majority being present. The power to authorize and issue subpoenas under this rule may be delegated to the chairman of the committee pursuant to such rules and under such limitations as the committee may prescribe. Authorized subpoenas shall be signed by the chairman of the committee or any member designated by the committee.

RULE 14. WITNESS STATEMENTS

If a prepared statement contains security information bearing a classification of secret or higher, the statement shall be made available in the committee rooms to all members of the committee at least 24 hours in advance of delivery; however, no such statement shall be removed from the committee offices. The requirement of this rule may be waived upon a majority of the full committee or any subcommittee, a quorum being present.

(b) The full committee and each subcommittee shall, insofar as is practicable, require each witness who is to appear before it to file with the committee (in advance of his or her appearance) a written statement of the proposed testimony and to limit the oral presentation at such appearance to a brief summary of his or her argument.

RULE 15. ADMINISTERING OATHS TO WITNESSES

The chairman of the committee, or any member designated by the chairman, may administer oaths to any witness.

RULE 16. QUESTIONING OF WITNESSES

(b) Members of the committee or subcommittee who so desire shall have not to exceed 5 minutes to interrogate each witness until such time as each member has had an opportunity to interrogate such witness; thereafter, additional time for questioning witnesses by members is discretionary with the chairman.

(c) Questions put to witnesses before the committee or subcommittee shall be pertinent to the bill or other subject matter that may be before the committee or subcommittee for consideration.

RULE 17. VOTING AND ROLLCALLS

A member may authorize a general proxy only for motions to recess, adjourn or other procedural matters. Each proxy to be effective shall be signed by the member assigning his or her vote and shall contain the date and time of day that the proxy is signed. Proxies may not be counted for a quorum. A proxy may be used in full committee or subcommittee. All proxies must be filed with the staff director and be available for inspection at any time.

RULE 19. PRIVATE BILLS

No private bill will be reported by the committee if there are two or more dissenting votes. Private bills so rejected by the committee will not be reconsidered during the same Congress unless new evidence sufficient to justify a new hearing has been presented to the Congress.

RULE 20. SUPPLEMENTAL, MINORITY, ADDITIONAL OR DISSENTING VIEWS

If, at the time of approval of any measure or matter by the committee, any member of the committee gives timely notice of intention to file supplemental, minority, additional or dissenting views, that members shall be entitled to not less than 3 calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) in which to file such views, in writing and signed by that member, with the staff director of the committee. RULE 21. POINTS OF ORDER

No point of order shall lie with respect to any measure reported by the full committee or any subcommittee on the ground that hearings on such measure were not conducted in accordance with the provisions of the committee rules; except that a point of order on that ground may be made by any member of the full committee or subcommittee which reported the measure if, in the full committee or subcommittee, such point of order was (a) timely made and (b) improperly overruled or not properly considered.

RULE 22. PUBLIC INSPECTION OF COMMITTEE ROLLCALLS

(a) The result of each rollcall in any meeting of the committee shall be made available by the committee for inspection by the public at reasonable times in the offices of the committee. Information so available for public inspection shall include a description of the amendment, motion, order, or other proposition and the name of each member voting for and each member voting against such amendment, motion, order, or proposition, and whether by proxy or in person, and the names of those members present but not voting. With respect to each record vote by the committee on each motion to report any bill or resolution of public character, the total number of votes cast for, and the total number of votes cast against, the reporting of such bill or resolution shall be included in the committee report.

(b) In the event of such a rollcall vote or votes, when a member is in attendance at any other committee, subcommittee, or conference committee meeting during that time, that circumstance shall be so recorded in the rollcall record, upon timely notification to the chairman from that member.

RULE 23. PROTECTION OF NATIONAL SECURITY INFORMATION

(a) All national security information bearing a classification of secret or higher which has been received by the committee or a subcommittee shall be deemed to have been received in executive session and shall be given appropriate safekeeping.

RULES FOR INVESTIGATIVE HEARINGS CONDUCTED BY SUBCOMMITTEES

The chairman of the committee, or any member designated by the chairman, may administer oaths to any witness.

2.A. A subpoena may be authorized and issued by a subcommittee under subparagraph 1.B. in the conduct of any investigation, or series of investigations or activities, only when authorized by a majority of the members voting, a majority being present. Authorized subpoenas shall be signed only by the chairman of the committee, or by any member designated by the committee.

B. Compliance with any subpoena issued by a subcommittee under subparagraph 1.B. may be enforced only as authorized or directed by the House. (House rule XI, clause 2(m); committee rule 13.)

iii. Notice of hearings

Each subcommittee shall make public announcement of the date, place, and subject matter of any subcommittee hearing at least one week before the commencement of the hearing. This paragraph does not apply to open subcommittee hearings which are provided for by paragraph 2. of this rule, or any meeting that relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters. (House rule XI, clause 2(g)(1); committee rule 9(a).)

2. Each hearing conducted by a subcommittee shall be open to the public except when the subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of that hearing on that day shall be closed to the public because disclosure of testimony, evidence, or other matters to be considered would endanger the national security or would violate any law or rule of the House of Representatives. Notwithstanding the requirements of the preceding sentence, a majority of those present, there being in attendance no less than two members of the subcommittee, may vote to close the hearing for the sole purpose of discussing whether testimony or evidence to be received would endanger the national security, or would tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person. If the decision is to close for national security reasons, the vote must be by rollcall vote and in open session, there being a majority of the subcommittee present. Otherwise, if the decision is to close because the testimony may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person, the vote may be by a majority of those present, there being in attendance no less than two members of the subcommittee. However, if the subcommittee elects to receive such testimony in open session, it may do so only if a majority of the members of the subcommittee, a majority being present, determine that such evidence or testimony will not tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person. No Member may be excluded from nonparticipatory attendance at any hearing of any subcommittee, unless the House of Representatives shall by majority vote authorize a particular subcommittee, for purposes of a particular series of hearings on a particular article of legislation or on a particular subject of investigation, to close its hearings to Members by the same procedures designated in this subparagraph for closing hearings to the public: Provided, however, That the subcommittee may by the same procedure vote to close up to 5 additional consecutive days of hearings. (House rule XI, clause 2(g)(1); committee rule 9(b).)

v. Prepared statements

Each witness who is to appear before a subcommittee shall, insofar as is practicable, file with the subcommittee (in advance of his or her appearance) a written statement of the proposed testimony. Such witness will limit his or her oral presentation to a brief summary of the statement.

Any prepared statement shall be submitted to the subcommittee at least 48 hours in advance of presentation and shall be distributed to all members of the subcommittee at least 24 hours in advance of delivery.

If a prepared statement contains security information bearing a classification of secret or higher, the statement shall be made available in the committee rooms to all members of the subcommittee at least 24 hours in advance of delivery; however, no such statement shall be removed from the committee rooms. The requirement of this rule may be waived upon a majority vote of the subcommittee, a quorum being present (House rule XI, clause 2(g)(4); committee rule 14.)

Whenever it is asserted that the evidence or testimony at an investigatory hearing may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person.

(a) such testimony or evidence shall be presented in executive session, notwithstanding the provision of committee rule 9(b), if by a majority of those present, there being in attendance no less than two members of the subcommittee, the subcommittee determines that such evidence or testimony may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person; and

(b) the subcommittee shall proceed to receive such testimony in open session only if a majority of the members of the subcommittee, a majority being present, determine that such evidence or testimony will not tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person.

In either case the subcommittee shall afford such person an opportunity voluntarily to appear as a witness; and receive and dispose of requests from such person to subpoena additional witnesses. (House rule XI, clause 2(k)(5).)

xii. Photographing of witnesses

No witness served with a subpoena by the committee or a subcommittee shall be required against his or her will to be photographed at any hearing or to give evidence or testimony while the broadcasting of that hearing, by radio or television, is being conducted. At the request of any such witness who does not wish to be subjected to radio, television, or still photography coverage, all lenses shall be covered and all microphones used for coverage turned off. (House rule XI, clause 2(f)(3); committee rule 10.)

xiii. Subpoena of additional witnesses

Except as provided in investigative hearing rule XI above, the chairman shall receive and the subcommittee shall dispose of requests to subpoena additional witnesses. (House rule XI, clause 2(k)(6).)

xiv. Testimony take in executive session

No evidence or testimony taken in executive session may be released or used in public sessions without the consent of the subcommittee. (House rule XI, clause 2(k)(7).

xv. Sworn statements

In the discretion of the subcommittee, witnesses may submit brief and pertinent sworn statements in writing for inclusion in the record. The subcommittee is the sole judge of the pertinency of testimony and evidence adduced at its hearings. (House rule XI, clause 2(k)(8).)

xvi. Transcript of testimony

A witnesss may obtain a transcript copy of his testimony given at a public session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized by the subcommittee. (House rule XI, clause 2(k)(9).)

xvii. General

The rules of the House are the rules of its committees and subcommittees as far as applicable, except that a motion to recess from day to day is a motion of high privilege in committees and subcommittees. (House rule XI, clause 1(a)(1).)

RULES OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON STANDARDS OF OFFICIAL CONDUCT FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. DIXON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the requirement of clause 2(a) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, I submit herewith the rules of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct for the 101st Congress in the RECORD at this point. These rules were adopted by the committee on January 5, 1989.

RULES ON THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON STANDARDS OF OFFICIAL CONDUCT

PART I—SCOPE AND AUTHORITY

Scope and Authority

RULE 1. (a) These rules govern the procedures to be followed by the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct (hereafter referred to as the "Committee"). So far as applicable, these rules and the Rules of the House of Representatives shall be the rules of each subcommittee of the Committee, but each subcommittee may prescribe additional rules not inconsistent therewith.

(b) These rules are adopted under the authority of clause 2(a) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, 101st Congress.

PART II—GENERAL COMMITTEE RULES

Subcommittees

RULE 2. (a) The Chairman may establish subcommittees and may assign to them such functions as he may deem advisable. The membership of each subcommittee shall provide equal representation for the majority and minority parties. The Chairman may refer any bill, resolution, investigation, or other matter before the Committee to an appropriate subcommittee for consideration and may recall any such bill, resolution, investigation, or other matter from the subcommittee to which it was referred.

(b) Any member of the Committee may sit with any subcommittee, but only regular members of the subcommittee may vote on any matter before the subcommittee.

Meetings

RULE 3. (a) The regular meeting day of the Committee shall be the second Wednesday of each month, except when the House is not meeting on that day. When the Chairman determines that there is sufficient reason, he may call a meeting on additional days. A regularly scheduled meeting need not be held when the Chairman determines there is no business to be considered.

(b) Insofar as practicable, notice will be provided seven days in advance of meetings. However, the Chairman may, in his discretion, waive such time period for good cause.

Members Required for Quorums and Committee Action

RULE 4. (a)(1) A quorum of the Committee consists of a majority of the members of the Committee.

(2) A quorum of a subcommittee consists of a majority of the members of the subcommittee.

(b) Except as provided in clause 4(e)(2)(A) of Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives and rules 5, 8, 12, 16, and 17 of the Committee rules, action may be taken by the Committee by a simple majority, a quorum being present.

Broadcasts of Committee Proceedings

RULE 5. (a) Whenever any hearing or meeting by the Committee is open to the public, the Committee may permit, except as provided in clause (b) of this rule, by a vote of a majority to be covered, in whole or in part, by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by any such methods of coverage, under the following rules:

(1) If the television or radio coverage of the hearing or meeting is to be presented to the public as live coverage, that coverage shall be conducted and presented without commercial sponsorship.

(2) No witness shall be required against his or her will to be photographed or to otherwise have a graphic reproduction of his or her image made at any hearing or to give evidence or testimony while the broadcasting of that hearing, by radio or television, is being conducted. At the request of any witness who does not wish to be subjected to radio coverage at a hearing, all microphones shall be turned off, at the request of any witness who does not wish to be subjected to television or still photography coverage at a hearing, all lenses shall be covered, and at the request of a witness who does not wish to have a graphic reproduction of his or her image made at a hearing, the making of such a reproduction at the hearing shall not be permitted. This paragraph is supplementary to clause 2 (k)(5) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives relating to the protection of the rights of witnesses.

(3) Not more than four television cameras, operating from fixed positions, shall be permitted in a hearing or meeting room. The allocation among the television media of the positions of the number of television cameras permitted in a hearing or meeting room shall be in accordance with fair and equitable procedures devised by the Executive Committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(4) Television cameras shall be placed so as not to obstruct in any way the space between any witness giving evidence or testimony and any member of the Committee or the visibility of that witness and that member to each other.

(5) Television cameras shall not be placed in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing or meeting by the other media.

(b) Coverage by radio, television, still camera, or electronic recording device of any disciplinary hearing held under subpart B of part III of the Committee rules is prohibited.

Committee Records

RULE 6. (a) The Chairman of the Committee shall, with the approval of the Committee, establish such procedures as in the Chairman's judgment may be necessary to prevent the unauthorized disclosure of any testimony or other information received by the Committee or its staff.

(b) Unless otherwise authorized by the Committee, no information received by the Committee, respecting any alleged violation by a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives of the Code of Official Conduct or of any law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct applicable to the conduct of such Member, officer, or employee in the performance of his duties or the discharge of his responsibilities shall be disclosed to the public before the transmittal under rule 11 of the Committee rules to such Member, officer, or employee of a Statement of Alleged Violation in connection with such violation. After the service of such a Statement on the Member, officer, or employee—

(1) the Statement and any other paper filed pursuant to rule 12 of the Committee rules respecting such violation shall be made available for public inspection at reasonable hours, and

(2) any other paper filed with the Committee respecting such violation shall be made available as authorized by the Committee, except that no paper shall be made available if its disclosure would violate any Executive Order or any Federal law or regulation.

Special Procedures

RULE 7. The Committee may adopt by resolution any special procedures deemed necessary to a particular matter before the Committee. Copies of such special procedures shall be furnished to all parties and witnesses in the matter.

Changes in Committee Rules

RULE 8. The rules of the Committee may be modified, amended, or repealed by a vote of a majority of the Committee if before such vote written notice of the proposed modification, amendment, or repeal was provided each member of the Committee.

PART III—COMMITTEE INVESTIGATIVE AUTHORITY

Subpart A—Complaints and Committee Inquiries

Complaints

RULE 9. (a) A complaint submitted to the Committee under clause 4(e)(2)(B) of Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives shall be in writing and under oath, setting forth in simple, concise, and direct statements—

(1) the name and legal address of the party filing the complaint (hereafter referred to as the "complainant");

(2) the name and position or title of the Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives alleged to be in violation of the Code of Official Conduct or a law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct;

(3) the nature of the alleged violation, including, if possible, the specific section of the Code of Official Conduct or law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct alleged to have been violated; and

(4) the facts alleged to give rise to the violation. When facts are alleged upon the information and belief of the complainant, the complaint shall so state and set forth the basis for such information and belief.

(b) All documents in the possession of the complainant that are relevant to and in support of the allegations shall be appended to the complaint.

(c) A complaint by a Member of the House of Representatives may be transmitted directly to the Committee. A complaint by an individual not a Member of the House may be transmitted through a Member who agrees, in writing, to accept it for that purpose. If a complaint by an individual not a Member of the House is submitted to three Members of the House who refuse, in writing, to transmit the complaint to the Committee, the complainant may transmit the complaint directly to the Committee, provided an affidavit is attached stating, under oath, the names of the Members to whom the complaint was submitted and by whom it was rejected in writing.

Processing of Complaints

RULE 10. (a)(1) The staff of the Committee shall examine each complaint submitted to the Committee for compliance with clause 4(e)(2)(B) of Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives and rule 9 of the Committee rules.

(2) If the staff determines that a complaint does not comply with such House and Committee rules, the complaint shall be returned to the complainant with a general statement that the complaint is not in compliance with such rules and a copy of such rules. A complainant may resubmit a complaint.

(3) If the staff determines that a complaint is in compliance with such House and Committee rules, the complaint shall be filed with the Committee. Within five days of the filing of a complaint (A) a copy of the complaint, showing the date of its filing, shall be transmitted to the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee, and (B) every other member of the Committee shall be notified of the filing of the complaint and of its availability for inspection by the member in the Committee offices. Upon the request of any member of the Committee, the staff of the Committee shall inform the member of the complaints which have been filed with the Committee and which are pending before the Committee.

(4) If within thirty days of the date of the filing of a complaint the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee jointly—

(A) decide to place the complaint on the Committee agenda for consideration at the next regularly scheduled meeting of the Committee, it shall be so placed on such agenda, or

(B) determine that the complaint be dismissed because it fails to allege facts which constitute a violation of the Code of Official Conduct or applicable law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct, the complaint together with the determination that it should be dismissed shall be placed on the Committee agenda for consideration at the next regularly scheduled meeting of the Committee.

Unless the Committee determines under clause (b) that the complaint merits further inquiry, the complaint shall be dismissed and the complainant shall be notified of the dismissal. If upon the expiration of such thirty days, the Chairman and ranking minority member have not taken any joint action respecting the complaint, it shall be placed on the Committee agenda for consideration at the next regularly scheduled meeting of the Committee.

(b) At the meeting at which the Committee is to consider a complaint filed with the Committee, the Committee shall determine whether the violation alleged in the complaint is within the jurisdiction of the Committee and, if so, whether the allegations in the complaint merit further inquiry. The complainant and respondent shall be notified, in writing, of action taken by the Committee respecting the complaint.

Preliminary Inquiry and Statement of Alleged Violation

RULE 11. (a)(1) If the Committee determines under rule 10(b) that the allegations of a violation in a complaint filed with the Committee merit further inquiry, the Committee shall conduct a preliminary inquiry to determine whether such violation occurred.

(2) In the preliminary inquiry—

(A) the Committee shall provide the respondent an opportunity to present to the Committee, orally or in writing, a statement respecting the allegations with respect to which the inquiry is being held,

(B) the staff may interview witnesses and examine documents and other evidentiary matter,

(C) the Committee may order the testimony of witnesses to be taken under oath, in which event the oath may be administered by a member of the Committee or by any person authorized by law to administer oaths.

(D) the Committee may require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, documents, and other things as it deems necessary to the conduct of the inquiry, and

(E) any probative evidence may be used.

Upon the completion of the preliminary inquiry, the staff of the Committee shall prepare and transmit to the Committee a report containing a comprehensive summary of the information received in the inquiry and may include in the report a recommendation for action by the Committee respecting the alleged violation which was the subject of the inquiry.

(b) If the Committee determines on the basis of the report of the committee staff on the preliminary inquiry respecting an alleged violation that there is reason to believe that the violation occurred, the Committee may direct the staff to transmit to the respondent a Statement of Alleged Violation. A Statement shall be divided into counts and each count shall relate to a separate violation and shall contain a plain and concise statement of the alleged facts of such violation and include a reference to the provision of the Code of Official Conduct or law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct alleged to have been violated.

Answers and Motions and Committee Action

RULE 12. (a) If a Statement of Alleged Violation is transmitted under rule 11(b) of the Committee rules, the respondent receiving the Statement shall have not less than 21 days in which to respond to it. The response shall be by way of answer or motion, shall be in writing and signed by the respondent or his counsel, and shall be limited to the following:

(1) An admission to or denial of, under oath, each count set forth in the statement. A denial may include (A) negative and affirmative defenses to the allegations in a count, and (B) any supportive evidence and any other relevant information which the respondent may desire to submit.

(2) An objection to any count in the Statement on the grounds that it fails to state facts which constitute a violation of the Code of Official Conduct or another applicable law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct.

(3) An objection to the jurisdiction of the Committee to consider the allegations contained in the Statement.

(4) A motion for a bill of particulars.

(5) An objection to the participation of any member of the Committee in the consideration of the allegations contained in the Statement on the grounds that the member cannot render an impartial and unbiased decision. The Committee member against whom the objection is made shall be the sole judge of his qualifications. A motion under this paragraph is not in lieu of an answer.

Any motion submitted pursuant to this clause shall be accompanied by a memorandum of points and authorities. Except for good cause shown, no pleading or motion not described in paragraphs (1) through (5) will be considered by the Committee and the Committee will not consider any answer or motion described in such paragraphs which is submitted under this clause after the expiration of such 21 days.

(b) Within 30 days after the receipt of any motion under clause (a) respecting a Statement, the Committee shall consider such motion. Notice of the decision of the Committee respecting the motion shall be furnished the respondent who submitted it. When the Committee has acted on all motions submitted under paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of clause (a), the respondent shall, in accordance with paragraph (1) of such clause, submit, within fourteen days of the date of the last Committee action, an answer to each count in the Statement not dismissed by the Committee.

(c) Failure to submit, within the application time period, an answer to a count of a Statement which has not been dismissed by the Committee shall constitute an admission to the violation alleged in the count.

(d) The Chairman, in his discretion, may extend any time limitation imposed by clause (a) or (b) if he determines that the extension would facilitate a fair and complete inquiry and may shorten any such time limitation if he determines that there are special circumstances which require the shortening of such time limitation.

(e)(1) As soon as practicable after the expiration of all applicable time limitations for action under clauses (a) and (b) respecting a Statement of Alleged Violation, the Committee shall act, by the vote of a majority of the members of the Committee, to—

(A) hold a disciplinary hearing on the violation charged in the Statement, or

(B) defer action on the Statement but only if there is a judicial proceeding pending.

Failure to achieve a vote of the majority of the members of the Committee on a motion to take any action described in subparagraph (A) or (B) shall constitute dismissal of the Statement.

(2) The respondent to a Statement of Alleged Violation shall be notified in writing of action taken under paragraph (1) by the Committee respecting the Statement.

Inquiries on the Committee's Initiative

RULE 13. Notwithstanding the absence of a complaint filed with the Committee under rule 10 of the Committee rules, the staff of the Committee shall present to it any evidence available to the staff reasonably indicating that any Member, officer, or employee may have committed a violation of the Code of Official Conduct or any law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct applicable to his conduct in the performance of his duties or in the discharge of his responsibilities. If the Committee determines that the evidence presented by the staff of an alleged violation merits further inquiry, the Committee shall, in accordance with rule 11(a) of the Committee rules, conduct a preliminary inquiry to determine whether such violation occurred. Rules 11 and 12 of the Committee rules shall apply to further proceedings respecting such alleged violation.

Committee Action After Criminal Convictions

RULE 14. If a Member, officer, or employee of the House is convicted in a Federal, State, or local court of a criminal offense for which a sentence of a term of imprisonment of at least one year may be imposed, the Committee shall conduct, in accordance with rule 11(a) of the Committee rules, a preliminary inquiry to review the evidence of such offense and to determine whether it constitutes a violation over which the Committee is given jurisdiction under clause 4(e) of Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives. If on the basis of the report of the Committee staff on the preliminary inquiry the Committee determines that an offense was committed over which the Committee has jurisdiction under such clause, the Committee shall notify the Member, officer, or employee of its determination and shall hold a disciplinary hearing for the sole purpose of determining what action to recommend to the House respecting such offense. Such hearing shall be held in accordance with the requirements of rule 16 of the Committee rules applicable to the second phase of a disciplinary hearing and any recommendation made by the Committee shall be made in accordance with rule 17 of the Committee rules.

Definition

RULE 15. For purposes of this subpart and subpart B, the term "respondent" means a Member, officer, or employee of the House who is charged in a complaint filed with the Committee under rule 10 of the Committee rules or who is charged in a Statement of Alleged Violation transmitted under rule 12 of the Committee rules.

Subpart B—Disciplinary Hearings

Disciplinary Hearings

RULE 16. (a) A disciplinary hearing respecting a violation charged in a Statement of Alleged Violation shall be held to receive evidence upon which to base findings of fact and recommendations, if any, to the House respecting such violation. A disciplinary hearing shall consist of two phases. The first phase shall be for the purpose of determining whether or not the counts in the Statement have been proved. The second phase shall be for the purpose of determining what action to recommend to the House with respect to any count found to have been proved.

(b) At a disciplinary hearing the Committee may require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, documents, and other things as it deems necessary. Depositions, interrogatories, and sworn statements taken under Committee direction may be accepted into the Committee record. The procedures set forth in clause 2(k) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives shall apply to disciplinary hearings.

(c) Prior to setting a date for a disciplinary hearing and issuing subpoenas for witnesses, the Committee shall resolve the scope and purpose of the hearing. A copy of this statement of scope and purpose shall be furnished to all witnesses. During the course of the hearing the Committee may expand or contract the scope in light of evidence received.

(d)(1) The order of phase one of a disciplinary hearing shall be as follows:

(A) The Chairman shall open the hearing by stating the Committee's authority to conduct the hearing, the purpose of the hearing, and its scope.

(B) Testimony from witnesses and other evidence pertinent to the subject of the hearing shall be received in the following order whenever possible: (i) witnesses and other evidence offered by the Committee staff, (ii) witnesses and other evidence offered by the respondent, and (iii) rebuttal witnesses.

(C) Witnesses at a hearing shall be examined first by the Committee counsel or authorized staff member. The Committee members may then question the witnesses under the five-minute rule. The respondent or his counsel may then cross-examine the witnesses. Redirect and recross may be permitted in the Chairman's discretion. With respect to witnesses offered by the respondent, a witness shall be examined first by the respondent or his counsel, and then may be cross-examined by Committee counsel or authorized staff member. Committee members may then question the witness under the five-minute rule. Redirect and recross may be permitted in the Chairman's discretion.

(2) Testimony of all witnesses shall be taken under oath. The form of the oath shall be: "Do you solemnly swear (or affirm) that the testimony you will give before this Committee in the matter now under consideration will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?" The oath shall be administered by the Chairman or Committee member designated by him to administer oaths.

(e) At a disciplinary hearing the burden of proof rests on the staff with respect to each count to establish the facts alleged therein clearly and convincingly by the evidence that it introduces.

(f) Phase two of a disciplinary hearing shall consist of oral and/or written submission by counsel for the Committee and counsel for the respondent as to the sanction the Committee should recommend to the House of Representatives with respect to any count of the Statement of Alleged Violation which has been proved. Testimony by witnesses will not be heard at phase two except by a vote of a majority of the Committee.

Recommendations

RULE 17. (a)(1)(A) As soon as practicable after the completion of the first phase of a disciplinary hearing respecting a Statement of Alleged Violation, the Committee shall consider each count contained in the Statement and with respect to each count as originally drawn or as amended shall vote on a motion that the count has been proved. A count shall not be proved unless at least a majority of the Committee vote for a motion that the count has been proved. A count which is not proved shall be considered as dismissed by the Committee.

(B) If the Committee votes that a count has been proved, the Committee may upon completion of the second phase of the disciplinary hearing, by a majority vote of the Committee, consider and vote on a motion that a recommendation be made to the House for appropriate action respecting the violation charged in such count.

(2) If in a vote taken under paragraph (1)(A) respecting a count a majority of the Committee does not vote that the count has been proved, a motion to reconsider that vote may only be made by a Member who voted that the count was not proved. If in a vote taken under paragraph (1)(B) to adopt a recommendation to the House respecting a violation charged in a count, a majority of the Committee does not vote in favor of the recommendation, a motion to reconsider that vote may only be made by a Member who voted against the recommendation.

(b)(1) With respect to any violation with which a Member of the House was charged in a count which the Committee has voted as proved, the Committee may include in its recommendation to the House one or more of the following sanctions:

(A) Expulsion from the House.

(B) Censure.

(C) Reprimand.

(D) Fine.

(E) Denial or limitation of any right, power, privilege, or immunity of the Member if under the Constitution the House may impose such denial or limitation.

(F) Any other sanction determined by the Committee to be appropriate.

(2) With respect to any violation with which an officer or employee of the House was charged in a count which the Committee has voted as proved, the Committee may include in its recommendations to the House one or more of the following sanctions:

(A) Dismissal from employment.

(B) Fine.

(C) Any other sanction determined by the Committee to be appropriate.

(c)(1) The purpose of this clause is to inform the Members of the House of Representatives as to the general guidelines the Committee considers appropriate for determining which, if any, sanctions to recommend to the House respecting violations proved in a disciplinary hearing. This clause does not limit the authority of the Committee to make or not to make recommendations for such sanctions.

(2) For technical violations, the Committee may direct that the violation be reported to the House without a recommendation for a sanction.

(3) With respect to the sanctions which the Committee may determine to include in a recommendation to the House respecting a violation, reprimand is appropriate for serious violations, censure is appropriate for more serious violations, and expulsion of a Member or dismissal of an officer or employee is appropriate for the most serious violations. A recommendation of a fine is appropriate in a case in which it is likely that the violation was committed to secure a financial benefit; and a recommendation of a denial or limitation of a right, power, privilege, or immunity of a Member is appropriate when the violation bears upon the exercise or holding of such right, power, privilege, or immunity.

(d) The Committee report accompanying a recommendation to the House adopted by the Committee under clause (a)(1)(B) respecting a violation charged in a count shall contain a brief but complete statement of the evidence which supported the finding as to that count and a brief statement of the Committee's reasons for the recommendation.

Disclosure of Evidence

RULE 18. Upon the request of a respondent, the Committee may permit the respondent to inspect, copy, or photograph books, papers, documents, photographs, or other tangible objects which the Committee intends to use as evidence against the respondent in a disciplinary hearing and which are material to the preparation of the defense of the respondent.

Subpart C—Evidence and Witnesses

Exculpatory Information

RULE 19. If the Committee at any time receives any exculpatory information respecting a Statement of Alleged Violation against a Member, officer, or employee of the House of the Code of Official Conduct or any law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct, it shall make such information available to such Member, officer, or employee.

Admissibility of Evidence

RULE 20. (a) Any evidence that is relevant and probative shall be admissible in any hearing of the Committee, unless the evidence is privileged or unless the Constitution otherwise requires its exclusion. Objections going only to the weight that should be given to evidence will not justify its exclusion.

(b) The Chairman or other Member presiding at a hearing shall rule upon any question of admissibility at the hearing of testimony or evidence presented to the Committee. The Chairman or other Member presiding may limit the presentation of repetitious evidence. Rulings shall be final unless reversed or modified by a majority vote of the Committee members present.

Witnesses

RULE 21. (a) A subpoena to a witness to appear at a hearing shall be served sufficiently in advance of his scheduled appearance to allow him a reasonable period of time, as determined by the Committee, to prepare for the hearing and to employ counsel should he so desire.

(b) Except as otherwise specifically authorized by the Chairman, no member of the Committee or staff shall make public the name of any witness subpoenaed by the Committee before the date of his scheduled appearance.

(c) Witnesses at hearings may be accompanied by their counsel for the purpose of advising them concerning their constitutional rights and to raise objections to procedures or to the admissibility of testimony and evidence. Counsel for a witness other than the respondent shall not be permitted to engage in oral argument with the Committee. After a witness has testified, his counsel may submit to the Committee, in writing, any questions he wishes propounded to his client and any request for additional witnesses or other evidence. Such request may be granted at the Committee's discretion.

(d) The respondent may apply to the Committee for the issuance of subpoenas for the appearance of witnesses or the production of documents on his behalf. The application shall be granted upon a concise showing by the respondent that the proposed testimony or evidence is relevant and not otherwise available. The application shall be denied if not made at a reasonable time or if the testimony or evidence would be merely cumulative.

(e) Each witness subpoenaed by the Committee may sign appropriate vouchers for travel allowances and attendance fees, which may be obtained from the Committee staff.

(f) Each witness appearing before the Committee shall be furnished a printed copy of the rules of the Committee and the pertinent provisions of the Rules of the House of Representatives applicable to the rights of witnesses.

RULES OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. DELLUMS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the House Committee on the District of Columbia, I submit the rules of the committee for the 101st Congress.

RULES GOVERNING PROCEDURES—COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ONE HUNDRED AND FIRST CONGRESS

A. IN GENERAL

1. (a) The rules of the House are the rules of this committee and each subcommittee so far as applicable, except that a motion to recess from day to day and a motion to dispense with the first reading (in full) of a bill or resolution, if printed copies are available, are nondebatable motions of high privilege in the committee and subcommittees.

(b) The procedures applicable in the House as in the Committee of the Whole apply to this committee, except that a measure considered in committee must be read (by section) for amendment; a motion to limit debate under the five-minute rule in committee must therefore be confined to the portion of the bill then pending, and the previous question may only be moved on the measure in committee if the entire measure has been read, or considered as read, for amendment.

(c) There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of Members voting, if a quorum be present, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the Committee to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered.

(d) Upon the offering of any amendment by a Member, the Committee Clerk shall promptly transmit a copy to the official reporter and copies to each Committee Member in attendance.

2. Each subcommittee is a part of this committee, and is subject to the authority and direction of the committee and to its rules insofar as applicable. The rules of the committee shall be the rules of its subcommittees.

3. No major investigation by a subcommittee shall be initiated without approval of the Chair of the committee or the majority of the full committee.

4. Any committee member, when recognized by the Chair, may address the committee on any bill, motion, or other matter under consideration before the committee. The Chair may limit to 5 minutes the time of any such member, after giving due consideration to the importance of the subject matter and to the length of time available. Any House Member not a member of the committee may testify as a witness at any hearing of the committee or a subcommittee, or may submit a statement for the official record.

B. REGULAR MEETING DAYS

1. The full committee shall have its regular meetings on the first Tuesday in each calendar month at 10 a.m. When the House is in recess, the regular monthly meeting of the committee may be dispensed with at the discretion of the Chair upon notice of such action to all members of the committee.

2. The committee shall meet, for the consideration of any bill or resolution pending before the committee or for the transaction of the committee business, on all regular meeting days fixed by the committee.

3. Subcommittee Chairs shall set meeting and hearing dates after consultation with the Chair and other subcommittee Chairs with a view toward avoiding simultaneous scheduling of committee and subcommittee meetings or hearings wherever possible.

C. ADDITIONAL AND SPECIAL MEETINGS

1. The Chair may call and convene, as he or she considers necessary, additional meetings of the committee for the consideration of any bill or resolution pending before the committee or for the conduct of other committee business. The committee shall meet for such purposes pursuant to that call of the Chair.

2. If at least three members of the committee desire that a special meeting of the committee be called by the Chair, those members may file in the offices of the committee their written request to the Chair for that special meeting. Such request shall specify the measure or matter to be considered. Immediately upon the filing of the request, the clerk of the committee shall notify the Chair of the filing of the request. If, within 3 calendar days after the filing of the request, the Chair does not call the requested special meeting, to be held within 7 calendar days after the filing of the request, a majority of the members of the committee may file in the offices of the committee their written notice that a special meeting of the committee will be held, specifying the date and hour of, and the measure of matter to be considered at, the special meeting. The committee shall meet on that date and hour. Immediately upon the filing of the notice, the clerk of the committee shall notify all members of the committee that such special meeting will be held and inform them of its date and hour and the measure or matter to be considered; and only the measure or matter specified in that notice may be considered at that special meeting.

D. RANKING MAJORITY MEMBER TO PRESIDE IN ABSENCE OF CHAIR

If the Chair of the committee or subcommittee is not present at any meeting of the committee or subcommittee, the ranking member of the majority party on the committee or subcommittee who is present shall preside at the meeting.

E. COMMITTEE RECORDS AND ROLLCALLS

1. The committee shall keep a complete record of all committee action which shall include a record of the votes on any question on which a rollcall vote is demanded. The result of each rollcall vote shall be made available by the committee for inspection by the public at reasonable times in the offices of the committee. Information so available for public inspection shall include a description of the amendment, motion, order, or other proposition and the name of each member voting for and each member voting against such amendment, motion, order, or proposition, and whether by proxy or in person, and the names of those members present but not voting.

A record vote in subcommittee may be had upon the request of any subcommittee member, and in full committee upon the request of any committee member.

2. Records of hearings before the committee shall not be available to the public for quotation of any member until after such member has had an opportunity to examine and approve such hearing records.

3. All committee and subcommittee hearings, records, data, charts, and files shall be kept separate and distinct from the congressional office records of the Chair of the committee or a subcommittee; and such records shall be the property of the House and all Members of the House shall have access thereto.

4. The records of the committee at the National Archives and Records Administration shall be made available in accordance with rule XXXVI of the rules of the House, except that the committee authorizes use of any record to which clause 3(b)(4) would otherwise apply after such record has been in existence for 5 years. The chairman shall notify the ranking minority member of any decision, pursuant to clause 3(b)(3) or clause 4(b) of the rule, to withhold a record otherwise available, and the matter shall be presented to the committee for a determination on the written request of any member of the committee.

F. PROXIES

A vote by any member in the committee or in any subcommittee may be cast by proxy, but shall be in writing, shall assert that the member is absent on official business or is otherwise unable to be present at the meeting of the committee, shall designate the person who is to execute the proxy authorization, and shall be limited to a specific measure or matter and any amendments or motions pertaining thereto; except that a member may authorize a general proxy only for motions to recess, adjourn or other procedural matters. Each proxy to be effective shall be signed by the member assigning his or her vote and shall contain the date and time of day that the proxy is signed. Proxies may not be counted for a quorum.

G. OPEN MEETINGS AND HEARINGS

1. Each meeting for the transaction of business, including the markup of legislation, of the committee or subcommittee shall be open to the public except when the committee or subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public; Provided, however, that no person other than members of the committee and such congressional staff and such departmental representatives as they may authorize shall be present at any business or markup session which has been closed to the public. This paragraph does not apply to open committee hearings which are provided for by (2) of this rule, or to any meeting that relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters.

2. Each hearing conducted by the committee or subcommittee shall be open to the public except when the committee or subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of that hearing on that day shall be closed to the public because disclosure of testimony, evidence, or other matters to be considered would endanger the national security or would violate any law or rule of the House of Representatives; notwithstanding the requirements of the preceding sentence, or rule H. (2), a majority of those present (but not less than two members voting in the affirmative).

(A) may vote to close the hearing for the sole purpose of discussing whether testimony or evidence to be received would endanger the national security or defame, degrade or incriminate any person; or

(B) may vote to close the hearing if testimony or evidence to be received would defame, degrade, or incriminate any person; Provided, however, That the committee or subcommittee may by the same procedure vote to close one subsequent day of hearing.

H. QUORUM

1. The number of members to constitute a quorum for the purpose of taking testimony and receiving evidence in full committee or subcommittee is two.

2. One-third of the committee or a subcommittee shall constitute a quorum for other meetings, except that a majority of the committee or subcommittee shall constitute a quorum for the purposes of reporting a measure and closing a meeting to the public.

3. After the roll has been once called to establish a quorum during a day, the Chair may not entertain a point of order that a quorum is not present unless the committee is operating under the five-minute rule and the Chair has put the pending motion or proposition to a vote.

I. CALLING AND INTERROGATING WITNESSES

1. Whenever any hearing is conducted by the committee or a subcommittee upon any measure or matter, the minority party members on the committee or subcommittee shall be entitled, upon request to the Chair of the committee or subcommittee by a majority of the minority party members before the completion of the hearing, to call witnesses selected by the minority to testify with respect to that measure or matter during at least one day of hearing thereon.

2. The committee and subcommittees shall apply the 5-minute rule in the interrogation of witnesses in any hearing until such time as each member of the committee or subcommittee who so desires has had an opportunity to question each witness.

3. Committee members may question witnesses only when they have been recognized by the Chair for that purpose.

4. All questions put to the witnesses before the committee shall be pertinent to the bill or other subject matter before the committee for consideration.

5. Insofar as is practicable, each witness who is to appear must file with the committee (in advance of his or her appearance) a written statement of the proposed testimony and limit the oral presentation at such appearance to a brief summary of his or her argument.

J. INVESTIGATIVE HEARING PROCEDURES

1. The Chair of the committee or subcommittee at an investigative hearing shall announce in an opening statement the subject of the investigation.

2. A copy of the committee rules and this clause shall be made available to each witness.

3. Witnesses at investigative hearings may be accompanied by their own counsel for the purpose of advising them concerning their constitutional rights.

4. The Chair of the committee or subcommittee may punish breaches of order and decorum, and of professional ethics on the part of counsel, by censure and exclusion from the hearings; and the full committee may cite the offender to the House for contempt.

5. Whenever it is asserted that the evidence or testimony at an investigatory hearing may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person,

(A) such testimony or evidence shall be presented in executive session, if by a majority of those present, there being in attendance the requisite number required under the rules of the committee to be present for the purpose of taking testimony, the committee or subcommittee determines that such evidence or testimony may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person;

(B) the committee or subcommittee shall proceed to receive such testimony in open session only if a majority of the members of the committee or subcommittee, a majority being present, determine that such evidence or testimony will not tend to defame, or incriminate any person.

In either case the committee or subcommittee shall—

(a) afford such person an opportunity voluntarily to appear as a witness; and

(b) receive and dispose of requests from such person to subpoena additional witnesses.

6. Except as provided in subparagraph (5), the Chair shall receive and the committee shall dispose of requests to subpoena additional witnesses.

7. No evidence or testimony taken in executive session may be released or used in public sessions without the consent of the committee.

8. In the discretion of the committee or subcommittee, witnesses may submit brief and pertinent sworn statements in writing for inclusion in the record. The committee or subcommittee is the sole judge of the pertinency of testimony and evidence adduced at its hearing.

9. A witness may obtain a transcript copy of his testimony given at a public session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized by the committee.

K. REPORTING BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

1. No measure or recommendation shall be reported from the committee unless a majority of the committee was actually present.

On the question of ordering a bill reported whenever a recorded vote is ordered or the yeas and nays are ordered the Chair may, in his discretion, postpone further proceedings on each such question to a designated time or place in the schedule on that day.

2. Any committee member at a meeting of the full committee or any member of the subcommittee involved may make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

3. (A) Each committee report shall include in its text a statement of the reported legislation's intent or purpose, need, the results of motions to report, including number of yeas and nays, a 5-year cost estimate, oversight statement, inflationary impact statement, any statement required by sections 308(a) and 403 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, administration or departmental position (if any), and changes in existing law, in addition to such other provisions as the Chair deems necessary.

(B) If, at the time of approval of any measure or matter by the committee, any member of the committee gives notice of intention to file supplemental, minority or additional views, that member shall be entitled to not less than 3 calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) in which to file such views, in writing and signed by that member, with the clerk of the committee. All such views so filed by one or more members of the committee shall be included within, and shall be a part of, the report filed by the Committee with respect to that measure or matter. The report of the committee upon that measure or matter shall be printed in a single volume which—

(1) shall include all supplemental, minority, and additional views which have been submitted by the time of the filing of the report, and

(2) shall bear upon its cover a recital that any such supplemental, minority, or additional views (and any material submitted pursuant to the requirements of sections 308(a) and 403 of the Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974) are included as part of the report. This subparagraph does not preclude—

(a) the immediate filing or printing of a committee report unless timely request for the opportunity to file supplemental, minority, or additional views has been made as provided by this subparagraph; or

(b) the filing by the committee of any supplemental report upon any measure or matter which may be required for the correction of any technical error in a previous report made by the committee upon that measure or matter.

4. (A) It shall be the duty of the Chair of the committee to report or cause to be reported promptly to the House any measure approved by the committee and to take or cause to be taken necessary steps to bring a matter to a vote.

(B) In any event, the report of the committee on any measure which has been approved by the committee shall be filed within 7 calendar days (exclusive of days on which the House is not in session) after the day on which there has been filed with the clerk of the committee a written request, signed by a majority of the members of the committee, for the reporting of that measure. Upon the filing of any such request, the clerk of the committee shall transmit immediately to the Chair of the committee notice of the filing of that request.

L. POWER TO SIT AND ACT; SUBPOENA POWER

1. For the purpose of carrying out any of its functions and duties under these rules, the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized—

(A) to sit and act at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, and to hold such hearings, and

(B) subject to (2)(A) of this rule, to require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memorandums, papers, and documents as it deems necessary. The Chair of the committee, or any member designated by the Chair, may administer oaths to any witness.

2. (A) A subpoena may be issued by the committee or subcommittee under (1)(B) of this rule in the conduct of any investigation or activity or series of investigations or activities, only when authorized by a majority of the members voting, a majority being present, and authorized subpoenas shall be signed by the Chair of the full committee or by any member designated by the committee. When authorizing subpoenas, the committee may delegate to the committee Chair the responsibility of deciding what materials are to be listed in the subpoena and the names of the individuals or officials to be subpoenaed.

(B) Compliance with any subpoena issued by a committee or subcommittee under (1)(B) of this rule may be enforced only as authorized or directed by the House.

M. BROADCASTING OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS AND MEETINGS

Whenever any hearing or meeting conducted by the committee or any subcommittee is open to the public, the committee or subcommittee may permit, by majority vote of the committee or subcommittee, that hearing or meeting to be covered, in whole or in part, by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by any of such methods of coverage, but only under the following rules:

1. If the television or radio coverage of the hearing or meeting is to be presented to the public as live coverage, that coverage shall be conducted and presented without commercial sponsorship.

2. No witness served with a subpoena by the committee shall be required against his or her will to be photographed at any hearing or to give evidence or testimony while the broadcasting of that hearing, by radio or television, is being conducted. At the request of any such witness who does not wish to be subjected to radio, television, or still photography coverage, all lenses shall be covered and all microphones used for coverage turned off.

3. The allocation among the television media of the positions of the number of television cameras permitted by the committee or subcommittee Chair in a hearing or meeting room shall be in accordance with fair and equitable procedures devised by the Executive Committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

4. Television cameras shall be placed so as not to obstruct in any way the space between any witness giving evidence or testimony and any member of the committee or the visibility of that witness and that member to each other.

5. Television cameras shall operate from fixed positions but shall not be placed in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing or meeting by the other media.

6. Equipment necessary for coverage by the television and radio media shall not be installed in, or removed from, the hearing or meeting room while the committee is in session.

7. Floodlights, spotlights, strobelights, and flashguns shall not be used in providing any methods of coverage of the hearing on meeting, except that the television media may install additional lighting in the hearing or meeting room, without cost to the Government, in order to raise the ambient lighting level in the hearing or meeting room to the lowest level necessary to provide adequate television coverage of the hearing or meeting at the then current state of the art of television coverage.

8. Not more than five press photographers shall be permitted to cover a hearing or meeting by still photography. In the selection of these photographers, preference shall be given to photographers from Associated Press Photos and United Press International Newspictures. If requests are made by more of the media than will be permitted by the committee or subcommittee Chair for coverage of the hearing or meeting by still photography, that coverage shall be made on the basis of a fair and equitable pool arrangement devised by the Standing Committee of Press Photographers.

9. Photographers shall not position themselves, at any time during the course of the hearing or meeting, between the witness table and the members of the committee.

10. Photographers shall not place themselves in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing by the other media.

11. Personnel providing coverage by the television and radio media shall be then currently accredited to the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

12. Personnel providing coverage by still photography shall be then currently accredited to the Press Photographers' Gallery.

13. Personnel providing coverage by the television and radio media and by still photography shall conduct themselves and their coverage activities in an orderly and unobtrusive manner.

N. COMMITTEE STAFFS

1. Subcommittee staffs: From the funds provided for the appointment of committee staff pursuant to primary and additional expense resolutions of the House:

(A) The Chair of each standing subcommittee is authorized to appoint one staff member who shall serve at the pleasure of the subcommittee Chair.

(B) The ranking minority party member of each standing subcommittee is authorized to appoint one staff person who shall serve at the pleasure of the ranking minority party member.

(C) The staff members appointed pursuant to the provisions of subparagraphs (A) and (B) shall be compensated at a rate determined by the subcommittee Chair not to exceed (a) 75 per centum of the maximum established in 2(C) of this rule or (b) the rate paid the staff member appointed pursuant to 1(A) of this rule.

(D) No member shall appoint more than one person pursuant to 1(A) and 1(B) of this rule.

(E) The staff positions made available to the subcommittee Chair and ranking minority party members pursuant to 1(A) and 1(B) of this rule shall be made available from the staff positions provided under clause 6 of Rule XI of the House unless such staff positions are made available pursuant to a primary or additional expense resolution. 2. Committee staffs:

(A)(1) Subject to subparagraph 2(A)(2) of this rule and paragraph 2(D) of this rule, the committee may appoint, by majority vote of the committee, not more than 18 professional staff members. Each professional staff member appointed under this subparagraph shall be assigned to the Chair and the ranking minority party member of such committee, as the committee considers advisable.

(2) Subject to 2(D) of this rule, whenever a majority of the minority party members of the committee so request, not more than six persons may be selected, by majority vote of the minority party members, for appointment by the committee as professional staff members from among the number authorized by 2(A)(1) of this rule. The committee shall appoint any persons so selected whose character and qualifications are acceptable to a majority of the committee. If the committee determines that the character and qualifications of any person so selected are unacceptable to the committee, a majority of the minority party members may select other persons for appointment by the committee to the professional staff until such appointment is made. Each professional staff member appointed under this subparagraph shall be assigned to such committee business as the minority party members of the committee consider advisable.

(3) The professional staff members of the committee—

(a) shall be appointed on a permanent basis, without regard to race, creed, sex, or age, and solely on the basis of fitness to perform the duties of their respective positions;

(b) shall not engage in any work other than committee business; and

(c) shall not be assigned any duties other than those pertaining to committee business.

(4) Services of the professional staff members of the committee may be terminated by majority vote of the committee.

(B)(1) The clerical staff of the full committee shall consist of not more than 12 clerks, to be attached to the office of the Chair, to the ranking minority party member, and to the professional staff, as the committee considers advisable. Subject to 2(B)(2) and 2(D) of this rule, the clerical staff shall be appointed by majority vote of the committee, without regard to race, creed, sex, or age. Except as provided by 2(B) of this rule, the clerical staff shall handle committee correspondence and stenographic work both for the committee staff and for the Chair and the ranking minority party member on matters related to committee work.

(2) Subject to 2(D) of this rule, whenever a majority of the minority party members of the committee so request, four persons may be selected, by majority vote of the minority party members, for appointment by the committee to positions on the clerical staff from among the number of clerks authorized by 2(B)(1) of this rule. The committee shall appoint to those positions any person so selected whose character and qualifications are acceptable to a majority of the committee. If the committee determines that the character and qualifications of any person so selected are unacceptable to the committee, a majority of the minority party members may select other persons for appointment by the committee to the position involved on the clerical staff until such appointment is made. Each clerk appointed under this subparagraph shall handle committee correspondence and stenographic work for the minority party members of the committee and for any members of the professional staff appointed under 2(A)(2) of this rule on matters related to committee work.

(3) Services of the clerical staff members of the full committee may be terminated by majority vote of the committee.

(C) Each employee on the professional staff, and each employee on the clerical staff, of the committee, is entitled to pay at a single per annum gross rate, to be fixed by the Chair, which does not exceed the highest rate of basic pay, as in effect from time to time, of level V of the Executive Schedule in section 5316 of title 5, United State Code, except that 2 professional staff members of the committee shall be entitled to pay at a single per annum gross rate to be fixed by the Chair, which does not exceed the highest rate of basic pay, as in effect from time to time, of level IV of the Executive Schedule, section 5315 of title 5, United States Code.

(D) If a request for the appointment of a minority professional staff member under paragraph (A), or a minority clerical staff member under paragraph (B), is made when no vacancy exists to which that appointment may be made, the committee nevertheless shall appoint, under paragraph (A) or paragraph (B), as applicable, the person selected by the minority and acceptable to the Committee. The person so appointed shall serve as an additional member of the professional staff or the clerical staff, as the case may be, of the committee, and shall be paid from the contingent fund, until such a vacancy (other than a vacancy in the position of head of the professional staff, by whatever title designated) occurs, at which time that person shall be deemed to have been appointed to that vacancy. If such vacancy occurs on the professional staff when seven or more persons have been so appointed who are eligible to fill that vacancy, a majority of the minority party members shall designate which of those persons shall fill that vacancy.

(E) Each staff member appointed pursuant to request by minority party members under paragraph (A) or (B), and each staff member appointed to assist minority party members of a committee pursuant to an expense resolution, shall be accorded equitable treatment with respect to the fixing of his or her rate of pay, the assignment to him or her of work facilities, and the accessibility to him or her of committee records.

(F) Paragraphs (A) and (B) shall not be construed to authorize the appointment of additional professional or clerical staff members of the committee pursuant to a request under either of such paragraphs by the minority party members of that committee if six or more professional staff members or four or more clerical staff members provided for in paragraph (A)(1) or paragraph (B)(1) as the case may be, who are satisfactory to a majority of the minority party members, are otherwise assigned to assist the minority party members.

(G) Notwithstanding paragraphs (A)(2) and (B)(2), the committee may employ nonpartisan staff, in lieu of or in addition to committee staff designated exclusively for the majority or minority party, upon an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the minority party.

O. REFERRAL OF BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND OTHER MATTERS TO SUBCOMMITTEES

1. All the legislation and other matters referred to the committee shall be referred to the subcommittee on appropriate jurisdiction within 2 weeks unless, by majority vote of the majority members of the full committee, consideration is to be by the full committee.

A bill, resolution, or other matter referred to a subcommittee in accordance with this rule may be recalled therefrom at any time by a vote of the majority members of the committee for the committee's direct consideration or for reference to another subcommitee.

If a joint resolution of disapproval of a council act is introduced in the House during the first 15 legislative days of layover, the resolution shall be referred to the subcommittee of appropriate jurisdiction. If the joint resolution is introduced during the last 15 days of congressional layover, that matter shall be kept at the full committee level with such comments from the subcommittee as they may wish to give.

2. The Chair may refer a matter simultaneously to two or more subcommittees for concurrent consideration or for consideration in sequence (subject to appropriate time limitations in the case of any subcommittee after the first) or divide the matter into two or more parts (reflecting different subjects and jurisdictions) and refer each such part to a different subcommittee.

3. Should a subcommittee fail to report back to the full committee on any measure within a reasonable time, the Chair may withdraw the measure from such subcommittee and report that fact to the full committee for further disposition. In order to permit the full committee to take timely action on special resolutions, a subcommittee should complete action on a joint resolution of approval of a charter amendment under section 303(b) of the House Rule Act not later than 15 calendar days before the expiration of the 35-day period named in the House Rule Act. The subcommittee should complete action within 12 calendar days of the introduction of a joint resolution of disapproval of a council act relating to titles 22, 23 or 24 of the District of Columbia Code under subsection (c)(2) of section 602 of the Home Rule Act.

P. SUBCOMMITTEES

1. The full committee shall determine an appropriate ratio of majority to minority members for each subcommittee and shall establish the number of subcommittees, shall fix the jurisdiction of each subcommittee, and shall determine the size of each subcommittee.

2. Additional legislative subcommittees may be established by a majority of those voting, a quorum being present, of the full committee.

3. Each member shall be given an equal number of subcommittee assignments insofar as practicable.

4. Bills shall be assigned to subcommittees in accordance with the subject matter of the subcommittees.

5. Any member of the full committee may have the privilege of sitting with any subcommittee durings its hearings or deliberations and to participate but shall not have authority to vote on any matters before the subcommittee unless he or she is a member of such subcommittee.

6. Party representation on each subcommittee, including ex officio members, shall be not less favorable to the majority party than the ratio for the full committee.

Q. GENERAL OVERSIGHT RESPONSIBILITIES

The committee and each subcommittee shall review and study, on a continuing basis, the application, administration, execution, and effectiveness of those laws, or parts of laws, the subject matter of which is within the jurisdiction of the committee or the subcommittee, respectively, and the organization and operation of the Federal and District agencies and entities have responsibilities in or for the administration and execution thereof, in order to determine whether such laws and the programs thereunder are being implemented and carried out in accordance with the intent of the Congress and whether such programs should be continued, curtailed, or eliminated. In addition, the committee and each subcommittee shall review and study any conditions or circumstances which may indicate the necessity or desirability of enacting new or additional legislation within the jurisdiction of the committee or subcommittee, respectively (whether or not any bill or resolution has been introduced with respect thereto), and shall on a continuing basis undertake future research and forecasting on matters within the jurisdiction of the committee or subcommittee, respectively. Each subcommittee is required to conduct oversight in the area of the respective jurisdiction, to assist in carrying out the full committee's responsibilities under Rule X, cl. 2, of the House of Representatives. The establishment of an oversight subcommittee shall in no way limit the responsibility of the subcommittees with legislative jurisdiction from carrying out their oversight responsibilities.

R. ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS

1. The committee and each subcommittee shall, in its consideration of all bills and joint resolutions of a public character within its jurisdiction, insure that appropriations for continuing programs and activities of the Federal Government and the District of Columbia government will be made annually to the maximum extent feasible and consistent with the nature, requirements, and objectives of the programs and activities involved. For the purposes of this paragraph, a government agency includes the organizational units of government listed in clause 7(c) of Rule XIII of the House of Representatives.

2. The committee and each subcommittee shall review, from time to time, each continuing program within its jurisdiction for which appropriations are not made annually in order to ascertain whether such program could be modified so that appropriations therefor would be made annually.

S. POINTS OF ORDER

No point of order, other than a point of order that a quorum is not present, against the hearings or business procedures of the committee shall be sustained unless it is made in a timely fashion (1) at the commencement of the hearing or meeting, or (2) at the time such point of order first occurs. Any point of order not raised in a timely manner in subcommittee shall not be sustained in full committee.

T. NOTICE OF MEETINGS AND AGENDA

1. The committee and each subcommittee shall make public announcement of the date, place and subject matter of any committee hearing at least one week before the commencement of the hearing. If the committee determines that there is good cause to begin the hearing sooner, it shall make the announcement at the earliest possible day. Any announcement made under the subparagraph shall be promptly published in the Daily Digest and given to the House Information Systems.

2. The agenda for all committee meetings, setting out all items of business to be considered, including a copy of any measure or a summary of any measure and of any subcommittee amendments, shall be furnished each committee member by delivery to his or her office at least 2 full calendar days (excluding Saturday, Sunday and legal holidays) before the meeting. This requirement may be waived by a two-thirds vote, a quorum being present, of the committee.

3. No bill or other matter shall be brought up for hearing or other consideration except with the approval of the Chair or by a majority of those voting, a quorum being present; Provided, That any member (other than the Chair) making the motion for consideration under this rule has given 2 days' notice in writing to all members of the committee.

U. AMENDING COMMITTEE RULES

The committee rules may not be amended unless the member proposing the amendment gives 2 days' notice (excluding Saturday, Sunday and legal holidays) in writing of the text of the proposed change to all members.

V. OTHER PROCEDURES AND REGULATIONS

The Chair of the full committee may establish such other procedures and take such actions as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing rules or to facilitate the effective operation of the committee.

RULES OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. FASCELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to and in accordance with clause 2(a) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, I submit for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a copy of the Rules of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for the 101st Congress as adopted by the committee on February 1, 1989:

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS, 101ST CONGRESS

(Adopted February 1, 1989)

1. GENERAL PROVISIONS

The Rules of the House, and in particular, the committee rules enumerated in Clause 2 of Rule XI, are the rules of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to the extent applicable. The Chairman shall consult the Ranking Minority Member to the extent possible with respect to the business of the Committee. Each subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Affairs (hereinafter referred to as the "Committee") is a part of the Committee and is subject to the authority and direction of the Committee, and to its rules to the extent applicable.

2. DATE OF MEETING

The regular meeting date of the Committee shall be the first Tuesday of every month when the House is in session pursuant to Clause 2(b) of Rule XI of the House. Additional meetings may be called by the Chairman as he may deem necessary or at the request of a majority of the Members of the Committee in accordance with Clause 2(c) of Rule XI of the House of Representatives.

The determination of the business to be considered at each meeting shall be made by the Chairman subject to Clause 2(c) of Rule XI of the House of Representatives.

A regularly scheduled meeting need not be held if there is no business to be considered.

3. QUORUM

For purposes of taking testimony and receiving evidence, two Members shall constitute a quorum.

One-third of the Members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum for taking any action, with the following exceptions: (1) Reporting a measure or recommendation, (2) closing Committee meetings and hearings to the public, and (3) authorizing the issuance of subpoenas.

No measure or recommendation shall be reported to the House unless a majority of the Committee is actually present.

4. MEETINGS AND HEARINGS OPEN TO THE PUBLIC

(a) Each meeting for the transaction of business, including the markup of legislation, of the Committee or a subcommittee shall be open to the public except when the Committee or subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public. No person other than Members of the Committee and such congressional staff and such departmental representatives as they may authorize shall be present at any business or markup session which has been closed to the public. This subsection does not apply to open Committee hearings which are provided for by subsection (b) of this rule or any meeting that relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters.

(b)(1) Each hearing conducted by the Committee or a subcommittee shall be open to the public except when the Committee or subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of that hearing on that day shall be closed to the public because disclosure of testimony, evidence, or other matters to be considered would endanger the national security or would violate any law or rule of the House of Representatives. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, a majority of those present, there being in attendance the requisite number required under the rules of the Committee to be present for the purpose of taking testimony—

(A) may vote to close the hearing for the sole purpose of discussing whether testimony or evidence to be received would endanger the national security or violate paragraph (2) of this subsection; or

(B) may vote to close the hearing, as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

(2) Whenever it is asserted that the evidence or testimony at an investigatory hearing may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person—

(A) such testimony or evidence shall be presented in executive session, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection, if by a majority of those present, there being in attendance the requisite number required under the rules of the Committee to be present for the purpose of taking testimony, the Committee or subcommittee determines that such evidence or testimony may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person; and

(B) the Committee or subcommittee shall proceed to receive such testimony in open session only if a majority of the Members, a majority being present, determines that such evidence or testimony will not tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person.

(3) No Member of the House may be excluded from nonparticipatory attendance at any hearing of the Committee or a subcommittee unless the House of Representatives has by majority vote authorized the Committee or subcommittee, for purposes of a particular series of hearings, on a particular article of legislation or on a particular subject of investigation, to close its hearings to Members by the same procedures designated in this subsection for closing hearings to the public.

(4) The Committee or a subcommittee may by the procedure designated in this subsection vote to close 1 subsequent day of hearing.

(c) No congressional staff person shall be present at any meeting or hearing of the Committee or a subcommittee which has been closed to the public, and at which classified information will be involved, unless such person is authorized access to such classified information in accordance with Rule 20.

5. ANNOUNCEMENT OF HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

Public announcement shall be made of the date, place, and subject matter of any hearing or markup to be conducted by the Committee or a subcommittee at least 1 week before the commencement of that hearing or markup unless the Committee or subcommittee determines that there is good cause to begin meeting at an earlier date. Such determination may be made with respect to any hearing or markup by the Chairman or subcommittee chairman, as appropriate.

Public announcement of all hearings and markups shall be made at the earliest possible date and shall be published in the Daily Digest portion of the Congressional Record, and promptly entered into the committee scheduling service of the House Information Systems.

Members shall be notified by the Chief of Staff, whenever it is practicable, 1 week in advance of all meetings (including markups and hearings) and briefings of subcommittees and of the full Committee.

The agenda for each Committee and subcommittee meeting, setting out all items of business to be considered, including a copy of any bill or other document scheduled for markup, shall be furnished to each Committee or subcommittee Member by delivery to the Member's office at least 2 full calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) before the meeting, whenever possible.

6. WITNESSES

a. Interrogation of Witnesses

Insofar as practicable, witnesses shall be permitted to present their oral statements without interruption, questioning by the Committee Members taking place afterward. In recognizing Members, the Chairman may give preference to the Members on the basis of their arrival at the hearing, taking into consideration the majority and minority ratio of the Members actually present. A Member desiring to speak or ask a question shall address the Chairman and not the witness in order to insure orderly procedure.

Each Member may interrogate the witness for 5 minutes, the reply of the witness being included in the 5-minute period. After all Members have had an opportunity to ask questions, the round shall begin again under the 5-minute rule.

The Chairman shall take note of Members who are in their chairs when each day's hearing begins and, insofar as practicable, when the time occurs for interrogation, shall recognize each such Member ahead of all others.

b. Statements of Witnesses

So far as practicable, each witness shall file with the Committee, 48 hours in advance of his appearance, a written statement of his proposed testimony and shall make a brief oral summary of his views.

7. PREPARATION AND MAINTENANCE OF COMMITTEE RECORDS

An accurate stenographic record shall be made of all hearings and markup sessions. Members of the Committee and any witness may examine the transcript of his or her own remarks and may make any grammatical or technical changes that do not substantially alter the record. Any such Member or witness shall return the transcript to the Committee offices within 5 calendar days (not including Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) after receipt of the transcript, or as soon thereafter as is practicable.

Any information supplied for the record at the request of a Member of the Committee shall be provided to the Member when received by the Committee.

Transcripts of hearings and markup sessions (except for the record of a meeting or hearing which is closed to the public) shall be printed as soon as is practicable after receipt of the corrected versions, except that the Chairman may order the transcript of a hearing to be printed without the corrections of a Member or witness if the Chairman determines that such Member or witness has been afforded a reasonable time to correct such transcript and such transcript has not been returned within such time.

The records of the Committee at the National Archives and Records Administration shall be made available for public use in accordance with rule XXXVI of the Rules of the House of Representatives. The chairman shall notify the ranking minority member of any decision, pursuant to clause 3(b)(3) or clause 4(b) of the rule, to withhold a record otherwise available, and the matter shall be presented to the Committee for a determination on the written request of any member of the Committee.

8. EXTRANEOUS MATERIAL IN COMMITTEE HEARINGS

No extraneous material shall be printed in either body or appendixes to any Committee or subcommittee hearing, except matter which has been accepted for inclusion in the record during the hearing. Copies of bills and other legislation under consideration and responses to written questions submitted by Members shall not be considered extraneous material.

Extraneous material in either the body or appendixes to any hearing to be printed which would be in excess of eight printed pages (for any one submission) shall be accompanied by a written request to the Chairman, such written request to contain an estimate in writing from the Public Printer of the probable cost of publishing such material.

9. PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT OF COMMITTEE VOTES

The result of each rollcall vote in any meeting of the Committee shall be made available for inspection by the public at reasonable times at the Committee offices—including a description of the amendment, motion, order, or other proposition; the name of each Member voting for and against and whether by proxy or in person; and the Members present but not voting.

A rollcall vote shall be ordered on any question at the request of 20 percent of those present.

10. PROXIES

Proxy voting is permitted in the Committee and in subcommittees only under the following conditions:

The proxy authorization—

(a) Shall be in writing;

(b) Shall assert that the Member is absent on official business or is otherwise unable to be present at the meeting; and

(c) Shall be limited to a motion to report a bill or a resolution.

Each proxy to be effective shall be signed by the Member assigning his or her vote and shall contain the date and time of day that the proxy is signed. Proxies are not counted for a quorum.

11. PRIOR APPROVAL OF REPORTS

No Committee, subcommittee, or staff report, study, or other document which purports to express publicly the views, findings, conclusions, or recommendations of the Committee or the subcommittee may be released to the public or filed with the Clerk of the House unless approved by a majority of the Members of the Committee or subcommittee, as appropriate. In any case in which Clause 2(l)(5) of House Rule XI does not apply, each Member of the Committee or subcommittee shall be given an opportunity to have views or a disclaimer included as part of the material filed or released, as the case may be.

12. REPORTING BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Except in unusual circumstances, bills and resolutions will not be considered by the Committee unless and until the appropriate subcommittee has recommended the bill or resolution for Committee action, and will not be taken to the House for action unless and until the Committee has ordered reported such bill or resolution, a quorum being present. Unusual circumstances will be determined by the Chairman of the Committee, after consultation with such Members of the Committee as the Chairman deems appropriate.

13. STAFF SERVICES

The Committee staff shall be selected and organized so that it can provide a comprehensive range of professional services in the field of foreign affairs to the Committee, the subcommittees, and all its Members.

The staff shall include persons with training and experience in foreign affairs who have a variety of backgrounds and skills so as to make available to the Committee services of individuals who have a first-hand acquaintance with major countries and areas and with major aspects of U.S. overseas programs and operations.

It is intended that the skills and experience of all members of the Committee staff shall be available to all Members of the Committee.

(a) The professional and clerical employees of the Committee, except those assigned to the minority or to a subcommittee as provided below, shall be appointed, and may be removed, by the Chairman with the approval of the majority of the Members of the Committee. Their remuneration shall be fixed by the Chairman within the ceilings set in Clause 6(c) of Rule XI, and they shall be under the general supervision and direction of the Chairman. Staff assignments are to be authorized by the Chairman or by the Chief of Staff under the direction of the Chairman.

(b) The professional and clerical staff assigned to the minority shall be appointed and their remuneration determined as the minority Members of the Committee shall determine within the general ceiling in Clause 6(c) of Rule XI: Provided, however, That no minority staff person shall be compensated at a rate which exceeds that paid his or her majority party staff counterpart. Such staff shall be under the general supervision and direction of the ranking minority Member with the approval or consultation of the minority Members of the Committee.

(c) In the matter of subcommittee staffing:

(1) The chairman of each standing subcommittee of this Committee is authorized to appoint one staff member who shall serve at the pleasure of the subcommittee chairman.

(2) The ranking minority Member of each of six standing subcommittees on the Committee is authorized to appoint one staff person who shall serve at the pleasure of said ranking minority Member.

(3) The staff members appointed pursuant to the provisions of subparagraphs (1) and (2) shall be compensated at a rate determined by the subcommittee chairman not to exceed (A) 75 per centum of the maximum established in Paragraph (c) of Clause 6 of Rule XI of the Rules of the House or (B) the rate paid the staff member appointed pursuant to subparagraph (1) of this paragraph.

(4) No Member shall appoint more than one person pursuant to the above provisions.

(5) The staff positions made available to the ranking minority party Members pursuant to subparagaph (2) of this paragraph shall be made available from the staff positions provided under Clause 6 of Rule XI of the Rules of the House.

(a) The full Committee will handle the markup and reporting of general legislation relating to foreign assistance (including development assistance, security-related aid, and Public Law 480 programs abroad) or relating to the Peace Corps. Regional subcommittees will have responsibility with respect to foreign assistance as follows:

(1) The annual legislative programs of foreign assistance for each region shall be referred to the appropriate subcommittee for review and legislative recommendations, within a time frame to be set by the Committee.

(2) Those subcommittees shall be responsible for ongoing oversight of all foreign assistance activities affecting their region.

(3) Those subcommittees shall have the responsibility of annually reporting to the full Committee, on a timely basis, the findings and conclusions of their oversight, including specific recommendations for legislation relating to foreign assistance.

15. POWERS AND DUTIES OF SUBCOMMITTEES

Each subcommittee is authorized to meet, hold hearings, receive evidence, and report to the full Committee on all matters referred to it. Subcommittee chairmen shall set meeting dates after consultation with the Chairman of the full Committee and other subcommittee chairmen, with a view toward avoiding simultaneous scheduling of Committee or subcommittee meetings or hearings whenever possible. It shall be the practice of the Committee that meetings of subcommittees not be scheduled to occur simultaneously with meetings of the full Committee.

In order to insure orderly and fair assignment of hearing and meeting rooms, hearings and meetings should be arranged in advance with the Chairman through the Chief of Staff of the Committee.

The Chairman and the ranking minority Member of the full Committee may attend the meetings and participate in the activities of all subcommittees, except for voting and being counted for a quorum.

16. REFERRAL OF BILLS BY CHAIRMAN

Information so available for public inspection shall include a description of the amendment, motion, order, or other proposition and the name of each Member voting for and each Member voting against such amendment, motion, order, or proposition, and whether by proxy or in person, and the names of those Members present but not voting.

All subcommittee hearings, records, data, charts, and files shall be kept distinct from the congressional office records of the Member serving as chairman of the subcommittee. Such records shall be coordinated with the records of the full Committee, shall be the property of the House, and all Members of the House shall have access thereto.

19. MEETINGS OF SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMEN

The chairman shall call a meeting of the subcommittee chairmen on a regular basis not less frequently than once a month. Such a meeting need not be held if there is no business to conduct. It shall be the practice at such meetings to review the current agenda and activities of each of the subcommittees. Each majority party Member of the Committee shall have the right to attend such meetings.

20. ACCESS TO CLASSIFIED INFORMATION

It shall be the policy of the Committee to afford access to classified information under its control for its own Members and other Members of the House of Representatives.

AUTHORIZED PERSONS.—In accordance with the stipulations of the House Rules, all Members of the House shall be construed to be persons authorized to have access to classified information within the possession of the Committee.

Members of the Committee staff shall be construed to be authorized access to classified information within the possession of the Committee (1) when they have the proper clearances, and (2) when they have a demonstrable "need to know". The decision on whether a given staff member has a "need to know" will be made on the following basis:

(a) In the case of the full Committee majority staff, by the Chairman, acting through the Chief of Staff;

(b) In the case of the full Committee minority staff, by the ranking minority Member of the Committee, acting through the Minority Chief of Staff;

(c) In the case of subcommittee majority staff, by the Chairman of the subcommittee;

(d) In the case of the subcommittee minority staff, by the ranking minority Member of the subcommittee.

No other individuals shall be considered authorized persons, unless so designated by the Committee Chairman.

DESIGNATED PERSONS.—Each Committee Member is permitted to designate one member of his or her staff as having the right of access to classified information in the "confidential" category. Such designated persons must have the proper security clearance and a "need to know" as determined by his or her principal. Upon request of a Committee Member in specific instances, a designated person also shall be permitted access to information classified "secret" which has been furnished to the Committee pursuant to section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act, as amended. Designation of a staff person shall be by letter from the Committee Member to the Committee Chairman.

LOCATION.—Classified information will be kept in secure safes in the Committee rooms. All materials bearing the designation "top secret" must be kept in secured safes located in the main Committee offices, 2170 Rayburn House Office Building. "Top Secret" materials may not be taken from that location for any purpose.

Materials bearing designations "confidential" or "secret" may be taken from Committee offices to other Committee offices and hearing rooms by Members of the Committee and authorized Committee staff in connection with hearings and briefings of the Committee or its subunits for which such information is deemed to be essential. Removal of such information from the Committee offices shall be only with the permission of the Chairman of the full Committee, under procedures designed to insure the safe handling and storage of such information at all times.

(a) Authorized or designated persons will be admitted to the reading room after inquiring of the Chief of Staff or an assigned staff member. The reading room will be open during regular Committee hours.

(b) Authorized or designated persons will be required to identify themselves, to identify the documents or information they wish to view, and to sign the Classified Materials Log, which is kept with the classified information.

(c) No photocopying or other exact reproduction, oral recording, or reading by telephone, of such classified information is permitted.

(d) The assigned staff member will be present in the reading room at the option of the authorized person. Such staff member will be responsible for maintaining a log which identifies (1) authorized and designated persons seeking access, (2) the classified information requested, and (3) the time of arrival and departure of such persons. The assigned staff member will also assure that the classified materials are returned to the proper location.

(e) The Classified Materials Log will contain a statement acknowledged by the signature of the authorized or designated person that he or she has read the Committee rules and will abide by them.

DIVULGENCE.—Any classified information to which access has been gained through the Committee may not be divulged to any unauthorized person in any way, shape, form, or manner. Apparent violations of this rule should be reported to the Chairman of the full Committee at once, and by him to the full Committee as promptly as possible.

TECHNICAL SECURITY COUNTERMEASURES.—Committee rooms and equipment shall be maintained in accordance with such technical security standards as the Chairman deems necessary to safeguard classified information from unauthorized disclosure. Such standards may include requirements for technical security monitoring during closed sessions involving classified information, conducted under the direction and control of the Chairman by personnel responsible to the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives.

OTHER REGULATIONS.—So long as they do not conflict with any of the rules herein set down, the Chairman of the full Committee may establish other regulations and procedures as in his judgment may be necessary to safeguard classified information under the control of the Committee. Members of the Committee will be given notice of any such regulations and procedures promptly. They may be modified or waived in any or all particulars by a majority vote of the full Committee. Furthermore, any additional regulations and procedures should be incorporated into the written rules of the Committee at the earliest opportunity.

21. BROADCASTING OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS AND MEETINGS

When requested by the Superintendent of the House Radio and Television Gallery and upon approval by the Committee or its subcommittees, all Committee and subcommittee hearings which are open to the public may be covered, in whole or in part, by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by any such methods of coverage: Provided, That such request is submitted to the Committee or its subcommittees not later than 4 p.m. of the day preceding such hearings.

The Chairman of the full Committee or the chairmen of the subcommittees are authorized to determine on behalf of the full Committee or its subcommittees respectively whether hearings which are open may be broadcast, unless the Committee or its subcommittees respectively by majority vote determine otherwise. The Committee or subcommittee chairman shall determine, in his discretion, the number of television and still cameras permitted in a hearing or meeting room.

Such coverage shall be in accordance with the following requirements (Section 116(b) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970; Clause 3(f) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives):

(a) If the television or radio coverage of the hearing or meeting is to be presented to the public as live coverage, that coverage shall be conducted and presented without commercial sponsorship.

(b) No witness served with a subpoena by the Committee shall be required against his will to be photographed at any hearing or to give evidence or testimony while the broadcasting of that hearing, by radio or television, is being conducted. At the request of any such witness who does not wish to be subjected to radio, television, or still photography coverage, all lenses shall be covered and all microphones used for coverage turned off. This subparagraph is supplementary to Clause 2(k)(5) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives relating to the protection of the rights of witnesses.

(c) The allocation among cameras permitted by the Committee or subcommittee chairman in a hearing room shall be in accordance with fair and equitable procedures devised by the Executive Committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(d) Television cameras shall be placed so as not to obstruct in any way the space between any witness giving evidence or testimony and any Member of the Committee or its subcommittees or the visibility of that witness and that Member to each other.

(e) Television cameras shall operate from fixed positions but shall not be placed in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing by the other media.

(f) Equipment necessary for coverage by the television and radio media shall not be installed in, or removed from, the hearing or meeting room while the Committee or subcommittee is in session.

(g) Floodlights, spotlights, strobelights, and flashguns shall not be used in providing any method of coverage of the hearing or meeting, except that the television media may install additional lighting in the hearing room, without cost to the Government, in order to raise the ambient lighting level in the hearing room to the lowest level necessary to provide adequate television coverage to the hearing or meeting at the then current state of the art of television coverage.

(h) In the allocation of the number of still photographers permitted by the Committee or subcommittee chairman in a hearing or meeting room, preference shall be given to photographers from Associated Press Photos and United Press International Newspictures. If requests are made by more of the media than will be permitted by the Committee or subcommittee chairman for coverage of the hearing or meeting by still photography, that coverage shall be made on the basis of a fair and equitable pool arrangement devised by the Standing Committee of Press Photographers.

(i) Photographers shall not position themselves, at any time during the course of the hearing or meeting, between the witness table and the Members of the Committee or its subcommittees.

(j) Photographers shall not place themselves in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing by the other media.

(k) Personnel providing coverage by the television and radio media shall be then currently accredited to the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(l) Personnel providing coverage by still photography shall be then currently accredited to the Press Photographers' Gallery Committee of Press Photographers.

(m) Personnel providing coverage by the television and radio media and by still photography shall conduct themselves and their coverage activities in an orderly and unobtrusive manner.

22. SUBPOENA POWERS

A subpoena may be authorized and issued by the Committee or its subcommittees, in accord with House Rule XI, Clause 2(m), in the conduct of any investigation or series of investigations, only when authorized by a majority of the Members voting, a majority of the Committee or subcommittee being present. Pursuant to House Rules and under such limitations as the Committee may prescribe, the Chairman may be delegated the power to authorize and issue subpoenas in the conduct of any investigation or series of investigations. Authorized subpoenas shall be signed by the Chairman of the Committee or by any Member designated by the Committee.

23. RECOMMENDATION FOR APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES

Whenever the Speaker is to appoint a conference committee, the Chairman shall recommend to the Speaker as conferees those Members of the Committee who are primarily responsible for the legislation (including to the fullest extent feasible the principal proponents of the major provisions of the bill as it passed the House), who have actively participated in the Committee or subcommittee consideration of the legislation, and who agree to attend the meetings of the conference. With regard to the appointment of minority Members, the Chairman shall consult with the Ranking Minority Member.

24. OTHER PROCEDURES AND REGULATIONS

The Chairman of the full Committee may establish such other procedures and take such actions as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing rules or to facilitate the effective operation of the Committee. Any additional procedures or regulations may be modified or rescinded in any or all particulars by a majority vote of the full Committee.

RULES OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. DINGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to rule XI, clause 2(a) of the Rules of the House of Representatives, I am pleased to submit the rules of the Committee on Energy and Commerce for the 101st Congress for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. These rules were adopted by voice vote at the committee's organizational meeting on February 2, 1989.

RULES FOR THE COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE, U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, 101ST CONGRESS

Rule 1. Rules of the House. The Rules of the House are the rules of its committees and its subcommittees so far as is applicable, except that a motion to recess from day to day is a motion of high privilege in committee and subcommittees. Written rules adopted by the committee, not inconsistent with the Rules of the House, shall be binding on each subcommittee of the committee. Each subcommittee of the committee is part of the committee and is subject to the authority and direction of the committee. Rule XI of the Rules of the House, which pertains entirely to committee procedure, is incorporated and made a part of the rules of this committee, which are supplementary to the Rules of the House.

Rule 2. Time, Place of Meetings. (a) The committee shall meet on the fourth Tuesday of each month and at such other times as determined by the chairman, or pursuant to subparagraph (b), in Room 2123 of the Rayburn House Office Building, at 9:45 a.m. for the consideration of bills, resolutions, and other business, if the House is in session on that day. If the House is not in session on that day and the committee has not met during such month, the committee shall meet at such time and place on the first day thereafter when the House is in session.

(b) The chairman may call and convene, as he considers necessary, additional meetings of the committee for the consideration of any bill or resolution pending before the committee or for the conduct of other committee business. The committee shall meet for such purposes pursuant to that call of the chairman.

(c) If at least three members of the committee or subcommittee (whichever is applicable) desire that a special meeting of the committee or subcommittee (whichever is applicable) be called by the chairman or subcommittee chairman, those members may file in the offices of the committee their written request to the chairman or subcommittee chairman for that special meeting. Such request shall specify the measure or matter to be considered. Immediately upon the filing of the request, the clerk of the committee shall notify the chairman or subcommittee chairman of the filing of the request. If, within 3 calendar days after the filing of the request, the chairman or subcommittee chairman does not call the requested special meeting to be held within 7 calendar days after the filing of the request, a majority of the members of the committee or subcommittee (whichever is applicable) may file in the offices of the committee their written notice that a special meeting of the committee or subcommittee (whichever is applicable) will be held, specifying the date and hour thereof, and the measure or matter to be considered at that special meeting. The committee or subcommittee (whichever is applicable) shall meet on that date and hour. Immediately upon the filing of the notice, the clerk of the committee shall notify all members of the committee or subcommittee (whichever is applicable) that such meeting will be held and inform them of its date and hour and the measure or matter to be considered and only the measure or matter specified in that notice may be considered at that specified meeting.

(d) If the chairman of the committee or subcommittee is not present any any meeting of the committee or subcommittee, the ranking member of the majority party on the committee or subcommittee who is present shall preside at that meeting.

(e) Each meeting of the committee or any of its subcommittees for the transaction of business, including hearings and the markup of legislation, shall be open to the public except when the committee or subcommittee in open session and with a quorum present determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public. This paragraph does not apply to those special cases provided in the Rules of the House where closed sessions are otherwise provided.

(f) At least once a month, the chairman shall convene a meeting of the chairman of the subcommittees. The purpose of the meeting will be to discuss issues pending before the committee and the procedures for committee consideration of such matters. The discussion may include, among other items, the scheduling of hearings and meetings, questions of subcommittee jurisdiction and the conduct of joint subcommittee hearings.

Rule 3. Agenda. The agenda for each committee or subcommittee meeting (other than a hearing), setting out the date, time, place, and all items of business to be considered, shall be provided to each member of the committee by delivery to his office at least 36 hours in advance of such meeting.

Rule 4. Procedure. (a)(1) The date, time, place, and subject matter of any hearing of the committee or any of its subcommittees shall be announced at least 1 week in advance of the commencement of such hearing, unless the committee or subcommittee determines in accordance with such procedure as it may prescribe, that there is good cause to begin the hearing sooner.

(2)(A) The date, time, place, and subject matter of any meeting (other than a hearing) scheduled on a Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday when the House will be in session, shall be announced at least 36 hours in advance of the commencement of such meeting.

(B) The time, place, and subject matter of a meeting (other than a hearing or a meeting to which subparagraph (A) applies) shall be announced at least 72 hours in advance of the commencement of such meeting.

(b) Each witness who is to appear before the committee or subcommittee shall file with the clerk of the committee, at least two working days in advance of his appearance, fifty (50) copies of a written statement of his proposed testimony and shall limit his oral presentation at his appearance to a brief summary of his argument, unless this requirement, or any part thereof, is waived by the committee or subcommittee chairman presiding.

(c) The right to interrogate the witnesses before the committee or any of its subcommittees shall alternate between majority and minority members. Each member shall be limited to 5 minutes in the interrogation of witnesses until such time as each member who so desires has had an opportunity to question witnesses. No member shall be recognized for a second period of 5 minutes to interrogate a witness until each member of the committee present has been recognized once for that purpose. While the committee or subcommittee is operating under the 5-minute rule for the interrogation of witnesses, the chairman shall recognize, in order of appearance, members who were not present when the meeting was called to order after all members who were present when the meeting was called to order have been recognized in the order of seniority on the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be.

(d) No bill, recommendation, or other matter reported by a subcommittee shall be considered by the full committee unless the text of the matter reported, together with an explanation, has been available to members of the committee for at least 36 hours. Such explanation shall include a summary of the major provisions of the legislation, an explanation of the relationship of the matter to present law, and a summary of the need for the legislation. All subcommittee actions shall be reported promptly by the clerk of the committee to all members of the committee.

Rule 5. Waiver of Notice, Agenda, and Layover Requirements. Requirements of Rules 3, 4(a)(2), and 4(d) may be waived by a majority of those present and voting (a majority being present) of the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be.

Rule 6. Quorum. Testimony may be taken and evidence received at any hearing at which there are present not fewer than two members of the committee or subcommittee in question. In the case of a meeting other than a hearing, the number of members constituting a quorum shall be one-third of the members of the committee or subcommittee, except that a matter may not be reported by the committee or a subcommittee unless a majority of the members thereof is actually present.

Rule 7. Proxies. No vote by any member of the committee or any of its subcommittees with respect to any measure or matter may be cast by proxy unless a proxy authorization is given in writing by the member desiring to cast a proxy, which authorization shall assert that the member is absent on official business or is absent due to personal illness and is thus unable to be present at the meeting of the committee or subcommittee, and shall be limited to a specific measure or matter and any amendments or motions pertaining thereto. Each proxy to be effective shall be signed by the member assigning his/her vote and shall contain the date and time of day that the proxy is signed. No proxy shall be voted on a motion to adjourn or shall be counted to make a quorum or be voted unless a quorum is present.

Rule 8. Journal, Rollcalls. The proceedings of the committee shall be recorded in a journal which shall, among other things, show those present at each meeting, and include a record of the votes on any question on which a record vote is demanded and a description of the amendment, motion, order or other proposition voted. A copy of the journal shall be furnished to the ranking minority member. A record vote may be demanded by one-fifth of the members present or, in the apparent absence of a quorum, by any one member. No demand for a rollcall shall be made or obtained except for the purpose of procuring a record vote or in the apparent absence of a quorum. The result of each rollcall vote in any meeting of the committee shall be made available in the committee office for inspection by the public, as provided in Rule XI, clause 2(e) of the Rules of the House.

Rule 9. Filing of Committee Reports. If, at the time of approval of any measure or matter by this committee, any member or members of the committee should give notice of an intention to file supplemental, minority, or additional views, that member shall be entitled to not less than three (3) calendar days (exclusive of Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) in which to file such views in writing and signed by that member or members with the committee. All such views so filed shall be included within and shall be a part of the report filed by the committee with respect to that measure or matter.

Rule 10. Subcommittees. There shall be such standing subcommittees with such jurisdiction and size as determined by the majority party caucus of the committee and, in addition, a Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations. The jurisdiction, number, and size of the subcommittees shall be determined by the majority party caucus prior to the start of the bidding process for subcommittee chairmanships and assignments. Such subcommittees shall, to the maximum extent practicable, be of equal size. The Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations shall coordinate its work with the work of other standing subcommittees and shall maintain regular communication with the standing subcommittees and the chairman of the full committee in order to obtain advice on subjects for investigation. The standing subcommittees shall maintain regular communication with the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations to advise the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of subjects for investigation.

Rule 11. Powers and Duties of Subcommittees. Each subcommittee is authorized to meet, hold hearings, receive testimony, mark up legislation, and report to the committee on all matters referred to it. Subcommittee chairmen shall set hearing and meeting dates only with the approval of the chairman of the full committee with a view toward assuring availability of meeting rooms and avoiding simultaneous scheduling of committee and subcommittee meetings or hearings wherever possible.

Rule 12. Reference of Legislation and Other Matters. All legislation and other matters referred to the committee shall be referred to the subcommittee of appropriate jurisdiction immediately unless, by majority vote of the members of the full committee within five (5) legislative days, consideration is to be by the full committee. In the case of legislation or other matter within the jurisdiction of more than one subcommittee, the chairman of the committee shall have the same authority to refer such legislation or other matter to one or more subcommittees as the Speaker has under clause 5(c) of Rule X of the House of Representatives to refer a matter to one or more committees of the House. Such authority shall include the authority to refer such legislation or matter to an ad hoc subcommittee appointed by the chairman, with the approval of the committee, from the members of the subcommittees having legislative or oversight jurisdiction.

Rule 13. Ratio of Subcommittees. The majority caucus of the committee shall determine an appropriate ratio of majority to minority party members for each subcommittee and the chairman shall negotiate that ratio with the minority party, provided that the ratio of party members on each subcommittee shall be no less favorable to the majority than that of the full committee, nor shall such ratio provide for a majority of less than two majority members.

Rule 14. Subcommittee Membership. (a) Subject to the requirements of the Manual of the Democratic Caucus of the House of Representatives, each majority member other than the chairman of the full committee or the chairman of a subcommittee shall in order of committee seniority be entitled to membership on two subcommittees of that member's choice. A member (other than an ex officio member) may serve on more than two subcommittees only if such service is necessary in order to comply with Rule 13. Proceeding in order of seniority on the committee, each majority member, other than the chairman of the full committee and the chairmen of the several subcommittees, shall be entitled to select one subcommittee position each. The subcommittee selection process shall then continue in sequence of committee seniority, including the chairmen of the several subcommittees, for succeeding rounds of selection until all subcommittee positions are filled. The subcommittee selection process shall be conducted at a meeting of the majority party caucus of the committee held prior to any organizational meeting of the full committee. Subcommittee selections of each member shall be recorded by the clerk as made and shall be available for examination by the members.

(b) Minority subcommittee membership shall be selected as determined by the minority.

(c) The chairman and ranking minority member of the committee shall be ex officio members with voting privileges of each legislative subcommittee of the committee of which they are not assigned members. The ex officio members shall not be counted in determining a subcommittee quorum other than a quorum for the purpose of taking testimony.

Rule 15. Subcommittee Chairmen. (a)(1) Majority members of the committee shall have the right, in order of full committee seniority, to bid for subcommittee chairmanships. Any request for a subcommittee chairmanship shall be subject to approval by a majority of those present and voting, by secret ballot, in the majority party caucus of the committee. If the caucus rejects a subcommittee chairmanship bid, the next senior majority member may bid for the position as in the first instance. The subcommittee chairmen shall be elected by the full committee from nominations submitted by the majority party caucus of the committee.

(2) If the majority members of the committee shall determine to change the size of any subcommittee after the start of the bidding process, they may do so, but in that event, all previous action on the bidding process shall be expunged and the bidding process shall start anew.

(b) Subcommittee chairmen shall manage legislation reported from their subcommittees on the House floor.

(c) The chairman of the committee may make available to the chairman of any subcommittee office equipment and facilities which have been provided to him and for which he is personally responsible, subject to such terms and conditions as the chairman deems appropriate.

Rule 16. Committee Professional and Clerical Staff Appointments. (a) Whenever the chairman of the committee determines that any professional staff member appointed pursuant to the provisions of clause 6 of Rule XI of the House of Representatives, who is assigned to such chairman and not to the ranking minority member, by reason of such professional staff member's expertise or qualifications will be of assistance to one or more subcommittees in carrying out their assigned responsibilities, he may delegate such member to such subcommittees for such purpose. A delegation of a member of the professional staff pursuant to this subsection shall be made after consultation with the subcommittee chairmen and with the approval of the subcommittee chairman or chairmen involved.

(b) Professional staff members appointed pursuant to clause 6 of Rule XI of the House of Representatives, who are assigned to the ranking minority party member of the committee and not to the chairman of the committee, shall be assigned to such committee business as the minority party members of the committee consider advisable.

(c) In addition to the professional staff appointed pursuant to clause 6 of Rule XI of the House of Representatives, the chairman of the committee shall be entitled, subject to the approval of the majority party members of the committee, to make such appointments to the professional and clerical staff of the committee as may be provided within the budget approved for such purposes by the committee. Such appointee shall be assigned to such business of the full committee as the chairman of the committee considers advisable.

(d) Subcommittee chairmen, subject to the approval of the majority party members of the committee, shall be entitled to make such appointments to the professional and clerical staff of the committee as may be provided in the committee budget as provided for in rule 18 of these rules. Such professional and clerical appointees shall be delegated to the appropriate subcommittee for the purposes of assisting such subcommittee in the discharge of its assigned responsibilities and may be removed and their compensation fixed by the subcommittee chairman subject to the approval of the majority members of the committee.

(e) In addition to appointments made pursuant to other subsections of this rule, (1) the subcommittee chairman of each of the committee's subcommittees is authorized to appoint, in accordance with such rules as the majority party caucus may prescribe, one staff person who shall serve at the pleasure of such subcommittee chairman, and (2) the ranking minority member of each such subcommittee is authorized to appoint, in accordance with such rules as the minority party caucus may prescribe, one staff person who shall serve at the pleasure of such ranking minority member. Remuneration of any staff person appointed under this subsection shall be governed by paragraph (d) of clause 5 of Rule XI of the House of Representatives.

(f) Any contract for the temporary services or intermittent services of individual consultants or organizations to make studies or advise the committee or its subcommittees with respect to any matter within their jurisdiction shall be deemed to have been approved by a majority of the members of the committee if approved by the chairman and ranking minority member of the committee and, if funded by a subcommittee, by the chairman and ranking minority member of that subcommittee. Such approval shall not be deemed to have been given if at least one-third of the members of the committee request in writing that the committee formally act on such a contract, if the request is made within 10 days after the latest date on which such chairman or chairmen, and such ranking minority member or members, approve such contract.

Rule 17. Supervision, Duties of Staff. (a) The professional and clerical staff of the committee delegated to subcommittees of the committee pursuant to rule 16 shall be subject to the supervision and direction of the chairman of the subcommittee to which they are assigned with respect to matters before the subcommittee, who shall establish and assign the duties and responsibilities of such staff members and delegate such authority as he determines appropriate. The professional and clerical staff assigned to the minority shall be under the supervision and direction of the minority members of the committee, who may delegate such authority as they determine appropriate. Subject to subsection (b), the professional and clerical staff of the committee not delegated to a subcommittee pursuant to rule 16(d) or to the minority shall be under the supervision and direction of the chairman, who shall establish and assign the duties and responsibilities of such staff members and delegate such authority as he determines appropriate.

(b) The professional staff member who is assigned principal responsibility by a subcommittee chairman with respect to a matter before such subcommittee chairman's subcommittee shall continue to assume principal staff responsibility during any consideration before the full committee, the Rules Committee, the House, and Conference Committees of any matter which is reported by such subcommittee.

Rule 18. Committee and Subcommittee Budgets. (a) The chairman of the full committee and the chairmen of each standing subcommittee, after consultation with their respective ranking minority members, shall for each session of the Congress prepare a preliminary budget for the committee and each standing subcommittee respectively, with such budgets including necessary amounts for professional and clerical staff, travel, investigations, and miscellaneous expenses, and which shall be adequate to fully discharge their responsibilities for legislation and oversight. Thereafter, the chairman of the full committee, meeting with the chairmen of the subcommittees, shall combine such proposals into a committee budget, which shall state separately the budgeted amounts for the committee and for each of the subcommittees. Such budget shall be presented by the chairman to the majority party caucus of the committee and thereafter to the full committee for its approval.

(b) The chairman shall take whatever action is necessary to have the budget as finally approved by the committee duly authorized by the House. No proposed committee budget may be submitted to the House Administration Committee unless it has been presented to and approved by the majority party caucus and thereafter by the full committee. The chairman of the full committee or the chairmen of the standing subcommittees may authorize all necessary expenses in accordance with these rules and within the limits of their portion of the budget as approved by the House, but the chairman of the full committee shall permit no subcommittee to make an expenditure beyond its portion of the budget (as established in paragraph (a)) unless the chairman determines that such expenditure can be made without exceeding the amount authorized to the full committee by the House.

(c) Committee members shall be furnished a copy of each monthly report, prepared by the chairman for the Committee on House Administration, which shows expenditures made during the reporting period and cumulative for the year by committee and subcommittees, anticipated expenditures for the projected committee program, and detailed information on travel.

Rule 19. Broadcasting of Committee Hearings. Any meeting or hearing that is open to the public may be covered in whole or in part by radio or television or still photography, subject to the requirements of Rule XI, clause 3 of the Rules of the House of Representatives. At all such meetings or proceedings, coverage by radio, television or still photography will be allowed unless specifically forbidden by a record vote of the committee or subcommittee. The coverage of any hearing or other proceeding of the committee or any subcommittee thereof by television, radio, or still photography shall be under the direct supervision of the chairman of the committee, the subcommittee chairman, or other member of the committee presiding at such hearing or other proceeding and, for good cause, may be terminated by him.

Rule 20. Comptroller General Audits. The chairman of the committee is authorized to request verification examinations by the Comptroller General of the United States pursuant to Title V, Part A of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (Public Law 94-163), after consultation with the members of the committee.

Rule 21. Subpenas. The full committee, or any subcommittee, may authorize and issue a subpena under clause 2(m)(2)(A) of Rule XI of the House of Representatives, if authorized by a majority of the members voting of the committee or subcommittee (as the case may be), a quorum being present. In addition, the chairman of the full committee may authorize and issue subpoenas under such clause during any period for which the House has adjourned for a period in excess of three days. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the full committee, or any member of the committee authorized by such chairman, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

Rule 22. Travel of Members and Staff. (a) Consistent with the primary expense resolution and such additional expense resolutions as may have been approved, the provisions of this rule shall govern travel of committee members and staff. Travel to be reimbursed from funds set aside for the full committee for any member or any staff member shall be paid only upon the prior authorization of the chairman. Travel may be authorized by the chairman for any member and any staff member in connection with the attendance of hearings conducted by the committee or any subcommittee thereof and meetings, conferences and investigations which involve activities or subject matter under the general jurisdiction of the committee. Before such authorization is given there shall be submitted to the chairman in writing the following: (1) The purpose of the travel; (2) The dates during which the travel is to be made and the date or dates of the event for which the travel is being made; (3) The location of the event for which the travel is to be made; (4) The names of members and staff seeking authorization.

(b) In the case of travel of members and staff of a subcommittee to hearings, meetings, conferences, and investigations involving activities or subject matter under the legislative assignment of such subcommittee to be paid for out of funds allocated to such subcommittee, prior authorization must be obtained from the subcommittee chairman and the chairman. Such prior authorization shall be given by the chairman only upon the representation by the applicable chairman of the subcommittee in writing setting forth those items enumerated in (1), (2), (3), and (4) of paragraph (a).

(c) In the case of travel by minority party members and minority party professional staff for the purpose set out in (a) or (b), the prior approval, not only of the chairman but also of the ranking minority party member, shall be required. Such prior authorization shall be given by the chairman only upon the representation by the ranking minority party member in writing setting forth those items enumerated in (1), (2), (3), and (4) of paragraph (a).

RULES OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. BROOKS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of clause 2(a) of rule XI of the Rules of the House, I am submitting a copy of the Rules of Procedure for the 101st Congress adopted by the Committee on the Judiciary on February 7, 1989:

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY—RULES OF PROCEDURE

RULE I

The Rules of the House of Representatives are the rules of the Committee on the Judiciary and its subcommittees with the following specific additions thereto.

RULE II. COMMITTEE MEETINGS

(a) The regular meeting day of the Committee on the Judiciary for the conduct of its business shall be on Tuesday of each week while the Congress is in session.

(b) Additional meetings may be called by the Chairman and a regular meeting of the Committee may be dispensed with when, in the judgment of the Chairman, there is no need therefor.

(c) At least 24 hours (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) before each scheduled Committee or subcommittee meeting, each member of the Committee or subcommittee shall be furnished a list of the bill(s) and subject(s) to be considered and/or acted upon at the meeting. Bills or subjects not listed shall be subject to a point of order unless their consideration is agreed to by a two-thirds vote of the Committee or subcommittee.

(d) The Chairman, with such notice to the ranking Minority Member as is practicable, may call and convene, as he considers necessary, additional meetings of the Committee for the consideration of any bill or resolution pending before the Committee or for the conduct of other Committee business. The Committee shall meet for such purpose pursuant to that call of the Chairman.

(e) Committee and subcommittee meetings for the transaction of business, i.e., meetings other than those held for the purpose of taking testimony, shall be open to the public except when the Committee or subcommittee, by majority vote, determines otherwise.

(f) Every motion made to the Committee and entertained by the Chairman shall be reduced to writing upon the demand of any Member, and a copy made available to each Member present.

(g) In all subcommittee proceedings where a vote on a motion to report a bill to the full Committee results in a tie, such bill shall be reported to the full Committee without recommendation.

(h) For purposes of taking any action at a meeting of the full Committee or any subcommittee thereof, a quorum shall be constituted by the presence of not less than one-third of the Members of the Committee or subcommittee, except that a full majority of the Members of the Committee or subcommittee shall constitute a quorum for purposes of reporting a measure or recommendation from the Committee or subcommittee, closing a meeting to the public, or authorizing the issuance of a subpoena.

(i) A complete transcript shall be made of any full Committee meeting, or any portion thereof, upon the request of any Member of the Committee made before the close of business of the preceding day, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays.

RULE III. HEARINGS

(a) The Committee or any subcommittee shall make public announcement of the date, place, and subject matter of any hearing to be conducted by it on any measure or matter at least one week before the commencement of that hearing, unless the Committee or the subcommittee before which such hearing is scheduled, determines that there is good cause to begin such hearing at an earlier date, in which event it shall make public announcement at the earliest possible date.

(b) Committee and subcommittee hearings shall be open to the public except when the Committee or subcommittee, by majority vote, determines otherwise.

(c) For purposes of taking testimony and receiving evidence before any subcommittee, a quorum shall be constituted by the presence of two Members. For purposes of taking testimony and receiving evidence before the full Committee, a quorum shall be constituted by the presence of 10 Members.

(d) In the course of any hearing each Member shall be allowed five minutes for the interrogation of a witness until such time as each Member who so desires has had an opportunity to question the witness.

RULE IV. PROXY VOTING

A vote by any Member of the Committee, with respect to any measure or matter being considered in the Committee or in subcommittee, may be cast by proxy if the proxy authorization is in writing, asserts that the Member is absent on official business or is otherwise unable to be present at the meeting of the Committee, designates the person who is to execute the proxy authorization, and is limited to a specific measure or matter and any amendments or motion pertaining thereto; except that a Member may authorize a general proxy for motions to recess, adjourn or other procedural matters. Each proxy to be effective shall be signed by the Member assigning his or her vote and shall contain the date and time that the proxy is signed. Proxies may not be counted for a quorum.

RULE V. BROADCASTING

When approved by a majority vote, an open meeting or hearing of the Committee or a subcommittee may be covered, in whole or in part, by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by any of such methods of coverage, subject to the provisions of House Rule XI, clause (3). In order to enforce the provisions of said rule or to maintain an acceptable standard of dignity, propriety, and decorum, the Chairman may order such alteration, curtailment, or discontinuance of coverage as he determines necessary.

RULE VI. STANDING SUBCOMMITTEES

(a) There shall be seven standing subcommittees of the Committee on the Judiciary, with jurisdictions as follows:

(b) The Chairman of the Committee and the ranking Minority Member thereof shall be ex officio Members, but not voting members, of each subcommittee to which such Chairman or ranking Minority Member has not been assigned by resolution of the Committee. Ex officio Members shall not be counted as present for purposes of constituting a quorum at any hearing or meeting of such subcommittee.

RULE VII. POWERS AND DUTIES OF SUBCOMMITTEES

Each subcommittee is authorized to meet, hold hearings, receive evidence, and report to the full Committee on all matters referred to it or under its jurisdiction. Subcommittee chairmen shall set dates for hearings and meetings of their respective subcommittees after consultation with the chairman and other subcommittee chairmen with a view toward avoiding simultaneous scheduling of full Committee and subcommittee meetings or hearings whenever possible.

RULE VIII. NON-LEGISLATIVE REPORTS

No report of the Committee or a subcommittee which does not accompany a measure or matter for consideration by the House shall be published unless all Members of the Committee or subcommittee issuing the report shall have been apprised of such report and been given the opportunity to give notice of intention to file supplemental, additional, or dissenting views as part of the report. In no case shall the time in which to file such views be less than three calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays).

RULE IX. COMMITTEE RECORDS

The records of the Committee at the National Archives and Records Administration shall be made available for public use in accordance with Rule XXXVI of the Rules of the House of Representatives. RULES OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. HAWKINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 2(a) of House rule XI, I submit for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the rules of the Committee on Education and Labor for the 101st Congress, as adopted at the committee's organizational meeting on February 2, 1989:

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

RULE 1. REGULAR AND SPECIAL MEETINGS.—(a) Regular meetings of the committee shall be held on the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month at 9:45 a.m., while the Congress is in session. When the Chairman believes that the committee will not be considering any bill or resolution before the committee and that there is no other business to be transacted at a regular meeting, he will give each member of the committee, as far in advance of the day of the regular meeting as the circumstances make practicable, a written notice to that effect; and no committee meeting shall be held on that day.

(b) The Chairman may call and convene, as he considers necessary, additional meetings of the committee for the consideration of any bill or resolution pending before the committee or for the conduct of other committee business. The committee shall meet for such purposes pursuant to that call of the Chairman.

(c) If at least three members of the committee desire that a special meeting of the committee be called by the Chairman, those members may file in the offices of the committee their written request to the Chairman for that special meeting. Immediately upon the filing of the request, the staff director of the committee shall notify the Chairman of the filing of the request. If, within three calendar days after the filing of the request, the Chairman does not call the requested special meeting to be held within seven calendar days after the filing of the request, a majority of the members of the committee may file in the offices of the committee their written notice that a special meeting of the committee will be held, specifying the date and hour thereof, and the measure or matter to be considered at that special meeting. The committee shall meet on that date and hour. Immediately upon the filing of the notice, the staff director of the committee shall notify all members of the committee that such meeting will be held and inform them of its date and hour and the measure or matter to be considered; and only the measure or matter specified in that notice may be considered at that special meeting.

(d) All legislative meetings of the committee and its subcommittees shall be open. No business meeting of the committee, other than regularly scheduled meetings, may be held without each member being given reasonable notice. Such meeting shall be called to order and presided over by the Chairman, or in the absence of the Chairman, by the ranking majority party member of the committee present.

RULE 2. QUESTIONING OF WITNESSES.—Committee members may question witnesses only when they have been recognized by the Chairman for that purpose, and only for a 5-minute period until all members present have had an opportunity to question a witness. The 5-minute period for questioning a witness by any one member can be extended only with the unanimous consent of all members present. The questioning of witnesses in both committee and subcommittee hearings shall be initiated by the Chairman, followed by the ranking minority party member and all other members alternating between the majority and minority party. In recognizing members to question witnesses in this fashion, the Chairman shall take into consideration the ratio of the majority to minority party members present and shall establish the order of recognition for questioning in such a manner as not to place the members of the majority party in a disadvantageous position. The Chairman may accomplish this by recognizing two majority party members for each minority party member recognized.

RULE 3. RECORDS AND ROLLCALLS.—(a) Written records shall be kept of the proceedings of the committee and of each subcommittee, including a record of the votes on any question on which a rollcall is demanded. The result of each such rollcall vote shall be made available by the committee or subcommittee for inspection by the public at reasonable times in the offices of the committee or subcommittee. Information so available for public inspection shall include a description of the amendment, motion, order, or other proposition and the name of each member voting for and each member voting against such amendment, motion, order, or proposition, and whether by proxy or in person, and the names of those members present by not voting. A record vote may be demanded by one-fifth of the members present or, in the apparent absence of a quorum, by any one member.

(b) In accordance with Rule XXXVI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, any official permanent record of the Committee (including any record of a legislative, oversight, or other activity of the Committee or any subcommittee shall be made available for public use if such record has been in existence for 30 years, except that—

(1) any record that the Committee (or a subcommittee) makes available for public use before such record is delivered to the Archivist under clause 2 of Rule XXXVI of the rules of the House of Representatives shall be made available immediately, including any record described in subsection (a) of this Rule;

(2) any investigative record that contains personal data relating to a specific living individual (the disclosure of which would be an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy), any administrative record with respect to personnel, and any record with respect to a hearing closed pursuant to clause 2(g)(2) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives shall be available if such record has been in existence for 50 years; or

(3) except as otherwise provided by order of the House, any record of the Committee for which a time, schedule, or condition for availability is specified by order of the Committee (entered during the Congress in which the record is made or acquired by the Committee) shall be made available in accordance with the order of the Committee.

(c) The official permanent records of the Committee includes noncurrent records of the Committee (including subcommittees) delivered by the Clerk of the House of Representatives to the Archivist of the United States for preservation at the National Archives and Records Administration, which are the property of and remain subject to the rules and orders of the House of Representatives.

(d)(1) Any order of the Committee with respect to any matter described in paragraph (2) of this subsection shall be adopted only if the notice requirements of Committee Rule 19(d) have been met, a quorum of a majority of the Members of the Committee is present at the time of the vote, and a majority of those present and voting approve the adoption of the order, which shall be submitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, together with any accompanying report.

(2) This subsection applies to any order of the Committee which—

(A) provides for the nonavailability of any record subject to subsection (b) of this rule for a period longer than the period otherwise applicable; or

(B) is subsequent to, and constitutes a later order under clause 4(b) of Rule XXXVI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, regarding a determination of the Clerk of the House of Representatives with respect to authorizing the Archivist of the United States to make available for public use the records delivered to the Archivist under clause 2 of Rule XXXVI of the Rules of the House of Representatives; or

(C) specifies a time, schedule, or condition for availability pursuant to subsection (b)(3) of this Rule.

RULE 4. STANDING SUBCOMMITTEES: SIZE, RATIO, AND JURISDICTION.—(a) There shall be eight standing subcommittees with the following jurisdictions:

In the latter event, the Chairman or the subcommittee chairman, as the case may be, shall make such public announcement at the earliest possible date. The staff director of the committee shall promptly notify the Daily Digest Clerk of the Congressional Record as soon as possible after such public announcement is made.

(b) So far as practicable, each witness who is to appear before the committee or a subcommittee shall file with the staff director of the committee, at least 24 hours in advance of his appearance, a written statement of his proposed testimony, together with a brief summary thereof, and shall limit his oral presentation to a summary of his statement. No such meetings or hearings, however, shall be held outside of Washington, D.C. or during a recess or adjournment of the House without the prior authorization of the committee Chairman or a majority of a quorum of the subcommittee. Where feasible and practicable, 14 days notice will be given of such meeting or hearing.

(b) One-third of the members of the committee or subcommittee shall constitute a quorum for taking any action other than amending committee rules, closing a meeting from the public, reporting a measure or recommendation, or in the case of the committee authorizing a subpena. For the enumerated actions, a majority of the committee or subcommittee shall constitute a quorum. Any two members shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of taking testimony and receiving evidence.

(c) In the absence of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, the ranking majority party member present shall preside.

(d) As far as practicable, when a bill or resolution is being considered by the committee or a subcommittee, members shall provide the clerk in a timely manner a sufficient number of written copies of any amendment offered, so as to enable each member present to receive a copy thereof prior to taking action. A copy of each such amendment shall be maintained in the public records of the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be.

RULE 15. REPORTS OF SUBCOMMITTEES.—(a) Whenever a subcommittee has ordered a bill, resolution, or other matter to be reported to the committee, the chairman of the subcommittee reporting the bill, resolution, or matter to the committee, or any member authorized by the subcommittee to do so, may report such bill, resolution, or matter to the committee. It shall be the duty of the chairman of the subcommittee to report or cause to be reported promptly such bill, resolution, or matter, and to take or cause to be taken the necessary steps to bring such bill, resolution, or matter to a vote.

(b) In any event, the report, described in the proviso in subsection (d) of this rule, of any subcommittee on a measure which has been approved by the subcommittee shall be filed within seven calendar days (exclusive of days on which the House is not in session) after the day on which there has been filed with the staff director of the committee a written request, signed by a majority of the members of the subcommittee, for the reporting of that measure. Upon the filing of any such request, the staff director of the committee shall transmit immediately to the chairman of the subcommittee a notice of the filing of that request.

(c) All committee or subcommittee reports printed pursuant to legislative study or investigation and not approved by a majority vote of the committee or subcommittee, as appropriate, shall contain the following disclaimer on the cover of such report:

"This report has not been officially adopted by the Committee on Education and Labor (or pertinent subcommittee thereof) and may not therefore necessarily reflect the views of its members."

(d) Bills, resolutions, or other matters favorably reported by a subcommittee shall automatically be placed upon the agenda of the committee as of the time they are reported and shall be considered by the full committee in the order in which they were reported unless the committee shall by majority vote otherwise direct. No bill or resolution or other matter reported by a subcommittee shall be considered by the full committee unless it has been in the hands of all members at least 48 hours prior to such consideration. When a bill is reported from a subcommittee, such measure shall be accompanied by a section-by-section analysis; and, if the Chairman of the committee so requires (in response to a request from the ranking Republican member of the committee for other reasons), a comparison showing proposed changes in existing law.

(e) To the extent practicable, any report prepared pursuant to a committee or subcommittee study or investigation shall be available to members no later than 48 hours prior to consideration of any such report by the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be.

RULE 16. PROXIES.—(a) A vote by any member in the committee or in any subcommittee may be cast by proxy, but such proxy must be in writing and in the hands of the staff director of the committee or the subcommittee, as the case may be, during each rollcall in which they are to be voted. Each proxy shall designate the member who is to execute the proxy authorization and shall be limited to a specific measure or matter and any amendments or motions pertaining thereto; except that a member may authorize a general proxy only for motions to recess, adjourn, or other procedural matters. Each proxy to be effective shall be signed by the member assigning his or her vote and shall contain the date and time of day that the proxy is signed. Proxies may not be counted for a quorum.

(b) Proxies shall be in the following form:

Hon. —— ——

RULE 17. AUTHORIZATION FOR TRAVEL.—(a) Consistent with the primary expense resolution and such additional expense resolutions as may have been approved, the provisions of this rule shall govern travel of committee members and staff. Travel to be paid from funds set aside for the full committee for any member or any staff member shall be paid only upon the prior authorization of the Chairman. Travel may be authorized by the Chairman for any member and any staff member in connection with the attendance of hearings conducted by the committee or any subcommittee thereof and meetings, conferences, and investigations which involve activities or subject matter under the general jurisdiction of the committee. Before such authorization is given, there shall be submitted to the Chairman in writing the following:

(1) the purpose of the travel;

(2) the dates during which the travel is to be made and the date or dates of the event for which the travel is being made;

(3) the location of the event for which the travel is to be made; and

(4) the names of members and staff seeking authorization.

(b) In the case of expenses for travel of members and staff of a subcommittee to hearings, meetings, conferences, or investigations involving activities or subject matter under the legislative assignment of such subcommittee, including the expenses of witnesses at hearings, subject to the limitations contained in Rule 22, to be paid for out of funds allocated to such subcommittee, prior authorization must be obtained from the subcommittee chairman and the Chairman. Such prior authorization shall be given by the Chairman only upon the representation by the appropriate chairman of the subcommittee in writing setting forth those items enumerated in clauses (1), (2), (3), and (4) of subsection (a) and in addition thereto setting forth that subcommittee funds are available to cover the expenses of the person or persons being authorized by the subcommittee chairman to undertake the travel and that there has been a compliance where applicable with Rule 12 of the committee.

(c)(1) In the case of travel outside the United States of members and staff of the committee or of a subcommittee for the purpose of conducting hearings, investigations, studies, or attending meetings and conferences involving activities or subject matter under the legislative assignment of the committee or pertinent subcommittees, prior authorization must be obtained from the Chairman, or, in the case of a subcommittee, from the subcommittee chairman and the Chairman. Before such authorization is given, there shall be submitted to the Chairman, in writing, a request for such authorization. Each request, which shall be filed in a manner that allows for a reasonable period of time for review before such travel is scheduled to begin, shall include the following:

(A) the purpose of travel;

(B) the dates during which the travel will occur;

(C) the names of the countries to be visited and the length of time to be spent in each;

(D) an agenda of anticipated activities for each country for which travel is authorized together with a description of the purpose to be served and the areas of committee jurisdiction involved; and

(E) the names of members and staff for whom authorization is sought.

(2) Requests for travel outside the United States may be initiated by the Chairman or the chairman of a subcommittee (except that individual may submit a request to the Chairman for the purpose of attending a conference or meeting) and shall be limited to members and permanent employees of the committee.

(3) The Chairman shall not approve a request involving travel outside the United States while the House is in session (except in the case of attendance at meetings and conferences or where circumstances warrant an exception).

(4) At the conclusion of any hearing, investigation, study, meeting, or conference for which travel outside the United States has been authorized pursuant to this rule, such subcommittee (or members and staff attending meetings or conferences) shall submit a written report to the Chairman covering the activities of the subcommittee and containing the results of these activities and other pertinent observations or information gained as a result of such travel.

(d) Members and staff of the committee performing authorized travel on official business shall be governed by applicable laws, resolutions, or regulations of the House and of the Committee on House Administration pertaining to such travel, including rules, procedures, and limitations prescribed by the Committee on House Administration with respect to domestic and foreign expense allowances.

(e) Prior to the Chairman's authorization for any travel, the ranking minority party member shall be given a copy of the written request therefor.

RULE 18. OVERSIGHT.—(a) In order to enable the committee to carry out its responsibilities under Rule X, clause 2 of the Rules of the House of Representatives, each subcommittee shall review and study, on a continuing basis, the application, administration, execution, and effectiveness of those laws, or parts of laws, the subject matter of which is within the jurisdiction of that subcommittee, and the organization and operation of the federal agencies and entities having responsibilities in or for the administration and execution thereof, in order to determine whether such laws and the programs thereunder are being implemented and carried out in accordance with the intent of the Congress and whether such programs should be continued, curtailed, or eliminated. In addition, each such subcommittee shall review and study any conditions or circumstances which may indicate the necessity or desirability of enacting new or additional legislation within the jurisdiction of that subcommittee (whether or not any bill or resolution has been introduced with respect thereto), and shall on a continuing basis undertake future research and forecasting on matters within the jurisdiction of that subcommittee.

(b) The Chairman of the committee, consistent with Rule 4, from time to time in order to fulfill the committee's responsibility under Rule X, clause 3(c) of the Rules of the House of Representatives, shall assign matters to subcommittees for reviewing, studying, and coordinating, on a continuing basis, all laws, programs, and government activities dealing with or involving domestic educational programs and institutions, and programs of student assistance, which are within the jurisdiction of other committees.

(c) The Chairman of the committee, consistent with Rule X, clause 2(d) of the Rules of the House of Representatives, shall from time to time assign matters to subcommittees for reviewing and studying on a continuing basis the impact or probable impact of tax policies affecting subjects within the jurisdiction of the committee.

(d) Upon the request of the chairman of any subcommittee of the committee (after consulting with the ranking minority member of such subcommittee), and in order to enable the committee to carry out its responsibilities under section 431 of the General Education Provisions Act with respect to the consideration of final regulations, the Chairman of the committee shall transmit to the appropriate department or agency head a formal statement of objection to any final regulation identified in such request for the purpose of suspending the effective date of such regulation until not less than twenty days after the end of any adjournment described in the first sentence of subsection (d)(2) of such section. Any such objection shall be deemed to have been directed by the committee on the date of the request of such subcommittee chairman.

RULE 19. REFERRAL OF BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND OTHER MATTERS.—(a) Each bill, resolution, or other matter, which relates to a subject listed under the jurisdiction of any subcommittee named in Rule 4, which has been referred to the Committee shall within two weeks be referred to the subcommittee of appropriate jurisdiction unless, by majority vote of the majority party members of the committee, consideration is to be by the full committee or there is to be shared consideration under subsection (b)(2) by more than one subcommittee pursuant to a joint referral for such purpose.

(b)(1) In carrying out subsection (a) with respect to any matter, the Chairman may (consistently with Rule 4) refer the matter jointly to two or more subcommittees for concurrent consideration simultaneously or for consideration sequentially (subject to appropriate time limitations in the case of any subcommittee), or divide the matter into two or more parts (reflecting different subjects and jurisdictions) and refer each such part to a different subcommittee, or refer the matter pursuant to subsection (b) of Rule 4 to a special ad hoc subcommittee appointed by the Chairman (from the members of the subcommittees having legislative jurisdiction) for the specific purpose of considering such matter and reporting to the committee thereon, or make such other provisions as may be considered appropriate.

(2) In the conduct of hearings and meetings of subcommittees sitting jointly, pursuant to subsection (a), for purposes of shared consideration of any bill or resolution, including marking up or reporting any such measure to the full committee—

(A) the rules otherwise applicable to all subcommittees shall likewise apply to joint subcommittee hearings and meetings for purposes of such shared consideration, and

(B) every member of each of such subcommittees shall for purposes of determining a quorum be counted individually in the aggregate total number of members of such subcommittees, and shall have equal voting and proxy rights as individual members during the shared consideration of any such bill or resolution, in the same manner as if the total memberships of such subcommittees were combined to constitute a single subcommittee.

(c) Referral to a subcommittee shall not be made until three days shall have elapsed after written notification of such proposed referral to all subcommittee chairmen, at which time such proposed referral shall be made unless one or more subcommittee chairman shall have given written notice to the chairman of the full committee and to the chairman of each subcommittee that he intends to question such proposed referral at the next regularly scheduled meeting of the committee, or at a special meeting of the committee called for that purpose, at which time referral shall be made by the majority members of the committee. All bills shall be referred under this rule to the subcommittee of proper jurisdiction without regard to whether the author is or is not a member of the subcommittee. A bill, resolution, or other matter referred to a subcommittee in accordance with this rule may be recalled therefrom at any time by a vote of the majority members of the committee for the committee's direct consideration or for reference to another subcommittee.

(d) All members of the committee shall be given at least 24 hours' notice prior to the direct consideration of any bill, resolution, or other matter by the committee; but this requirement may be waived upon determination, by a majority of the members voting, that emergency or urgent circumstances require immediate consideration thereof.

RULE 20. COMMITTEE REPORTS.—(a) All committee reports on bills or resolutions shall comply with the provisions of clause 2 of Rule XI and clauses 3 and 7(a) of Rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

(b) No such report shall be filed until copies of the proposed report have been available to all members at least 36 hours prior to such filing in the House. No material change shall be made in the report distributed to members unless agreed to by majority vote; but any member or members of the committee may file, as part of the printed report, individual, minority, or dissenting views, without regard to the preceding provisions of this rule.

(c) Such 36-hour period shall not conclude earlier than the end of the three-day period (provided under clause 2, paragraph (1)(5) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives) after the committee approves a measure or matter if a member, at the time of such approval, gives notice of intention to file supplemental, minority, or additional views for inclusion as part of the printed report.

RULE 21. MEASURES TO BE CONSIDERED UNDER SUSPENSION.—A member of the committee may not seek to suspend the Rules of the House on any bill, resolution, or other matter which has been modified after such measure is ordered reported, unless notice of such action has been given to the Chairman and ranking minority member of the full committee.

RULE 22. BUDGET AND EXPENSES.—(a) The Chairman in consultation with the majority party members of the committee shall, for each session of the Congress, prepare a preliminary budget. Such budget shall include necessary amounts for staff personnel, for necessary travel, investigation, and other expenses of the committee; and, after consultation with the minority party membership, the Chairman shall include amounts budgeted to the minority party members for staff personnel to be under the direction and supervision of the minority party, travel expenses of minority members and staff, and minority party office expenses. All travel expenses of minority party members and staff shall be paid for out of the amounts so set aside and budgeted. The chairman of each standing subcommittee, in consultation with the majority party members thereof, shall prepare a supplemental budget to include funds for such additional staff, and for such travel, investigations, etc., as may be required for the work of such subcommittee. Thereafter, the Chairman shall combine such proposals into a consolidated committee budget, and shall present the same to the committee for its approval or other action. The Chairman shall take whatever action is necessary to have the budget as finally approved by the committee duly authorized by the House. After such budget shall have been adopted, no change shall be made in such budget unless approved by the committee. The Chairman or the chairman of any standing subcommittee may initiate necessary travel requests as provided in Rule 17 within the limits of their portion of the consolidated budget as approved by the House, and the chairman may execute necessary vouchers therefor.

(b) Subject to the rules of the House of Representatives and procedures prescribed by the Committee on House Administration, and with the prior authorization of the Chairman of the committee in each case, there may be expended in any one session of Congress for necessary travel expenses of witnesses attending hearings in Washington, D.C.:

(1) out of funds budgeted and set aside for each subcommittee, not to exceed $2,000 for expenses of witnesses attending hearings of each such subcommittee;

(2) out of funds budgeted for the full committee majority, not to exceed $2,000 for expenses of witnesses attending full committee hearings; and

(3) out of funds set aside to the minority party members,

(A) not to exceed, for each of the subcommittees, $2,000 for expenses of witnesses attending subcommittee hearings, and

(B) not to exceed $2,000 for expenses of witnesses attending full committee hearings.

(c) A full and detailed monthly report accounting for all expenditures of committee funds shall be maintained in the committee office, where it shall be available to each member of the committee. Such report shall show the amount and purpose of each expenditure, and the budget to which such expenditure is attributed.

RULE 23. APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.—Whenever in the legislative process it becomes necessary to appoint conferees, the Chairman shall recommend to the speaker as conferees the names of those members of the subcommittee which handled the legislation in the order of their seniority upon such subcommittee and such other committee members as the Chairman may designate with the approval of the majority party members. Recommendations of the Chairman to the Speaker shall provide a ratio of majority party members to minority party members no less favorable to the majority party than the ratio of majority members to minority party members on the full committee. In making assignments of minority party members as conferees, the Chairman shall consult with the ranking minority party member of the committee.

RULE 24. BROADCASTING OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS.—(a) When any hearing or meeting of the committee or a subcommittee is open to the public, that hearing or meeting may be covered in whole or in part by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by other such methods of coverage. Such coverage of hearings and meetings is a privilege made available by the House and shall be permitted and conducted only in strict conformity with the purposes, provisions, and requirements of clause 3 of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

(b) The general conduct of each hearing or meeting covered under authority of this clause and the personal behavior of committee members, staff, other government officials and personnel, witnesses, television, radio and press media personnel, and the general public at the hearing or other meeting, shall be in strict conformity with and observance of the acceptable standards of dignity, propriety, courtesy, and decorum traditionally observed by the House.

(c) Persons undertaking to cover committee hearings or meetings under authority of this rule shall be governed by the following limitations:

(1) If the television or radio coverage of the hearing or meeting is to be presented to the public as live coverage, that coverage shall be conducted and presented without commercial sponsorship.

(2) No witness served with a subpena by the committee shall be required against his or her will to be photographed at any hearing or to give evidence or testimony while the broadcasting of that hearing, by radio or television, is being conducted. At the request of any such witness who does not wish to be subjected to radio, television, or still photography coverage, all lenses shall be covered and all microphones used for coverage turned off. This paragraph is supplemental to clause 2(k)(5) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, relating to the protection of the rights of witnesses.

(3) The number of television and still cameras permitted in a hearing or meeting room shall be determined in the discretion of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee holding such hearing or meeting. The allocation among the television media of the positions of the number of television cameras permitted by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee in a hearing or meeting room shall be in accordance with fair and equitable procedures devised by the Executive Committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(4) Television cameras shall be placed so as not to obstruct in any way the space between any witness giving evidence or testimony and any member of the committee or the visibility of that witness and that member to each other.

(5) Television cameras shall operate from fixed positions but shall not be placed in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing or meeting by the other media.

(6) Equipment necessary for coverage by the television and radio media shall not be installed in, or removed from, the hearing or meeting room while the committee is in session.

(7) Floodlights, spotlights, strobelights, and flashguns shall not be used in providing any method of coverage of the hearing or meeting, except that the television media may install additional lighting in the hearing or meeting room, without cost to the government, in order to raise the ambient lighting level in the hearing or meeting room to the lowest level necessary to provide adequate television coverage of the hearing or meeting at the then current state of the art of television coverage.

(8) In the allocation of the number of still photographers permitted by the committee or subcommittee chairman in a hearing or meeting room, preference shall be given to photographers from Associated Press Photos and United Press International Newspictures. If requests are made by more of the media than will be permitted by the committee or subcommittee chairman for coverage of the hearing or meeting by still photography, that coverage shall be made on the basis of a fair and equitable pool arrangement devised by the Standing Committee of Press Photographers.

(9) Photographers shall not position themselves, at any time during the course of the hearing or meeting, between the witness table and the members of the committee.

(10) Photographers shall not place themselves in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing by the other media.

(11) Personnel providing coverage by the television and radio media shall be then currently accredited to the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(12) Personnel providing coverage by still photography shall be then currently accredited to the Press Photographers' Gallery.

(13) Personnel providing coverage by the television and radio media and by still photography shall conduct themselves and their coverage activities in an orderly and unobtrusive manner.

RULE 25. CHANGES IN COMMITTEE RULES.—A proposed change in these rules shall not be considered by the committee unless the text of such change has been in the hands of all members at least 48 hours prior to the meeting in which the matter is considered.

Whenever any hearing is conducted by the committee on any measure or matter, the minority members of the committee shall be entitled, upon request to the Chairman by a majority of them, before the completion of the hearing, to call witnesses selected by the minority to testify with respect to the measure or matter during at least one day of hearing thereon.

Investigative Hearing Procedures

15. Rule XI 2(k) of the Rules of the House of Representatives is hereby incorporated by reference (rights of witnesses under subpoena).

Subject Matter

16. Bills and other substantive matters may be taken up for hearing only when called by the Chairman of the Committee or by a majority vote of a quorum of the committee, except those matters which are the subject of special-call meetings outlined in Rule 9.

17. No private bill will be reported by the committee if there are two or more dissenting votes. Private bills so rejected by the committee will not be reconsidered during the same Congress unless new evidence sufficient to justify a new hearing has been presented to the committee.

18. (a) It shall not be in order for the committee to consider any new or original measure or matter unless written notice of the date, place and subject matter of consideration and to the extent practicable, a written copy of the measure or matter to be considered, has been available in the office of each Member of the committee for at least three calendar days in advance of consideration, excluding Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays.

(b) Notwithstanding the foregoing sections of this rule, consideration of any legislative measure or matter by the committee shall be in order by vote of two-thirds of the Members present, provided that a majority of the committee is present.

Open Meetings

19. Each meeting for the transaction of business, including the markup of legislation, of the committee shall be open to the public except when the committee, in open session and with a quorum present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public. No person other than Members of the committee and such congressional staff and such departmental representatives as they may authorize shall be present at any business or markup session which has been closed to the public. This paragraph does not apply to open committee hearings which are provided for by Rule 20 contained herein, or to any meeting that relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters.

20. Each hearing conducted by the committee shall be open to the public except when the committee, in open session and with a quorum present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of that hearing on that day shall be closed to the public because disclosure of testimony, evidence or other matters to be considered would endanger the national security or would violate any law or rule of the House of Representatives. Notwithstanding the requirements of the preceding sentence, and Rule 10, a majority of those present, there being in attendance the requisite number required under the rules of the committee to be present for the purpose of taking testimony:

(A) may vote to close the hearing for the sole purpose of discussing whether testimony or evidence to be received would endanger the national security or violate Rule XI 2(k)(5) of the Rules of the House of Representatives; or

(B) may vote to close the hearing, as provided in Rule XI 2(k)(5) of the Rules of the House of Representatives. No Member may be excluded from nonparticipatory attendance at any hearing of any committee or subcommittee, unless the House of Representatives shall by majority vote authorize a particular committee or subcommittee, for purposes of a particular series of hearings on a particular article of legislation or on a particular subject of investigation, to close its hearings to Members by the same procedures designated in this subparagraph for closing hearings to the public: Provided, however, That the committee or subcommittee may by the same procedure vote to close one subsequent day of hearing.

Requests for Rollcall Votes

21. A rollcall vote of the Members may be had at the request of three or more Members.

Committee Records

22. (a) The committee shall keep a complete record of all committee action which shall include a record of the votes on any question on which a rollcall vote is demanded. The result of each rollcall vote shall be made available by the committee for inspection by the public at reasonable times in the offices of the committee. Information so available for public inspection shall include a description of the amendment, motion, order or other proposition and the name of each Member voting for and each Member voting against such amendment, motion, order or proposition, and the names of those Members present but not voting.

(b) The Records of the committee at the National Archives and Records Administration shall be made available for public use in accordance with Rule XXXVI of the Rules of the House of Representatives. The Chairman shall notify the ranking minority Member of any decision, pursuant to clause 3(b)(3) or clause 4(b) of the rule, to withhold a record otherwise available, and the matter shall be presented to the committee for a determination on the written request of any Member of the committee.

Publication of Committee Hearings

23. The transcripts of those hearings conducted by the committee which are decided to be printed will be published in verbatim form, with the material requested for the record inserted at that place requested, or at the end of the record, as appropriate.

Any requests by those Members, staff or witnesses to correct any errors, other than errors in transcription, or disputed errors in transcription, will be appended to the record, and the appropriate place where the change is requested will be footnoted.

Prior to approval by the Chairman of hearings conducted jointly with another Congressional committee, a memorandum of understanding will be prepared which incorporates an agreement for the publication of the verbatim transcript.

5-Minute Rule During Committee Proceedings

24. The time any one Member may address the committee on any bill, motion or other matter under consideration by the committee or the time allowed for the questioning of a witness at hearings before the committee will be limited to five minutes, and then only when the Member has been recognized by the Chairman, except that this time limit may be waived by the Chairman or acting Chairman. The rule of germaneness will be enforced by the Chairman.

Requests for Written Motions

25. Any legislative or non-procedural motion made at a regular or special meeting of the committee and which is entertained by the chairman shall be presented in writing upon the demand of any Member present and a copy made available to each Member present.

Sensitive or Confidential Information Received Pursuant to Subpoena

*35. Unless otherwise determined by the committee or subcommittee, certain information recieved by the committee or subcommittee pursuant to a subpoena not made part of the record at an open hearing shall be deemed to have been received in Executive Session when the Chairman of the full committee, in his judgment, deems that in view of all circumstances, such as the sensitivity of the information or the confidential nature of the information, such action is appropriate.

RULES OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. ANDERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to rule XI, clause 2(a), I am herein submitting the Rules of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

Rules of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation

RULE NO. I.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

(a) The Rules of the House are the rules of its committees and subcommittees so far as applicable, except that a motion to recess from day to day, and a motion to dispense with the first reading (in full) of a bill or resolution, if printed copies are available, are non-debatable motions of high privilege in committees and subcommittees.

(b) The committee is authorized at any time to conduct such investigations and studies as it may consider necessary or appropriate in the exercise of its responsibilities under Rule X of House Rules and (subject to the adoption of expense resolutions as required by Rule XI, clause 5 of House Rules) to incur expenses (including travel expenses) in connection therewith.

(c) The committee is authorized to have printed and bound testimony and other data presented at hearings held by the committee. All costs of stenographic services and transcripts in connection with any meeting or hearing of the committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House.

(d) The committee shall submit to the House, not later than January 2 of each odd-numbered year, a report on the activities of the committee under Rule X and XI of House Rules during the Congress ending at noon on January 3 of such year.

(e) The committee's rules shall be published in the Congressional Record not later than 30 days after the Congress convenes in each odd-numbered year.

RULE NO. II.—REGULAR AND SPECIAL MEETINGS: OPEN COMMITTEE MEETINGS.

(a) Regular meetings of the committee shall be held on the first Tuesday of every month to transact its business unless such day is a holiday, or Congress is in recess or is adjourned, in which case the Chairman shall determine the regular meeting day of the committee for that month. The Chairman shall give each member of the committee, as far in advance of the day of the regular meeting as the circumstances make practicable, a written notice of such meeting. If the Chairman believes that the committee will not be considering any bill or resolution before the full committee and that there is no other business to be transacted at a regular meeting, the meeting may be cancelled, delayed or deferred until such time as, in the judgment of the Chairman, there may be such matters which require the committee's consideration. This paragraph shall not apply to meetings of any subcommittee.

(b) The Chairman may call and convene, as he considers necessary, additional meetings of the committee for the consideration of any bill or resolution pending before the committee for the conduct of other committee business. The committee shall meet for such purpose pursuant to that call of the Chairman.

(c) If at least three members of the committee desire that a special meeting of the committee be called by the Chairman, those members may file in the offices of the committee their written request to the Chairman for that special meeting. Such request shall specify the measure or matter to be considered. Immediately upon the filing of the request, the clerk of the committee shall notify the Chairman of the filing of the requests. If, within three calendar days after the filing of the request, the Chairman does not call the requested special meeting to be held within 7 calendar days after the filing of the request, a majority of the members of the committee may file in the offices of the committee their written notice that a special meeting of the committee will be held, specifying the date and hour thereof, and the measures or matter to be considered at that special meeting. The committee shall meet on that date and hour. Immediately upon the filing of the notice, the clerk of the committee shall notify all members of the committee that such meeting will be held and inform them of its date and hour and the measure or matter to be considered; and only the measure or matter specified in that notice may be considered at that special meeting.

(d) If the Chairman of the committee or subcommittee is not present at any meeting of the committee or subcommittee the ranking member of the majority party on the committee or subcommittee who is present shall preside at that meeting.

(e) The committee may not sit, without special leave, while the House is reading a measure for amendment under the five-minute rule.

(f)(1) Each meeting for the transaction of business, including the markup of legislation, of the committee or each subcommittee thereof shall be open to the public except when the committee or subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by roll call vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public: Provided, however, that no person other than members of the committee and such congressional staff and such departmental representatives as they may authorize shall be present at any business or markup session which has been closed to the public. This paragraph does not apply to open committee hearings which are provided for by clause 4(a)(1) of House Rule X or by subparagraph (2) of this paragraph, or to any meeting that relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters.

(2) Each hearing conducted by the committee or each subcommittee thereof shall be open to the public except when the committee or subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by roll call vote that all or part of the remainder of that hearing on that day shall be closed to the public because disclosure of testimony, evidence, or other matters to be considered would endanger the national security or would violate any law or rule of the House of Representatives.

Notwithstanding the requirements of the preceding sentence, a majority of those present, there being in attendance the requisite number required under the rules of the committee to be present for the purpose of taking testimony.

(A) may vote to close the hearing for the sole purpose of discussing whether testimony or evidence to be received would endanger the national security or violate clause (g)(5) of Rule VII, or

(B) may vote to close the hearing, as provided in clause (g)(5) of Rule VII.

No member of the House of Representatives may be excluded from nonparticipatory attendance at any hearing of the committee or any subcommittee, unless the House of Representatives shall by majority vote authorize the committee or a particular subcommittee, for purposes of a particular series of hearings on a particular article of legislation or on a particular subject of investigation, to close its hearings to members by the same procedure designated in this subparagraph for closing hearings to the public; Provided, however, that the committee or subcommittee may by the same procedure vote to close one subsequent day of hearings.

RULE NO. III.—RECORDS AND ROLL CALLS.

(a) There shall be kept in writing a record of the proceedings of the committee and of each subcommittee, including a record of the votes on any question on which a roll call is demanded. The result of each such roll call vote shall be made available by the committee for inspection by the public at reasonable times in the offices of the committee. Information so available for public inspection shall include a description of the amendment, motion, order or other proposition and the name of each member voting for and each member voting against such amendment, motion, order, or proposition, and whether by proxy or person, and the names of those members present but not voting. A record vote may be demanded by one-fifth of the members present.

(b) All committee hearings, records, data, charts, and files shall be kept separate and distinct from the congressional office records of the member serving as Chairman of the committee; and such records shall be the property of the House and all members of the House shall have access thereto.

RULE NO. IV.—PROXIES.

(a) A vote by any member in the committee or in any subcommittee may be cast by proxy, but such proxy must be in writing. Each proxy shall designate the member who is to execute the proxy authorization and shall be limited to a specific measure or matter and any amendments or motions pertaining thereto; except that a member may authorize a general proxy only for motions to recess, adjourn or other procedural matters. Each proxy to be effective shall be signed by the member assigning his vote and shall contain the date and time of day that the proxy is signed. Proxies may not be counted for a quorum.

(b) Proxies shall be in the following form:

(1) to sit and act at such times and places within or without the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned and to hold such hearings, and

(2) to require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witness and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memorandums, papers, and documents as it deems necessary. The Chairman of the committee, or any member designated by the Chairman may administer oaths to any witness.

(b)(1) A subpoena may be issued by the committee or subcommittee under subparagraph (a)(2) in the conduct of any investigation or activity or series of investigations or activities, only when authorized by a majority of the members voting, a majority being present. Such authorized subpoenas shall be signed by the Chairman of the committee or by any member designated by the committee. If a specific request for a subpoena has not been previously rejected by either the committee or subcommittee, the Chairman of the committee, after consultation with the ranking minority member, may authorize and issue a subpoena under subparagraph (a)(2) in the conduct of any investigation or activity or series of investigations or activities, and such subpoena shall for all purposes be deemed a subpoena issued by the committee. Whenever a subpoena is issued under this subparagraph, as soon as practicable thereafter, the Chairman shall notify all members of the committee of such action.

(2) Compliance with any subpoena issued by the committee or subcommittee under subparagraph (a)(2) may be enforced only as authorized or directed by the House.

(c) Each witness who has been subpoenaed, upon the completion of his testimony before the committee or any subcommittee, may report to the office of counsel of the committee, and there sign appropriate vouchers for travel allowances and attendance fees. If hearings are held in cities other than Washington, DC, the witness may contact the counsel of the committee, or his representative, prior to leaving the hearing room.

(a) The Chairman, in the case hearings to be conducted by the committee, and the appropriate subcommittee chairman, in the case of hearings to be conducted by a subcommittee, shall make public announcement of the date, place, and subject matter of any hearing to be conducted on any measure or matter at least one week before the commencement of that hearing unless the committee determines that there is good cause to begin such hearing at an earlier date. In the latter event the chairman or the subcommittee chairman whichever the case may be shall make such public announcement at the earliest possible date. The clerk of the committee shall promptly notify the Daily Digest Clerk of the Congressional Record and shall promptly enter the appropriate information into the committee scheduling service of the House Information Systems as soon as possible after such public announcement is made.

(b) So far as practicable, each witness who is to appear before the committee or a subcommittee shall file with the clerk of the committee, at least 2 working days before the day of his appearance, a written statement of his proposed testimony and shall limit his oral presentation to a summary of his statement.

(c) When any hearing is conducted by the committee or any sucommittee upon any measure or matter, the minority party members on the committee shall be entitled, upon request to the Chairman by a majority of those minority members before the completion of such hearing, to call witnesses selected by the minority to testify with respect to that measure or matter during at least one day of hearing thereon.

(d) Upon announcement of a hearing, to the extent practicable the Clerk and Staff Director shall cause to be prepared a concise summary of the subject matter (including legislative reports and other material) under consideration which shall be made available immediately to all members of the committee. In addition, upon announcement of a hearing and subsequently as they are received, the Chairman shall make available to the members of the committee any official reports from departments and agencies on such matter.

(e) All other members of the committee may have the privilege of sitting with any subcommittee during its hearing or deliberations and may participate in such hearings or deliberations, but no such member who is not a member of the subcommittee shall vote on any matter before such subcommittee.

(f) Committee members may question witnesses only when they have been recognized by the chairman for that purpose, and only for a 5-minute period until all members present have had an opportunity to question a witness. The 5-minute period for questioning a witness by any one member can be extended only with the unanimous consent of all members present. The questioning of witnesses in both full and subcommittee hearings shall be initiated by the chairman, followed by the ranking minority party member and all other members alternating between the majority and minority. In recognizing members to question witnesses in this fashion, the chairman shall take into consideration the ratio of the majority to minority members present and shall establish the order of recognition for questioning in such a manner as not to disadvantage the members of the majority nor the members of the minority. The chairman may accomplish this by recognizing two majority members for each minority member recognized.

(g) The following additional rules shall apply to investigative hearings:

(1) The Chairman at an investigative hearing shall announce in an opening statement the subject of the investigation.

(2) A copy of the committee rules and this clause shall be made available to each witness.

(3) Witnesses at investigative hearings may be accompanied by their own counsel for the purpose of advising them concerning their constitutional rights.

(4) The Chairman may punish breaches of order and decorum, and of professional ethics on the part of counsel, by censure and exclusion from the hearings; and the committee may cite the offender to the House for contempt.

(5) Whenever it is asserted that the evidence or testimony at an investigatory hearing may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person,

(A) such testimony or evidence shall be presented in executive session, notwithstanding the provisions of clause (f)(2) of Rule No. II, if by a majority of those present, there being in attendance the requisite number required under the rules of the committee to be present for the purpose of taking testimony, the committee determines that such evidence or testimony may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person; and

(B) the committee shall proceed to receive such testimony in open session only if a majority of the members of the committee, a majority being present, determine that such evidence or testimony will not tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person.

In either case the committee shall afford such person an opportunity to voluntarily appear as a witness; and receive and dispose of requests from such person to subpoena additional witnesses.

(C) receive and dispose of requests from such person to subpoena additional witnesses.

(6) Except as provided in subparagraph (5), the Chairman shall receive and the committee dispose of requests to subpoena additional witnesses.

(7) No evidence or testimony taken in executive session may be released or used in public sessions without the consent of the committee.

(8) In the discretion of the committee, witnesses may submit brief and pertinent sworn statements in writing for inclusion in the record. The committee is the sole judge of the pertinency of testimony and evidence adduced at its hearing.

(9) A witness may obtain a transcript copy of his testimony given at a public session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized by the committee.

(10) No major investigation by a subcommittee shall be initiated without approval of a majority of such subcommittee.

RULE NO. VIII.—PROCEDURES FOR REPORTING BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

(a)(1) It shall be the duty of the Chairman of the committee to report or cause to be reported promptly to the House any measure approved by the committee and to take or cause to be taken necessary steps to bring the matter to a vote.

(2) In any event, the report of the committee on a measure which has been approved by the committee shall be filed within 7 calendar days (exclusive of days on which the House is not in session) after the day on which there has been filed with the clerk of the committee a written request, signed by a majority of the members of the committee, for the reporting of that measure. Upon the filing of any such request, the clerk of the committee shall transmit immediately to the Chairman of the committee notice of the filing of that request.

(b)(1) No measure or recommendation shall be reported from the committee unless a majority of the committee was actually present.

(2) With respect to each roll call vote on a motion to report any bill or resolution of a public character, the total number of votes cast for, and the total number of votes cast against, the reporting of such bill or resolution shall be included in the committee report.

(c) The report of the committee on a measure which has been approved by the committee shall include

(1) the oversight findings and recommendations required pursuant to clause 2(b)(1) of Rule X of the House separately set out and clearly identified;

(2) the statement required by section 308(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, separately set out and clearly identified, if the measure provides new budget authority or new or increased tax expenditures;

(3) the estimate and comparison prepared by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office under section 403 of such Act, separately set out and clearly identified, whenever the Director (if timely submitted prior to the filing of the report) has submitted such estimate and comparison to the committee; and

(4) a summary of the oversight findings and recommendations made by the Committee on Government Operations under clause 4(c)(2) of Rule X of the House separately set out and clearly identified whenever such findings and recommendations have been submitted to the legislative committee in a timely fashion to allow an opportunity to consider such findings and recommendations during the committee's deliberations on the measure.

(d) Each report of the committee on each bill or joint resolution of a public character reported by the committee shall contain a detailed analytical statement as to whether the enactment of such bill or joint resolution into law may have an inflationary impact on prices and costs in the operation of the national economy.

(e) If, at the time of approval of any measure or matter by the committee, any member of the committee gives notice of intention to file supplemental, minority, or additional views, that member shall be entitled to not less than three calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) in which to file such views, in writing and signed by that member, with the clerk of the committee. All such views so filed by one or more members of the committee shall be included within, and shall be a part of, the report filed by the committee with respect to that measure or matter. The report of the committee upon that measure or matter shall be printed in a single volume which—

(1) shall include all supplemental, minority, or additional views which have been submitted by the time of the filing of the report, and

(2) shall bear upon its cover a recital that any such supplemental, minority, or additional views (and any material submitted, under subdivisions (3) and (4) of subparagraph (c)) are included as part of the report.

This subparagraph does not preclude—

(A) the immediate filing or printing of a committee report unless timely request for the opportunity to file supplemental, minority, or additional views has been made as provided by this subparagraph; or

(B) the filing by any such committee of any supplemental report upon any measure or matter which may be required for the correction of any technical error in a previous report made by that committee upon that measure or matter.

(f)(1) All committee and subcommittee prints, reports, documents, or other materials, not otherwise provided for under Rule VIII, that purport to express publicly views of the committee or any of its subcommittees or members of the committee, or its subcommittees shall be approved by the committee or the subcommittee prior to printing and distribution and any member shall be given an opportunity to have views included as part of such material prior to printing, release and distribution in accordance with subparagraph (e) of this rule.

(2) No committee or subcommittee document containing views other than those of members of the committee or subcommittee shall be published without approval of the committee or subcommittee.

RULE NO. IX.—OVERSIGHT.

(a) In order to assist the House in:

(1) its analysis, appraisal, and evaluation of (A) the application, administration, execution, and effectiveness of the laws enacted by the Congress, or (B) conditions and circumstances which may indicate the necessity or desirability of enacting new or additional legislation, and

(2) its formulation, consideration, and enactment of such modifications of changes in those laws, and of such additional legislation, as may be necessary or appropriate, there shall be in conformity with Rule XV a Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight.

(b) The Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight and the appropriate subcommittee with legislative authority shall cooperatively review and study, on a continuing basis, the application, administration, execution, and effectiveness of those laws, or parts of laws, the subject matter of which is within the jurisdiction of the committee, and the organization and operation of the Federal agencies and entities having responsibilities in or for the administration and execution thereof, in order to determine whether such laws and the programs thereunder are being implemented and carried out in accordance with the intent of the Congress and whether such programs should be continued, curtailed, or eliminated. In addition, the Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight and the appropriate subcommittee with legislative authority shall cooperatively review and study any conditions or circumstances which may indicate the necessity or desirability or enacting new or additional legislation within the jurisdiction of the committee (whether or not any bill or resolution has been introduced with respect thereto), and shall on a continuing basis undertake future research and forecasting on matters within the jurisdiction of the committee. The Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight shall in no way limit the responsibility of the subcommittees from carrying out their oversight responsibilities.

(c) The Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight and the appropriate subcommittee with legislative authority shall cooperatively review and study on a continuing basis the impact or probable impact of tax policies affecting subjects within the jurisdiction of the committee.

RULE NO. X.—REVIEW OF CONTINUING PROGRAMS; BUDGET ACT PROVISIONS.

(a) The committee shall, in its consideration of all bills and joint resolutions of a public character within its jurisdiction, insure that appropriations for continuing programs and activities of the Federal Government and the District of Columbia government will be made annually to the maximum extent feasible and consistent with the nature, requirements, and objectives of the programs and activities involved. For the purposes of this paragraph a Government agency includes the organizational units of government listed in clause 7(d) of Rule XIII of House Rules.

(b) The committee shall review, from time to time, each continuing program within its jurisdictions for which appropriations are not made annually in order to ascertain whether such program could be modified so that appropriations therefor would be made annually.

(c) The committee shall, on or before February 25 of each year, submit to the Committee on the Budget (1) its views and estimates with respect to all matters to be set forth in the concurrent resolution on the budget for the ensuring fiscal year which are within its jurisdiction or functions, and (2) an estimate of the total amounts of new budget authority, and budget outlays resulting therefrom, to be provided or authorized in all bills and resolutions within its jurisdiction which it intends to be effective during that fiscal year.

(d) As soon as practicable after a concurrent resolution on the budget for any fiscal year is agreed to, the committee (after consulting with the appropriate committee or committees of the Senate) shall subdivide any allocations made to it in the joint explanatory statement accompanying the conference report on such resolution, and promptly report such subdivisions to the House, in the manner provided by section 302 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(e) Whenever the committee is directed in a concurrent resolution on the budget to determine and recommend changes in laws, bills, or resolutions under the reconciliation process it shall promptly make such determination and recommendations, and report a reconciliation bill or resolution (or both) to the House or submit such recommendations to the Committee on the Budget, in accordance with the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

RULE NO. XI.—BROADCASTING OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS.

(a) It is the purpose of this clause to provide a means, in conformity with acceptable standards of dignity, propriety, and decorum, by which committee hearings or committee meetings, which are open to the public may be covered, by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by any of such methods of coverage—

(1) for the education, enlightenment, and information of the general public, on the basis of accurate and impartial news coverage, regarding the operations procedures, and practices of the House as a legislative and representative body and regarding the measures, public issues, and other matters before the House and its committees, the consideration thereof and the action taken thereon; and

(2) for the development of the perspective and understanding of the general public with respect to the role and function of the House under the Constitution of the United States as an organ of the Federal Government.

(b) In addition, it is the intent of this clause that radio and television tapes and television film of any coverage under this clause shall not be used, or made available for use, as partisan political campaign material to promote or oppose the candidacy of any person for elective public office.

(c) It is, further, the intent of this clause that the general conduct of each meeting (whether of a hearing or otherwise) covered, under authority of this clause, by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by any of such methods of coverage, and the personal behavior of the committee members and staff, other Government officials and personnel, witnesses, television, radio, and press media personnel, and the general public at the hearing or other meeting shall be in strict conformity with and observance of the acceptable standards of dignity, propriety, courtesy, and decorum traditionally observed by the House in its operations and shall not be such as to—

(1) distort the objects and purposes of the hearings or other meeting or the activities of committee members in connection with that hearing or meeting or in connection with the general work of the committee or of the House; or

(2) cast discredit or dishonor on the House, the committee, or any member or bring the House, the committee, or any member into disrepute.

(d) The coverage of committee hearings and meetings by television broadcast, radio broadcast, or still photography is a privilege made available by the House and shall be permitted and conducted only in strict conformity with the purposes, provisions, and requirements of this clause.

(e) Whenever any hearing or meeting conducted by any committee of the House is open to the public, that committee may permit, by majority vote of the committee, that hearing or meeting to be covered, in whole or in part, by television broadcast, and still photography, or by any such methods of coverage, but only under such written rules as the committee may adopt in accordance with the purposes, provisions, and requirements of this clause: Provided, however, each committee or subcommittee chairman shall determine, in his or her discretion, the number of television and still cameras permitted in hearing or meeting room.

(f)(1) If the television or radio coverage of the hearing or meeting is to be presented to the public as live coverage, that coverage shall be conducted and presented without commercial sponsorship.

(2) No witness served with a subpoena by the committee shall be required against his or her will to be photographed at any hearing or to give evidence or testimony while the broadcasting of that hearing, by radio or television, is being conducted. At the request of any such witness who does not wish to be subjected to radio, television, or still photography coverage, all lenses shall be covered and all microphones used for coverage turned off. This subparagraph is supplementary to subparagraph (g)(5) of Rule VII, relating to protection of the rights of witnesses.

(3) The allocation among the television media of the positions of the number of television cameras permitted by a committee or subcommittee chairman in a hearing or meeting room shall be in accordance with fair and equitable procedures devised by the Executive Committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(4) Television cameras shall operate from fixed positions but shall be placed so as not to obstruct in any way the space between any witness giving evidence or testimony and any member of the committee or the visibility of that witness and that member to each other.

(5) Television cameras shall not be placed in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing or meeting by the other media.

(6) Equipment necessary for coverage by the television and radio media shall not be installed in, or removed from, the hearing or meeting room while the committee is in session.

(7) Floodlights, spotlights, strobelights, and flashguns shall not be used in providing any method of coverage of the hearing or meeting, except that the television media may install additional lighting in the hearing or meeting room, without cost to the Government, in order to raise the ambient lighting level necessary to provide adequate television coverage of the hearing or the meeting at the then current state of the art of television coverage.

(8) In the allocation of the number of still photographers permitted by a committee or subcommittee chairman in a hearing or meeting room, preference shall be given to photographers from Associated Press Photos and United Press International Newspictures. If requests are made by more of the media than will be permitted by a committee or subcommittee chairman for coverage of the hearing or meeting by still photography, that coverage shall be made on the basis of a fair and equitable pool arrangement devised by the Standing Committee of Press Photographers.

(9) Photographers shall not position themselves, at any time during the course of the hearing or meeting, between the witness table and the members of the committee.

(10) Photographers shall not place themselves in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing by the other media.

(11) Personnel providing coverage by the television and radio media shall be then currently accredited to the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(12) Personnel providing coverage by still photography shall be then currently accredited to the Press Photographers' Gallery.

(13) Personnel providing coverage by the television and radio media and by still photography shall conduct themselves and their coverage activities in an orderly and unobstrusive manner.

RULE NO. XII.—COMMITTEE AND SUBCOMMITTEE BUDGETS.

(a) The Chairman, in consultation with the chairman of each subcommittee, the majority members of the committee and the minority membership of the committee, shall, for each session of the Congress, prepare a consolidated committee budget. Such budget shall include necessary amounts for staff personnel, for necessary travel, investigation, and other expenses of the full committee and its subcommittees.

(b) Authorization for the payment of additional or unforeseen committee and subcommittees' expenses may be procured by one or more additional expense resolutions processed in the same manner as set out herein.

(c) The Chairman or any chairman of a subcommittee may initiate necessary travel requests as provided in Rule XIV within the limits of the consolidated budget as approved by the House and the Chairman may execute necessary vouchers thereof.

(d) Once monthly, the Chairman shall submit to the Committee on House Administration, in writing, a full and detailed accounting of all expenditures made during the period since the last such accounting from the amount budgeted to the full committee. Such report shall show the amount and purpose of such expenditure and the budget to which such expenditure is attributed. A copy of such monthly report shall be available in the committee office for review by members of the committee.

RULE NO. XIII.—COMMITTEE AND SUBCOMMITTEE STAFF.

(a) The professional and clerical staff assigned to the minority shall be appointed and their remuneration determined in such manner as the minority members of the committee shall determine within the budget approved for such purposes; Provided, however, that no minority staff person shall be compensated at a rate which exceeds that paid his or her majority party staff counterpart.

(b) The professional and clerical employees of the committee not assigned to a subcommittee or to the minority under the above provision shall be appointed, and may be removed, and their remuneration determined by the Chairman.

(c) The professional and clerical staff assigned to the minority shall be under the general supervision and direction of the ranking minority party member of the full committee who may delegate such authority as he determines appropriate.

(d) The professional and clerical staff of the committee not assigned to a subcommittee or to the minority shall be under the general supervision and direction of the chairman, who shall establish and assign the duties and responsibilities of such staff members and delegate such authority as he determines appropriate.

(e) It is intended that the skills and experience of all members of the committee staff shall be available to all members of the committee.

(f)(1) The chairman of each standing subcommittee of this committee is authorized to appoint one staff member who shall serve at the pleasure of the subcommittee chairman.

(2) The ranking minority member of each standing subcommittee on this committee is authorized to appoint one staff person who shall serve at the pleasure of the ranking minority party member.

(3) The staff members appointed pursuant to the provisions of subparagraphs (1) and (2) shall be compensated at a rate determined by the subcommittee chairman not to exceed (A) 75 per centum of the maximum established in paragraph (c) of clause 6 of House Rule XI; Provided, however, a staff person appointed by a ranking minority member shall be compensated at a rate not to exceed that paid his or her majority party staff counterpart.

(4) Subparagraphs (1), (2), and (3) shall apply to six subcommittees only, and no member shall appoint more than one person pursuant to the above provisions.

(5) The staff positions made available to the subcommittee chairmen and ranking minority party members pursuant to subparagraphs (1) and (2) shall be made available from the staff positions provided under clause 6 of House Rule XI unless such staff positions are made available pursuant to a primary or additional expense resolution.

(6) Except as provided by the above provisions, the professional and clerical members of the subcommittee staffs shall be appointed, and may be removed, and their remuneration determined by the subcommittee chairman in consultation with and with the approval of a majority of the majority members of the subcommittee, and with the approval of the chairman.

(7) The professional and clerical staff of a subcommittee shall be under the supervision and direction of the chairman of that subcommittee.

RULE NO. XIV.—TRAVEL OF MEMBERS AND STAFF.

(a) Consistent with the primary expense resolution and such additional expense resolutions as may have been approved, the provisions of this rule shall govern travel of committee members and staff. Travel to be reimbursed from funds set aside for the full committee for any member or any staff member shall be paid only upon the prior authorization of the chairman. Travel may be authorized by the chairman for any member and any staff member in connection with the attendance of hearings conducted by the committee of any subcommittee thereof and meetings, conferences, and investigations which involve activities or subject matter under the general jurisdiction of the committee. Before such authorization is given there shall be submitted to the Chairman in writing the following:

(1) The purpose of the travel;

(2) The dates, during which the travel is to be made and the date or dates of the event for which the travel is being made;

(3) The location of the event for which the travel is to be made;

(4) The names of members and staff seeking authorization.

(b) In the case of travel of members and staff of a subcommittee to hearings, meetings, conferences, and investigations involving activities or subject matter under the legislative assignment of such subcommittee to be paid for out of funds allocated to such subcommittee, prior authorization must be obtained from the subcommittee chairman and the Chairman. Such prior authorization shall be given by the Chairman only upon the representation by the applicable chairman of the subcommittee in writing setting forth those items enumerated in (1), (2), (3), and (4) of paragraph (a) and in addition thereto setting forth that subcommittee funds are available to cover the expenses of the person or persons being authorized by the subcommittee chairman to undertake the travel and that there has been a compliance where applicable with Rule VII of the committee.

(c)(1) In the case of travel outside the United States of members and staff of the committee or of a subcommittee for the purpose of conducting hearings, investigations, studies, or attending meetings and conferences involving activities or subject matter under the legislative assignment of the committee or pertinent subcommittee, prior authorization must be obtained from the Chairman, or, in the case of a subcommittee from the subcommittee chairman and the Chairman. Before such authorization is given there shall be submitted to the Chairman, in writing, a request for such authorization. Each request, which shall be filed in a manner that allows for a reasonable period of time for review before such travel is scheduled to begin, shall include the following:

(A) the purpose of the travel;

(B) the dates during which the travel will occur;

(C) the names of the countries to be visited and the length of time to be spent in each;

(D) an agenda of anticipated activities for each country for which travel is authorized together with a description of the purpose to be served and the areas of committee jurisdiction involved; and

(E) the names of members and staff for whom authorization is sought.

(2) Requests for travel outside the United States may be initiated by the Chairman or the chairman of a subcommittee (except that individuals may submit a request to the Chairman for the purpose of attending a conference or meeting) and shall be limited to members and permanent employees of the committee.

(3) At the conclusion of any hearing, investigation, study, meeting or conference for which travel outside the United States has been authorized pursuant to this rule, each subcommittee (or members and staff attending meetings or conferences) shall submit a written report to the Chairman covering the activities and other pertinent observations or information gained as a result of such travel, when requested by the Chairman.

(d) Members and staff of the committee performing authorized travel on official business shall be governed by applicable laws, resolutions, or regulations of the House and of the Committee on House Administration pertaining to such travel.

RULE NO. XV.—NUMBER AND JURISDICTION OF SUBCOMMITTEES.

(a) There shall be 6 standing subcommittees. All proposed legislation and other matters related to the subcommittees listed under standing subcommittees named below shall be referred to such subcommittees, respectively:

(1) Subcommittee on Aviation

(2) Subcommittee on Economic Development

(3) Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight

(4) Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds

(5) Subcommittee on Surface Transportation

(6) Subcommittee on Water Resources

(b) The committee may provide for such additional subcommittees as determined to be appropriate; Provided, however, that such additional subcommittees are approved by a majority of the majority members on the committee.

RULE NO. XVI.—POWERS AND DUTIES OF SUBCOMMITTEES.

(a) Each subcommittee is authorized to meet, hold hearings, receive evidence, and report to the full committee on all matters referred to it or under its jurisdiction. Subcommittee chairman shall set dates for hearings and meeting of their respective subcommittees after consultation with the chairman and other subcommittee chairmen with a view toward avoiding simultaneous scheduling of full committee and subcommittee meetings or hearings wherever possible.

(b) Whenever a subcommittee has ordered a bill, resolution, or other matter to be reported to the committee, the chairman of the subcommittee reporting the bill, resolution, or matter to the full committee, or any member authorized by the subcommittee to do so, may report such bill, resolution, or matter to the committee. It shall be the duty of the chairman of the subcommittee to report or cause to be reported promptly such bill, resolution, or matter, and to take or cause to be taken the necessary steps to bring such bill, resolution, or matter to a vote.

(c) In any event, the report of any subcommittee on a measure which has been approved by the subcommittee shall be filed within seven calendar days (exclusive of days on which the House is not in session) after the day on which there has been filed with the clerk of the committee a written request, signed by a majority of the members of the subcommittee, for the reporting of that measure. Upon the filing of any request, the clerk of the committee shall transmit immediately to the chairman of the subcommittee notice of the filing of that request.

(d) All committee or subcommittee reports printed pursuant to legislative study or investigation and not approved by a majority vote of the committee or subcommittee, as appropriate, shall contain the following disclaimer on the cover of such report:

"This report has not been officially adopted by the Committee on (or pertinent subcommittee thereof) and may not therefore necessarily reflect the views of its members."

(e) Bills, resolutions, or other matters favorably reported by a subcommittee shall automatically be placed upon the agenda of the committee as of the time they are reported and where practicable shall be considered by the full committee in the order in which they were reported unless the committee shall by majority vote otherwise direct. No bill reported by a subcommittee shall be considered by the full committee unless it has been delivered to the offices of all members at least 48 hours prior to the meeting, unless the chairman determines that such bill is of such urgency that it should be given early consideration. Where practicable, such bills, resolutions, or other matters shall be accompanied by a comparison with present law and a section-by-section analysis of the proposed change.

RULE NO. XVII.—REFERRAL OF LEGISLATION TO SUBCOMMITTEES.

(a) Each bill, resolution, investigation, or other matter which relates to a subject listed under the jurisdiction of any subcommittee named in Rule XV referred to or initiated by the full committee shall be referred by the Chairman to all subcommittees of appropriate jurisdiction within two weeks, unless, by majority vote of the majority members of the full committee, consideration is to be by the full committee.

(b) Referral to a subcommittee shall not be made until three days shall have elapsed after written notification of such proposed referral to all subcommittee chairman, at which time such proposed referral at the next regularly scheduled meeting of the committee, or at a special meeting of the committee called for that purpose at which time referral shall be made by the majority members of the committee. All bills shall be referred under this rule to the subcommittee of proper jurisdiction without regard to whether the author is or is not a member of the subcommittee. A bill, resolution, or other matter referred to a subcommittee in accordance with this rule may be recalled therefrom at any time by a vote of the majority members of the committee for the committee's direct consideration or for reference to another subcommittee.

(c) In carrying out Rule XVII with respect to any matter, the Chairman may refer the matter simultaneously to two or more subcommittees, consistent with Rule XV, for concurrent consideration or for consideration in sequence (subject to appropriate time limitations in the case of any subcommittee after the first), or divide the matter into two or more parts (reflecting different subjects and jurisdictions) and refer each such part to a different subcommittee or refer the matter to a special ad hoc subcommittee appointed by the Chairman (from the members of the subcommittee having legislative jurisdiction) for the specific purpose of considering that matter and reporting to the full committee thereon, or make such other provisions as may be considered appropriate.

RULE NO. XVIII.—SIZE AND PARTY RATIOS ON SUBCOMMITTEES AND CONFERENCE COMMITTEES.

(a) To the extent that the number of subcommittees and their party ratios permit, the size of all subcommittee shall be established so that the majority party members of the committee have an equal number of subcommittee assignments; Provided, however, that a member may waive his or her right to an equal number of subcommittee assignments on the committee; and provided further, that the majority party members may limit the number of subcommittee assignments of the Chairman and the subcommittee chairman in order to equalize committee workloads.

(b) On each subcommittee there shall be a ratio of majority party members to minority party members which shall be no less favorable to the majority party than the ratio for the full committee. In calculating the ratio of majority party members to minority party members, there shall be included all ex officio voting members of the subcommittees.

(c) Following shall be the size and majority/minority ratios for subcommittees:

(1) Subcommittee on Aviation: (35 members) (21 majority; 14 minority);

(2) Subcommittee on Economic Development: (20 members) (12 majority; 8 minority);

(3) Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight: (25 members) (15 majority; 10 minority);

(4) Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds: (13 members) (8 majority; 5 minority);

(5) Subcommittee on Surface Transportation: (38 members) (23 majority; 15 minority).

(6) Subcommittee on Water Resources: (35 members) (21 majority; 14 minority).

(d) The full committee Chairman shall recommend to the Speaker as conferees the names of those members (1) selected by the majority party members of the committee in a manner determined by them, and (2) selected by the minority. Provided, however, that recommendations of conferees to the Speaker shall provide a ratio of majority party members to minority party members which shall be no less favorable to the majority party than the ratio for the full committee.

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have ☐ terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."

STATEMENT OF VERIFICATION

[Omitted in printing]

PAGE 1

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§ 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.
